PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 86th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1960

The Senate met at 10:30 o'clock a.m., and was called to order by Senator MIKE MANSFIELD, of Montana.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou searcher of hearts, may those here commissioned by this free Nation to find the truth about this ailing world not evade the truth about themselves.

We confess that with all our surveying of national and world problems we dread to know our own hearts with their strange deceptions. As for this moment, we look away from our mundane tasks to Thee, Thou Judge of all men. Strip us of our illusions—create in us clean hearts, O God, and renew a right spirit within us.

May we lengthen our brief working day by intensity of living, filling swift hours with mighty deeds. Let us hasten to speak that which is within us. If there is any kindness we can show may we not neglect or defer it, seeing that we pass this way but once. If there is any word we can speak, as we strike a blow for righteousness and freedom, unfetter our lips.

So may our imperfect service express something of Thee before life's little day ebbs out and the night comes down and our work here is done.

In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

DESIGNATION OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., July 1, 1960.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD, a Senator from the State of Montana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

CARL HAYDEN,
President pro tempore.

Mr. MANSFIELD thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 30, 1960, was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

LIMITATION OF DEBATE DURING MORNING HOUR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, under the rule, there will be the usual morning hour. I ask unanimous consent that statements in connection therewith be limited to 3 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXEMPTION FROM INCOME TAX FOR SUPPLEMENTAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT TRUSTS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. KERR, Mr. FREAR, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, and Mr. CARLSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUGAR ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, yesterday by record vote of 390 yeas to no nays the House passed H.R. 12311 to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948 as amended. I ask unanimous consent for permission to proceed to the consideration of that legislation when and after it is received from the House.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT ON ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE PRIME CONTRACT AWARDS TO SMALL AND OTHER BUSINESS FIRMS

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics), transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on Army, Navy, and Air Force prime contract awards to small and other business firms, completed during the month of April 1960 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AUDIT REPORT ON HUDSON-CHAMPLAIN CELEBRATION COMMISSION

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, an audit report on the Hudson-Champlain Celebration Commission, May 1960 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Government Operations.

REPORT ON EXAMINATION OF FOREIGN SERVICE INSTITUTE

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the examination of the Foreign Service Institute, Department of State, fiscal years 1957–59 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Government Operations.

REPORT ON MANN CREEK PROJECT, IDAHO

A letter from the Under Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the Mann Creek project, Idaho (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

ADJUSTMENT OF IMMIGRATION STATUS OF CERTAIN ALIENS

FACTORY INSPECTION AND DRUG AMENDMENTS OF 1960

A letter from the Secretary, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to protect the public health by amending the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act so as to clarify and strengthen existing inspection authority thereunder; require manufacturers of new drugs to keep records of, and make reports on, clinical experience and other relevant data bearing on the permissibility of such drugs; require that drugs be prepared or packed under adequate controls to insure proper identity, strength, purity, and quality, and otherwise insure their compliance with the act; and extend to all antibiotics the certification provisions of the act now limited to certain antibiotics (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore:

Resolutions adopted by the American Unitarian Association, at Boston, Mass., on May 24, 1960, relating to civil rights, and so forth; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESOLUTION OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SALINA, KANS.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, the Bar Association of Northwestern Kansas, at its annual meeting this year, adopted resolutions urging the creation and establishment of Federal court facilities for the U.S. District Court for Kansas at Salina, Kans.

At the present time there are more than one-quarter of a million citizens who are not served by any U.S. district court facility nearer than Topeka, the capital of the State, and Wichita in the southern part of the State.

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Salina, at its regular meeting on June 22, urged that plans be prepared and construction started for the establishment of facilities for the holding of court.

I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there are presently residing in the northwest quarter of Kansas more than 250,000 citizens who are not served by any U.S. district court facility nearer than Topeka, Kans., and Wichita, Kans.; and

Whereas Salina, Kans., is now and for many years has been a statutory place for the U.S. District Court for Kansas to sit and hold court; and

Whereas Salina is the most rapidly growing city in the State of Kansas of comparable size or larger and is now the fourth largest city in Kansas; and

Whereas notwithstanding the aforesaid facts, Salina has remained without any court facilities for the U.S. district court to use at Salina; and

Whereas the Bar Association of Northwestern Kansas, at its annual meeting in 1958 and, again, at its annual meeting in 1960, adopted resolutions immediately to urge the creation and establishment of Federal court facilities for the U.S. District Court for Kansas at Salina and stating said bar association's wholehearted support of such project; and

Whereas the lack of such court facilities at Salina, Kans., subjects the people of the northwest quarter of the State of Kansas to undue, unfair, and burdensome expense in the handling of their business in the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas; and

Whereas the need for such court facilities at Salina, Kans., is continuously growing more acute; and

Whereas the Senate Judiciary Committee has recommended the necessary appropriation for a third judge for the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Salina, in regular meeting assembled this 22d day of June 1960;

1. This board urges each of the U.S. Senators, U.S. Congressmen for the State of Kansas, and the judges of the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas immediately and forthwith to do all in their power to cause appropriatons to be made, plans to be prepared, and construction to be accomplished for the establishment of facilities for the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas at Salina, Kans., and the implementation of provisions for holding regular terms and sessions of said court at Salina, Kans.

2. Each member of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Salina, Kans., is hereby urged to lend his full support and assistance to said Senators, Representatives, and judges to accomplish the matters set forth in paragraph 1 hereof.

3. Each citizen of Salina, Kans., and of the northwest quarter of Kansas is hereby urged to give his full support to said Senators, Representatives, and judges to accomplish the matters set forth in paragraph 1 hereof; and it is hereby further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution shall be forthwith transmitted to each of said U.S. Senators, Representatives, and judges, and to each of the civic organizations of the city of Salina and to each of the chambers of commerce of said geographical area of Kansas.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE CITY OF SALINA,
By C. O. SCOTT, President.
J. M. CRANOR, Secretary.

COMPETITIVE BIDDING IN GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENT

Mr. PROXMIRE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 348) relative to the awarding of Government contracts for supplies or services, which was referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

(See the above resolution printed in full when submitted by Mr. PROXMIRE, which appears under a separate heading.)

USE OF CERTAIN EVIDENCE IN POSSESSION OF THE SENATE IN THE CASE OF STATE OF INDIANA AGAINST TOMMY MORGANO

Mr. McCLELLAN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 349) authorizing the use of certain evidence in the possession of the Senate Permanent Subcommitte of the Committe on Government Operations in connection with the case of the State of Indiana against Tommy Morgano, which was considered and agreed to.

(See the above resolution printed in full when reported by Mr. MCCLELLAN, which appears under a separate heading.)

FEDERAL CODE OF ADMINISTRATIVE PRACTICE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, earlier this session I introduced a bill prescribing a Federal Code of Administrative Practice to govern administrative proceedings in the departments and agencies of the United States, and I invited comments for improving the bill. Since that time a number of excellent suggestions have been received and they have been incorporated along with the basic text of S. 2849 in a new bill which I am introducing, on behalf of Senators WILEY and HRUSKA, for appropriate reference at this time.

The basic changes which have been made strengthen the independence of the various departments and agencies in the conduct of their proceedings. The bill proposes that the terms of agency members be lengthened to 15 years and that they be then ineligible for reappointment. It also provides that any rules or policies which they properly issue shall be binding on the findings made by a hearing commissioner and that the agency may review his conclusions of law.

On the other hand the bill provides that, where a matter is not heard by the agency but referred to a hearing commissioner, the findings of fact by the commissioner shall be final except to the extent that they are not supported by substantial evidence or are contrary to duly promulgated rules or policies.

The same standard of review applies where one department or agency reviews the decision of another agency. In that case as well the findings of fact of the subordinate agency are subject only to a limited review while the conclusions of law are subject to complete review. The desire has been to reemphasize the authority which an agency has for independent judgment and yet to clearly place on it the responsibility for the decisions which it reaches.

A provision has also been added to provide for more adequate public information on the decisions issued by an agency and for their publication if it appears desirable.

The bill also provides for a commission to annually review this code of practice and to recommend to Congress and to the President changes in it including changes in the proceedings which are excepted from it.

I feel that with the study which S. 2849 has received and with the very helpful suggestions which have been submitted with respect to it, this new bill will provide a much improved system of handling administrative matters. I am introducing it at this time even though it is late in the session in order that it will be available for consideration and comment between now and the time that the next Congress begins.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3795) to prescribe a Federal Code of Administrative Practice to govern administrative proceeding of departments and agencies of the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. DIRKSEN (for himself, Mr. WILEY, and Mr. HRUSKA), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK ACT

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, for the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference, by request, a bill to authorize Federal mutual savings banks.

Mutual savings banks have rendered an excellent service wherever they have operated in helping to make home-mortgage money available. The industry believes that a system of federally chartered mutual savings banks will enable it to do an even better job.

Leaders in the industry have asked us to introduce such a measure, so that a study and discussion of its merits can be held. While we have an open mind regarding the proposal, our introduction of it does not imply our complete approval of its provisions.

In order to carry out more effectively its responsibilities to the Nation for the promotion of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power, the Congress must facilitate and encourage an increased flow of real savings to finance housing and other capital formation on a sustaining, noninflationary basis. Furthermore, these increased savings, which are necessary to the security and welfare of the individual, as well as to those of the Nation, should be provided to the maximum extent possible within the private institutional framework of our competitive economy. Attainment of the objective of increased capital formation through thrift can be advanced by mutual savings banks.

The new banks which the bill would authorize would be privately managed, federally supervised and insured institutions, organized to supplement the efforts of State-chartered mutual savings banks. Like their State counterparts, these banks would specialize in the encouragement of thrift, and would channel savings for investment in private home financing, Government securities, redevelopment, and other capital formation. The bill is being introduced at the end of this session, so that between now and the next session, interested groups and the public will have an opportunity to make a careful study of the proposal.

Banking in the United States has, in a sense, emulated our Federal system of Government, by evolving along two separate lines—State and national. This dual banking system has, as much as any other single factor, contributed to the vitality of our financial institutions. We have State commercial banks and State national banks. We have Federal and State savings and loan associations. The dual chartering system extends to credit unions, as well. Mutual savings banks alone exist as State institutions exclusively, and are chartered in only 17 States.

Mutual savings banks have encouraged thrift in States where these banks now exist. All the 17 mutual savings bank States are included in the 25 States with the highest per capita holdings of thrift accounts. Since mutual savings banks exist in only 17 States, some general comments in explanation of mutual savings banking would be helpful in considering this bill.

Mutual savings banks are organized without stockholders. The effect is that all earnings, after provision for adequate reserves, are distributed to depositors as interest on their deposits.

Traditionally, mutual banks have not accepted checking accounts and have not made commercial unsecured loans. This sole function is to encourage thrift and to stimulate the flow of savings into productive investments.

Management is by boards of trustees. Members of these boards are generally prohibited by law and the trustee tradition from commercial dealings with their banks. The organizers of a bank usually constitute the first board, which thereafter elects new members as vacancies occur. The board establishes bank policies, elects officers, determines interest rates, and supervises investments.

First organized in the United States in 1816, mutual savings banks are the Nation's oldest type of thrift institution. They were formed originally by philanthropic, public-spirited men who saw a need to provide safe depositaries for the savings of people of moderate means whom the larger banks were not interested in serving.

The mutual savings bank industry has an outstanding record of safety to depositors. It has survived wars, depressions, bank panics, and the "booms and busts" of nearly a century and one-half.

Although operating in only 17 States, these banks today serve over 22 million accounts, and have more than $35 billion on deposit. Although they are authorized to make diversified investments, they hold $25 billion in mortgage loans. An estimated $5 billion of these loans is on properties in States other than the States where mutual savings banks are located. For instance, there are no mutual savings banks in California, Michigan, or Georgia; but mutual savings banks hold well over $1 billion in loans to California homeowners, about $300 million to Michigan homeowners, and over $200 million to Georgia homeowners.

Mr. President, I request permission to have the bill and the brief explanation of it printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and explanation will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3796) to authorize Federal mutual savings banks, introduced by Mr. SPARKMAN (for himself and Mr. BUSH) (by request), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Mutual Savings Bank Act".

SEC. 2. DECLARATION OF POLICY.—The Congress declares that, to carry out more effectively its responsibility for promoting maximum employment, production, and purchasing power in the national economy, it must facilitate and encourage an increased flow of real savings to finance new housing and other capital formation on a sustainable noninflationary basis. The Congress further declares that the increased savings necessary to the security and welfare of the individual as well as to the Nation should be provided within the private institutional framework of our competitive economy and within the dual banking system. These objectives will be advanced by authorizing the establishment of privately managed federally supervised mutual savings banks. Consistent with these objectives, the Congress recognizes the continuing need for maintaining and strengthening the vitality of our State-chartered banking system under the supervision of the various State banking departments. Federal mutual savings banks, together with State-chartered mutual savings banks, will bring to individuals in all States the opportunity of having mutual banks of deposit available to them which are dedicated to encouraging the practice of thrift, thereby increasing the total flow of voluntary savings in the economy. The record of mutual savings bank over nearly a century and a half of providing safety, ready availability of deposits and reasonable returns on these deposits, indicates that new Federal mutual savings banks will stimulate additional savings in the areas in which they are located. The record further indicates that these institutions will devote the bulk of their accumulated savings to the sound, economical, financing of housing and home ownership. Moreover, additional funds will become available to support local business enterprise, urban redevelopment, and governmental capital outlays. The welfare of the public will be enhanced not only because economic growth will be fostered by capital formation but also because the earnings of Federal mutual savings banks, after expenses and provision for necessary reserves for safety of deposits, will be distributed entirely to depositors.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.—As used in this Act:

(a) The term "Commission" means the Federal Mutual Savings Bank Commission created under this Act.

(b) The term "conventional loan" means a loan secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on real property or a leasehold estate other than a loan guaranteed or insured by a Federal agency.

(c) The term "financial institution" means a thrift institution, a commercial bank, a trust company, or an insurance company.

(d) The term "mutual bank" means a Federal Mutual Savings Bank chartered under this Act.

(e) The term "State" means any State, territory, or possession of the United States and the District of Columbia.

(f) The term "thrift institution" means a State-chartered mutual savings bank, a cooperative bank, a homestead association, a mutual savings and loan association, a mutual building and loan association, or a mutual bank.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK COMMISSION.—(a) The Federal Mutual Savings Bank Commission hereby established as an independent agency shall consist of three members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate for initial terms of two, four, and six years, respectively, and thereafter for terms of six years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President, in such manner that the term of not more than one member will expire in any two-year period. Any vacancy may be filled in like manner for the unexpired term. From time to time, the President shall designate one of the members as Chairman, in whom shall be vested the power of managing the internal affairs of the Commission, and another member as vice chairman to perform the duties of the Chairman during the absence of the latter or his inability or failure to perform his duties. Upon the expiration of his term of office each member shall hold office until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified. No more than two members shall belong to the same political party at the time of their appointment.

(b) Each member shall devote his entire time to the business of the Commission and shall receive a salary equal to that received by equivalent grades or classifications under the Executive Pay Act of 1949. No member during his tenure of office shall hold office or serve in any capacity in any financial institution.

(c) The principal office of the Commission shall be in the District of Columbia. The Commission may, in its discretion, establish branch offices in any State.

SEC. 5. COMMISSION POWERS.—For the purposes of performing its functions under this Act, the Commission—

(1) may adopt, amend, and repeal rules and regulations governing the manner in which its business shall be conducted and may adopt, amend, and repeal rules and regulations deemed by it necessary or desirable to carry out the purposes of this Act;

(2) may appoint and fix the compensation of, without regard to the provisions of the civil service laws or any rule or regulation thereunder, such officers, attorneys and employees as may be necessary or desirable for the conduct of its business, may define their authority and duties, may delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Commission as it may determine, and require bonds of such of them as it may designate and may fix the penalties and pay the premiums on such bonds;

(3) shall be entitled to the use of the United States mails in the same manner and upon the same conditions as the Executive Departments of the United States Government;

(4) shall determine the need for and character of its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to provisions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations; and

(5) may take such other action as it may deem necessary or desirable in the conduct of its business.

SEC. 6. CHARTERING OF MUTUAL BANKS.—(a) Upon written application by five signatories from among not less than twenty-one individuals acting in the capacity of qualified corporators named in said application, the Commission may from time to time issue a charter for a mutual bank.

(b) Such a charter shall be issued whenever the Commission finds that a mutual bank will serve a useful purpose in the community in which it is proposed to be established, that there is reasonable expectation of its financial success, and that its operation will not unduly injure existing thrift institutions.

(c) Any mutual bank shall include the words "Federal", "Mutual", and "Savings" in its title.

(d) Any mutual bank, upon being chartered, may become a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank of the district in which it is located, or if convenience shall require and the Commission approve, may become a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank of an adjoining district. Mutual banks shall qualify for such membership in the manner provided in chapter 11 of title 12, U.S.C., with respect to other members.

SEC. 7. CORPORATORS.—(a) Each corporator of a mutual bank shall be an individual of financial responsibility and good character and shall never have been adjudged a bankrupt, and shall, within such time after his election, and in such form as the Commission may prescribe, file proof of his compliance with these requirements with the Commission. Without in any way limiting, by enactment of this subsection, the general regulatory power granted the Commission by this or any other Act, the Commission is hereby expressly authorized to prescribe standards of conduct for corporators, provided that any such standards shall be no more, and may be less, restrictive than those set forth for trustees in section 8(e)(1) of this Act.

(b) No person shall be a corporator of a mutual bank who is not a resident of the State in which the principal office of the mutual bank is located, except that one less than half of the whole board of corporators may be residents of other States.

(c) At their organizational meeting, the corporators shall adopt rules governing the conduct of their business and may amend them from time to time. Such rules shall set forth the number of corporators and shall prescribe that any number not less than one-quarter of those at the time in office shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of doing business. At such organization meeting, or any adjournment thereof, the corporators shall divide the total number of corporators into three classes of equal size, one class to serve for a term of four years, one class to serve for a term of seven years, and one class to serve for a term of ten years, so that at each election of corporators following the first meeting an equal number of corporators shall be elected. The requirements of this section shall be satisfied if the number of corporators in any class does not exceed by more than one the number of corporators in any other class. Thereafter, each corporator shall be elected for a term of ten years, and until his successor is elected and shall have qualified. Successor and additional corporators shall be elected, subject to the requirements of this section, by a majority vote of the corporators, including those whose terms are expiring, present at a duly constituted meeting. Any corporator may be removed from office for cause upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the whole number of corporators.

SEC. 8. TRUSTEES.—(a) The board of trustees of a mutual bank shall be elected by and from the corporators and shall consist of not less than seven nor more than twenty-five. No person shall be a trustee of a mutual bank who is not a resident of the State in which the principal office of the mutual bank is located, except that one less than one-half of the whole board of trustees may be residents of other States. The corporators shall, by majority vote of those present at their organization meeting, elect a board of trustees, in three classes in the following manner: one-third for a term of one year; one-third for a term of two years; and one-third for a term of three years. Thereafter trustees shall be elected to serve for a term of three years. The requirements of this section shall be satisfied if the number of trustees in any one class does not exceed by more than one the number of trustees in any other class. The office of any trustee shall become vacant if he shall cease for any reason to hold office as a corporator.

(b) The management and control of the affairs of a mutual bank shall be vested in the trustees. The trustees may adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws governing the affairs of the mutual bank.

(c) No person acting as trustee of a mutual bank shall hold office as trustee, director, or officer of another thrift institution.

(d) The office of a trustee shall become vacant whenever he shall have failed to attend regular meetings of the trustees for a period of six months, unless excused during such period by a resolution duly adopted by the trustees.

(e)(1) It shall be unlawful for any trustee—

(A) to receive remuneration as trustee except reasonable fees for attendance at meetings of trustees or for service as a member of a committee of trustees;

(B) to borrow funds other than pursuant to section 13(a)(9)(B) or in any manner become an obligor for funds borrowed from the mutual bank for which he is trustee;

(C) to make a profit, directly or indirectly, from any property sold to or services performed for the mutual bank or in connection with any loan made by the mutual bank for which he is a trustee.

Nothing contained in this subsection (e) shall be deemed to prohibit or in any way limit any right of a trustee who is also an officer of or attorney for the mutual bank from receiving compensation for services as an officer or attorney.

(2) upon application by a mutual bank, exceptions may be granted to any prohibition contained in subsection (e) following a determination by the Commission that the exception sought is equitable and in the best interests of the depositors of the mutual bank.

(3) The Commission may from time to time grant, by regulation, exceptions of general application to the prohibitions contained in subsection (e).

(f) No mutual bank shall deposit any of its funds except with a depositary approved by vote of a majority of all trustees of the mutual bank, exclusive of any trustee who is an officer, partner, director, or trustee of the depositary so designated.

SEC. 9. COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATION.—No mutual bank may commence operations except upon approval by the Commission, which shall not be granted prior to qualification by such mutual bank as an insured bank under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Any mutual bank may so qualify in the same general manner as is provided for a State nonmember bank under said Act. No mutual bank shall continue operations if it shall at any time cease to be so qualified.

No mutual bank may commence operations until there shall have been advanced in cash to the credit of such mutual bank, as an expense fund, such sums as the Commission may require. Any such sums so advanced shall be evidenced by transferable deferred payment certificates. Outstanding certificates may have such terms and may be repaid pro rata in such installments, and shall be entitled to receive interest at such rate, as may be approved by the Commission.

SEC. 10. RESERVE FUND.—(a) Prior to authorizing the issuance of a charter for a mutual bank, the Commission shall require that there be advanced in cash to the credit of such mutual bank not less than $50,000, which shall constitute the initial reserve fund. All sums so advanced as the initial reserve fund shall be evidenced by transferable deferred payment certificates. Outstanding certificates may have such terms and may be repaid pro rata in such installments, and shall be entitled to receive interest at such rate, as may be approved by the Commission.

(b) As soon as practicable following the close of each of its first ten fiscal years, each mutual bank shall credit to the reserve fund an amount not less than 10 per centum of its net earnings before interest for such preceding fiscal year and at the close of each fiscal year following the first ten fiscal years shall credit to the reserve fund such proportion of its net earnings for such preceding fiscal year, not exceeding 10 per centum, as the Commission may by regulation prescribe: Provided, That credits to the reserve fund shall be required only when the reserve fund shall not equal 12 per centum of deposit liabilities. A mutual bank may credit such further amounts to the reserve fund as it may determine.

(c) The reserve fund of an operating mutual bank shall be available only for the purpose of meeting losses.

SEC. 11. BORROWING.—A mutual bank may borrow funds subject to such regulations as the Commission may prescribe.

SEC. 12. DEPOSITS.—(a) A mutual bank may accept any savings deposit.

(b) Each mutual bank may (1) reject any sums offered for deposit; (2) repay any deposit at any time; and (3) classify and differentiate among deposits on such bases as it may determine.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, a mutual bank may pay interest on deposits from net earnings and undivided profits at such rates and at such intervals as shall be approved by its trustees.

(d) A mutual bank may at any time by resolution of its board of trustees require that up to 90 days' advance notice be given to it by each depositor before the withdrawal of any deposit or portion thereof; and whenever the board of trustees shall adopt such resolution, no deposit need be paid until the expiration of the notice period applicable thereto in accordance with such resolution. A mutual bank shall notify the Commission in writing on the day of adoption of such resolution. Notwithstanding adoption of such resolution, a mutual bank may, in its discretion, permit withdrawal of all or any part of all deposits prior to the expiration of the notice period prescribed by such resolution. Any such resolution may be rescinded at any time.

SEC. 13. INVESTMENTS.—(a) A mutual bank may invest in the following:

(1) obligations of the United States and those for which the faith of the United States is pledged to provide for the payment of the interest and principal and obligations of any agency of the United States;

(2) obligations of any State of the United States and those for which the faith of any State of the United States is pledged to provide for the payment of the interest and principal;

(3) obligations issued by a city, village, town, or county in the United States or by a department, agency, district, authority, commission or other public body of the United States, or of any one or more States, but in so doing shall exercise the same degree of care and prudence that persons prompted by self-interest generally exercise in their own affairs;

(4) any property improvement note issued pursuant to the provisions of Title I of the National Housing Act;

(5) obligations of the Dominion of Canada or Provinces of the Dominion of Canada payable in United States funds;

(6) bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness which are secured by properly registered and recorded first mortgages or deeds of trust upon real property, including leasehold estates, provided the security for the loan is a first lien upon said real property or leasehold estate, and subject to the following:

(A) no investment in mortgages executed by any one mortgagor shall in the aggregate exceed 2 per centum of the assets of the mutual bank at the time the investment is made or $25,000, whichever is greater;

(B) no investment in any one mortgage shall exceed 2 percent of the assets of the mutual bank at the time the investment is made, or $25,000, whichever is greater, or more than 80 percent of the appraised value of a 1- to 4-family residence securing a conventional loan or more than 90 percent of the appraised value of such a residence constructed within not more than 10 years before the making of the loan, or more than 75 per centum of the appraised value of any other real property securing a conventional loan;

(C) no investment shall be made in a conventional loan secured by a mortgage on a 1- to 4-family residence unless the mortgaged property is located either within the State in which the mutual bank has its principal office or within a radius of 100 miles of its principal office and unless the mortgage has a maturity of not longer than thirty years from the date the loan is made:

(D) no investment shall be made in a conventional loan if the aggregate unpaid principal of all conventional loans exceeds 80 per centum of assets;

(E) a mutual bank may (i) participate with one or more financial institutions, trusts or pension funds in any bond or note or other evidence of indebtedness secured by a mortgage or deed of trust which such mutual bank is authorized to invest in on its own account, provided that the participating interest of such mutual bank is not subordinated or inferior to any other participating interests; and (ii) participate in the same securities with other than financial institutions, trusts or pension funds provided that the participating interest of such mutual bank is superior to the participating interests of such other participants.

(F) no investment shall be made in a mortgage upon a leasehold unless (i) the principal amount of the mortgage loan is not in excess of 70 per centum of the appraised value of the leasehold, and (ii) provision is made for complete amortization of the loan prior to the expiration of 80 per centum of the remainder of the term by periodic payments as the Commission may prescribe.

(G) nothing contained in this section 13 (a) (6) shall be deemed to prevent investment by a mutual bank in any bond, note or other evidence of indebtedness guaranteed or insured by a Federal agency, or for which a commitment to guarantee or insure has been issued by a Federal agency.

(7) bankers' acceptances eligible for purchase by Federal Reserve Banks.

(8) corporate securities, but in so doing shall exercise the same degree of care and prudence that persons prompted by self-interest generally exercise in their own affairs, and subject to the following further conditions:

(A) no mutual bank shall invest in any corporate obligation, other than pursuant to subparagraph (9), that (i) will mature by its terms within one year from the date of its issuance, or (ii) if issued or made in series, or repayable in installments, will have an average maturity as of the date of issuance of less than one year;

(B) no mutual bank shall invest in stocks an amount greater than 5 per centum of its assets or 100 per centum of its reserve fund and undivided profits, whichever is the greater.

(9) promissory notes, subject to the following restrictions:

(A) any promissory note payable to the order of the mutual bank which is:

(i) secured by one or more mortgages in which a mutual bank may invest, if the amount so invested in any such note shall not exceed 90 per centum of the principal sum secured by such mortgage or mortgages. The assignment of every mortgage taken as security for any such note shall be recorded or registered in the office of the proper recording officer of the county in which the real property described in such mortgage is located, unless such mortgage or mortgages have been so assigned by a mutual bank;

(ii) secured by any of the stocks and bonds in which a mutual bank may invest; or

(iii) secured by a life insurance policy, to the extent of such policy's cash surrender value;

(B) any promissory note payable to the order of the mutual bank which is secured by the assignment of a deposit or share account in any thrift institution, if the amount of the investment in any such note is not in excess of the amount of such deposit or share account.

(b) The Commission may grant mutual banks authority to make investments, subject to such limitations as it may impose, without regard to the restrictions contained in the foregoing subsection (a), but in no event shall the investment powers of mutual banks be subjected to restrictions more stringent than those therein contained.

SEC. 14. BRANCHES.—(a) A mutual bank may, with the approval of the Commission, establish and operate one or more branches in the State in which its principal office is located, but only if and to the same extent that any financial institution accepting funds from savers on deposit or share accounts and chartered by such State is authorized to establish and operate branches.

(b) Before approving establishment and operation of a branch office by a mutual bank, the Commission shall make with respect thereto the findings required prior to the granting of a charter to a mutual bank.

(c) Notwithstanding any provision of this Act, a mutual bank resulting from conversion, consolidation or merger may retain and operate any one or more offices in operation on the date of such conversion, consolidation or merger, and, in addition, may retain any and all unexercised branch rights or privileges enjoyed prior to such date, but only if such office is situated, or such branch right or privilege was exercisable, within the State in which the principal office is located.

SEC. 15. CONVERSION.—(a) With the approval of the Commission, any thrift institution other than a mutual bank may convert itself into a mutual bank upon the affirmative vote of not less than a majority of the votes cast by those entitled to vote upon the affairs of such thrift institution at a meeting duly called and held for that purpose, and shall thereupon possess the powers of, and be subject to, the duties imposed upon mutual banks under the provisions of this Act, provided that any such conversion shall not be in contravention of the laws of the State under which the converting thrift institution is organized.

(b) The minimum requirements of twenty-one corporators and seven trustees prescribed by section 6(a) and section 8(a) shall not apply in the case of a thrift institution making application to convert to a mutual bank.

(c) Before approving any such conversion, the Commission shall find that the thrift institution seeking conversion has the ability to discharge the duties and conform to the restrictions upon mutual banks and has previously so conformed to the extent required by the Commission. However, such institution may retain and service all accounts lawfully held by it on the date of its conversion.

(d) Any mutual bank upon the affirmative vote of a majority of its corporators may convert itself into any type of thrift institution organized pursuant to Federal law or the laws of the State in which its principal office is located, but any such conversion of a mutual bank shall be subject to requisite approval of any regulatory authority having jurisdiction over the creation of the thrift institution into which the mutual bank seeks to convert, and no such conversion of a mutual bank shall take place unless under the law of the State in which such mutual bank is located the type of thrift institution into which the mutual bank is seeking to convert may, without approval by any State authority, convert into a mutual bank under limitations or conditions no more restrictive than those contained in this section with respect to the conversion of a mutual bank into such a thrift institution.

SEC. 16. MERGER AND CONSOLIDATION.—(a) Any two or more mutual banks having their principal offices in the same State or any one or more mutual banks and one or more State-chartered mutual savings banks having their principal offices in the same State, may, with the approval of the Commission where the surviving or consolidated institution is a mutual bank or with the approval of the appropriate State authority where the surviving or consolidated institution is a State-chartered mutual savings bank, and upon the affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the corporators of each such mutual bank, and where applicable, upon compliance with the procedure prescribed by the State, enter into an agreement of merger or consolidation. Thereafter, the merger or consolidation shall be effective in accordance with the terms of such agreement.

No mutual bank may participate in a merger or consolidation when the surviving or consolidated institution is to be a State-chartered mutual bank unless under the law of the State in which the mutual bank is located, State-chartered mutual savings banks may participate, without approval by any State authority, and under limitations or conditions no more restrictive than those contained in this section, in a merger or consolidation in which the surviving or consolidated institution is to be a mutual bank.

(b) Before approving a merger or consolidation the Commission shall give consideration to the purposes of this Act and the prospects of the surviving or consolidated mutual bank for financial success and its ability to discharge the duties and conform to the restrictions imposed upon a mutual bank.

(c) Upon such a consolidation or merger, the corporate existence of each of the constituent institutions shall be merged into and continued in the surviving or consolidated institution, which shall be deemed to be the same corporation as each of the constituent institutions.

(d) All rights, franchises and property interests of the merged or consolidating mutual bank or banks or State-chartered mutual savings bank or banks shall be transferred to and vested in the surviving or consolidated institution by virtue of the merger or consolidation without the requirement under this Act of any deed or other instrument of transfer; and the surviving or consolidated institution shall be entitled to exercise all rights and privileges of the merged or consolidating mutual bank or banks or State-chartered mutual savings bank or banks in accordance with the terms of the merger or consolidation agreement.

(e) The surviving or consolidated institution shall be responsible for all debts and obligations of the merged or consolidating mutual bank or banks or State-chartered mutual savings bank or banks, in accordance with the terms of the merger or consolidation agreement.

SEC. 17. GENERAL POWERS.—(a) For the purpose of carrying out its functions under this Act, a mutual bank

(1) shall have indefinite succession;

(2) may adopt and use a seal;

(3) may sue and be sued;

(4) may adopt, amend, and repeal rules and regulations governing the manner in which its business may be conducted and the powers vested in it may be exercised;

(5) may make and carry out such contracts and agreements, provide such benefits to its personnel and take such other action, as it may deem necessary or desirable in the conduct of its business;

(6) may service mortgages for others;

(7) may appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, and employees as may be desirable for the conduct of its business, define their authority and duties, require bonds of such of them as the trustees may designate and fix the penalties and pay the premiums on such bonds;

(8) may acquire by purchase or lease such real property or interest therein as the trustees may deem necessary or desirable for the conduct of its business, and sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such real property or interests therein;

(9) notwithstanding any provision of this or any other act or regulation, a mutual bank shall have authority to exercise those powers as defined by the Commission which are generally possessed now or hereafter by State-chartered mutual savings banks; and

(10) notwithstanding any provision of this or any other act or regulation, a mutual bank shall have authority to exercise all the powers possessed now or hereafter by any mutual savings bank chartered by the State in which the mutual bank is located.

(b) The foregoing enumeration of powers shall not be deemed to exclude other incidental powers appropriate for the achievement of the objects and purposes of a mutual bank under the provisions of this Act; and a mutual bank may provide for the exercise of such other powers in its by-laws, rules, and regulations, with the approval of the Commission.

SEC. 18. ANNUAL REPORT.—The Commission shall submit at the beginning of each regular session to the President for transmission to the Congress an annual report of its operation under this Act.

SEC. 19. EXAMINATION.—The Commission shall conduct an examination at least once a year into the affairs and management of each mutual bank for the purpose of determining whether such bank is being operated in conformity with the provisions of this Act, any rules and regulations promulgated hereunder, and sound banking practice: Provided, however, That the Commission may accept, for any year, in lieu of such examination of any mutual bank, an examination of the mutual bank in such year by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

SEC. 20. TAXATION.—No State, territorial, county, municipal, or local taxing authority shall impose any tax on such mutual banks or their franchise, deposits, assets, reserve funds, loans, or income greater than that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home financing institutions.

SEC. 21. AUTHORITY TO APPOINT CONSERVATORS AND RECEIVERS.—(a) The Commission may, in its discretion, forthwith take possession of the business and property of any mutual bank and appoint a conservator or receiver for such mutual bank whenever it shall appear that such mutual bank:

(1) has violated any provision of this Act;

(2) is conducting its business in an unauthorized, unsound or unsafe manner;

(3) is in an unsound or unsafe condition to transact its business;

(4) has neglected or refused upon proper demand to comply with the terms of any order, rule or regulation of the Commission; or

(5) has refused to submit its records and affairs for inspection by the Commission or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(b) The Commission shall appoint only the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as receiver for any mutual bank.

(c) At any time within ten days after the Commission has taken possession of the property and business of any mutual bank, any officer of such mutual bank may apply to the United States District Court for the district in which the mutual bank has its principal office for an order requiring the Commission to show cause why it should not be enjoined from continuing such possession and, if a conservator or receiver has been appointed, why such appointment should not be vacated, and the District Court is hereby granted jurisdiction to hear such cause, to grant such injunction, to direct the Commission to surrender such possession, to vacate such appointments, and to take such other action as is necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section. Any such proceeding in the District Court shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited.

SEC. 22. SEPARABILITY.—If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to any other person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 23. RIGHT TO AMEND.—The right to alter, amend or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved.

The explanation presented by Mr. SPARKMAN is as follows:

THE FEDERAL MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK ACT—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

The following is a presentation in outline form of the more basic provisions of the Federal Mutual Savings Bank Act.

SECTION 1—TITLE

The bill is entitled the "Federal Mutual Savings Bank Act."

SECTION 2—DECLARATION OF POLICY

The legislative purpose of establishing a system of Federal mutual savings banks is to promote thrift and utilize the accumulation of thrift deposits for home financing and other investments.

SECTION 3—DEFINITIONS

Certain terms, such as "financial institution" and "thrift institution," which have a special significance in the act, are defined in this section. "Financial institution" includes a "thrift institution" and also commercial banks, trust companies and insurance companies. "Thrift institution" includes State-chartered mutual savings banks, cooperative banks, homestead associations, and mutual savings (building) and loan associations, and Federal mutual banks.

SECTION 4—THE FEDERAL MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK COMMISSION

This new independent Government agency would consist of 3 members appointed by the President for staggered terms of 6 years. The Commission would supervise the chartering of Federal mutual savings banks and their subsequent operation. Each member would be required to devote his entire time to the business of the Commission and would be prohibited during his term of office from serving in any capacity in any financial institution. No more than 2 members of the Commission could belong to the same political party at the time of appointment.

SECTION 5—COMMISSION POWERS

The Commission would be empowered by this section to adopt and amend rules and regulations for its own operation and for the operations of member banks of the system. This section contains a general grant of power and is further supplemented throughout the bill by various specific powers.

SECTION 6—CHARTERING OF MUTUAL BANKS

Application for a Federal mutual savings bank charter would be required to be subscribed to by 5 signatories from a minimum of 21 corporators. This minimum would not apply in the case of the conversion of a preexisting thrift institution. The Commission would be empowered to grant a charter after finding that a Federal mutual savings bank would serve a useful purpose in the community, that there was reasonable expectation of its success, and that its operation would not unduly injure existing thrift institutions. All Federal mutual savings banks would be required to include the words "Federal," "mutual," and "savings" in their title. Federal mutual savings banks would be permitted but not required to become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

SECTION 7—CORPORATORS

The ultimate authority in a Federal mutual savings bank would be the board of corporators. Corporators would be divided into three classes of equal size and would be elected for staggered terms of 10 years. The Commission would be empowered to prescribe standards of conduct for corporators. The board would not be charged with the actual management of the bank; its principal function would be the election of the trustees.

SECTION 8—TRUSTEES

The board of trustees of a Federal mutual savings bank would be charged with the responsibility for policy management of the bank. Trustees would be elected from among the corporators for staggered terms of 3 years. No person acting as trustee of a Federal mutual savings bank would be allowed to hold office as a trustee, director or officer of another thrift institution. Trustees would be prohibited from receiving any remuneration as a trustee except fees for attendance at meetings or for serving as a member of a committee. Further, they would be prohibited from borrowing funds from the Federal mutual savings bank unless the loan were secured by the assignment of a deposit or share account in a thrift institution. Finally, these trustees would be prohibited from making any profit from any property sold to or services performed for the Federal mutual savings bank or in connection with any loan made by the Federal mutual savings bank. The Commission would be empowered, in equitable circumstances, to make exceptions from the restrictions on trustees.

SECTION 9—COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATION

No Federal mutual savings bank would be permitted to commence operations until it had qualified as an insured bank under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. No Federal mutual savings bank would be permitted to continue operations if it should at any time cease to be so qualified. Prior to commencement of operations an expense fund would be required to be advanced in cash to the credit of the Federal mutual savings bank. Contributions to this expense fund would be evidenced by deferred payment certificates which could be repaid in such installments and at such interest as the Commission approved. The expense fund would be available for the payment of operating expenses until such expenses could be paid out of the bank's earnings.

SECTION 10—RESERVE FUND

In addition to the expense fund which would be utilized for operating expenses of the Federal mutual savings bank, a reserve fund would be required to be advanced in cash to the credit of a Federal mutual savings bank and would be available for the sole purpose of meeting losses. The minimum amount of the initial reserve fund would be $50,000. The actual size of the reserve fund would depend on Commission standards and also on the requirements of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Each Federal mutual savings bank would be required to add to this reserve fund. Sums advanced to the initial reserve fund would be evidenced by deferred payment certificates and would be repayable in such installments and at such interest as the Commission provided.

SECTION 11—BORROWING

A Federal mutual savings bank would be empowered to borrow funds subject to Commission regulation.

SECTION 12—DEPOSITS

A Federal mutual savings bank could accept any savings deposit, could reject sums offered for deposit, could repay deposits at any time, and could classify and differentiate among deposits on such basis as it determined. Interest on deposits could be paid from net earnings and undivided profits. A Federal mutual savings bank would be empowered to require advance notice of withdrawal.

SECTION 13—INVESTMENTS

A Federal mutual savings bank would be empowered to invest in Government, State and local obligations, obligations of agencies of the United States and the States, Canadian obligations, title I notes, in conventional mortgages subject to certain restrictions such as loan-to-value limitations and total aggregate investment, insured mortgages, and secured promissory notes. Corporate securities investment would also be subject to certain restrictions, such as minimum maturity and total aggregate investment.

In addition to the investment powers specifically set forth, the Commission would be empowered, by regulation, to grant Federal mutual savings banks authority to make further investments, but the Commission would not be empowered to restrict investment powers to limits more stringent than those set forth in the bill. The types of investment specifically mentioned in the bill, therefore, represent a minimum grant of power.

SECTION 14—BRANCHES

With the approval of the Commission, a Federal mutual savings bank could establish one or more branches in the State of its principal office, but only to the same extent that any State-chartered financial institution accepting funds from savers was authorized to establish branches. Before approving any branch application the Commission would be required to make the same findings as provided for in the case of a charter application. Branches and offices operated as of conversion, merger, or consolidation could be continued in operation. Rights to branches or offices could also be retained.

SECTION 15—CONVERSION

Any thrift institution could convert itself into a Federal mutual savings bank provided that such conversion was in accord with the laws under which the converting thrift institution was organized and providing also that the Commission approved. Before approving any such conversion, the Commission would be required to find that the institution seeking conversion had the ability to discharge the duties and to conform to the restrictions upon Federal mutual savings banks and had previously so conformed to the extent required by the Commission. The institution would be empowered to retain and service all accounts lawfully held by it on the date of its conversion. Federal mutual savings banks would be empowered to convert into any type of thrift institution, but such conversion would be subject to approval of any regulatory authority having jurisdiction over the type of thrift institution into which the Federal mutual savings bank sought to convert. Federal mutual savings banks would not be permitted to convert unless the State laws applicable to the thrift institution into which the Federal mutual savings banks without approval by any State reciprocal conversions to Federal mutual savings bank sought to convert permitted authority. The approval of the Commission would not be required for the conversion of a Federal mutual savings bank into another type of thrift institution.

SECTION 16—MERGER AND CONSOLIDATION

Any two or more Federal mutual savings banks or any one or more Federal mutual savings banks and one or more State-chartered mutual savings banks would be permitted to merge or consolidate. The approval of the Commission would be required where the surviving or consolidated institution was to be a Federal mutual savings bank and the approval of the appropriate State authority would be required where the surviving or consolidated institution was to be a State-chartered mutual savings bank. However, no Federal mutual savings bank would be permitted to merge or consolidate when the surviving or consolidated institution was to be a State-chartered mutual unless under the law of the State in which the Federal mutual savings bank was located, State-chartered mutual savings banks could participate in mergers or consolidations without approval by State authority when the surviving or consolidated institution was to be a Federal mutual savings bank.

SECTION 17—GENERAL POWERS

Federal mutual savings banks would be granted certain operational powers and incidental powers appropriate to the achievement of the objects and purposes of a Federal mutual savings bank. Further, a Federal mutual savings bank would have the authority to exercise all the powers possessed now or hereafter by any State-chartered mutual savings bank chartered by the State in which the Federal mutual savings bank was located. A Federal mutual savings bank would also have the authority to exercise powers defined by the Commission as generally possessed now or hereafter by State-chartered mutual savings banks.

SECTION 18—ANNUAL REPORT

The Commission would be required to submit an annual report to the President for transmission to the Congress.

SECTION 19—EXAMINATION

The Commission would be required to conduct an annual examination of each Federal mutual savings bank provided that the Commission could accept for any year in lieu of such examination an examination by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

SECTION 20—TAXATION

No State, territorial, county, municipal, or local taxing authority would be permitted to impose any tax on Federal mutual savings banks greater than that imposed by such taxing authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home financing institutions.

SECTION 21—AUTHORITY TO APPOINT CONSERVATORS AND RECEIVERS

The Commission would be empowered to take possession of a Federal mutual savings bank and appoint a conservator or receiver whenever it appeared that such Federal mutual savings bank: (1) Had violated any provision of the act; (2) was conducting its business in an unauthorized, unsound, or unsafe manner; (3) was in an unsound or unsafe condition to transact its business; (4) had neglected or refused upon proper demand to comply with the terms of any order, rule, or regulation of the Commission; (5) had refused to submit its records and affairs for inspection by the Commission or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. If the Commission determined to appoint a receiver it could only appoint the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. In the event the Commission took possession of a Federal mutual savings bank, any officer of such Federal mutual savings bank would have 10 days to apply to the local U.S. district court for an order requiring the Commission to show cause why it should not be enjoined from continuing possession and if a conservator or receiver had been appointed, why such appointment should not be vacated. The district court would be granted jurisdiction to hear such cause and to grant appropriate relief.

SECTION 22—SEPARABILITY

If any provision of the act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance should be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to any other person or circumstance would not be affected thereby.

SECTION 23—RIGHT TO AMEND

The right to alter, amend, or repeal the act is expressly reserved.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I may add that in connection with the bill and the statement I have made on behalf of myself and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], I believe it would be well for us to look into the future and consider what will be some of the requirements in order to meet the home-mortgage demands of the country over the next decade and the coming years.

Within the last few days, I read a very interesting article, written by Mr. Arthur Upgren, a member of the staff of the Minneapolis Star, and formerly a member of the faculty of the School of Economics at the University of Alabama, and later at the University of Minnesota. He has written a very interesting article from the standpoint of an outstanding economist who is peering into the future. I think the article will impress upon those who read it carefully the need we shall have to be prepared to meet in the coming years.

Therefore, I believe every means by which we can encourage thrift, savings, and the use of those savings to help provide decent, safe, and sanitary housing for American families should be used. I ask unanimous consent that the article written by Mr. Upgren be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PAST TRENDS INDICATE CRISIS IN SEVENTIES—DECADE OF UNUSUAL FISCAL AFFLUENCY APPEARS IN STORE FOR UNITED STATES

(By Arthur Upgren)

How affluent will the sixties be? The best answer is that they will be affluent. They will be very affluent in fact, and our problem will be more how wisely to use the affluence than how to achieve it.

The American economy first produced $100 billion of total output of all goods and services in 1929. Then came the depression and we were 11 long years getting back again to that $100 billion level of gross national product (GNP).

But from 1940 forward our GNP increased $100 billion every 5 years into 1960. That pace will continue through 1970.

Thus the forward march of GNP brought the economy to a $200 billion level in 1945 and a $300 billion level in 1950. During that period, however, the price level advanced sharply, so the large gain was advanced by the inflation of prices.

From 1950 on, we continue the $100 billion gain every 5 years, so that the annual rate of GNP was $500 billion in the first quarter of 1960. And in these past 10 years the rate of advance in prices has not been one-fifth of the rate of price advance that took place from 1940 to 1948.

So the present rate of GNP gain is largely real gain in output without much puffery due to rising prices. In fact, in the past 2 years total output has increased $70 billion and of this only about $7 billion is due to the increase in prices.

And in the sixties this pace of a $100-billion gain in total output will continue, bringing us a $700 billion GNP in 1970. Actually, this is an extremely conservative forecast; President Eisenhower has suggested that we will reach a $750 billion level in 1970, and Prof. Walter W. Heler of the University of Minnesota estimates that we will have a total production reaching $1 trillion in 1978.

The effect of all this on family incomes and total spending will be remarkable. In 1947 family income was a little over $4,000. Average family income last year was $6,520.

In 1965 it will be about $7,500 and in 1970 about $8,500.

These rates of gain both in GNP and in average family incomes are attainable upon the basis of the present price level. That is, none of these gains requires any degree of inflation whatever.

The sharp rise in family incomes will spell remarkable gains in sales for many industries and businesses. An AFL–CIO source estimates that just a little less than $4,000 of income a year will provide the minimum American standard of living—subsistence items, a secondhand car, tobacco, gasoline, and very modest living quarters.

But from that income level upward, things begin to skyrocket, because all the excess of income over $4,000 can go into finer things—new cars, new homes, many durable goods, travel, lake cottages, etc.

The effects of our affluent sixties upon government will be clear. Every time GNP rises $100 billion the Federal Government, on the basis of existing tax rates, takes in almost $25 billion more in revenues. This increase we can devote to reducing the national debt a little, to increasing Government expenditures, to increase defense as it is needed, and perhaps a small share can also go for the tax reduction.

For municipalities the going will be harder. Their needed increase in capital expenditures in the decade will be about $100 billion. (This amount does not include highway outlays.) So they need many new revenue sources, because the Federal Government has preempted so many sources with its great taxing powers, developed to meet the need of two great wars.

But about 1970 we shall be fully ready for some trouble. On the basis of trends of the last 20 years, it can be predicted that we shall then run out of money.

On six occasions in the 60 years from 1873 to 1933 we ran out of money. This establishes the rule that if we won't do something about it, we always run out of money.

Now, of course, we could do something about it. And an important group is already at work on the problem. It is the commission on money and credit originally set up by the Committee for Economic Development (CED). No more important report for our welfare will be written in this decade. It will be out in a year or two.

We must develop, actually for the first time in our country's history, a really adequate banking mechanism, one that will not break down under the strain imposed by our growing economy. It is, after Russia and peace, our greatest national problem.

DESIGNATION OF RESERVOIR ON RED WILLOW CREEK, NEBR., AS THE HUGH BUTLER LAKE

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, this day is the sixth anniversary of the decease of the Honorable Hugh A. Butler, who served as a Member of this U.S. Senate for almost 14 years, and who was my immediate elected predecessor in this body.

It is to accord a tribute and honor to his memory that I introduce a bill which will name after him the lake which will be formed above the dam which will soon be built across the Red Willow Creek, a tributary of the Republican River, near McCook, Nebr.

Mr. President, on July Fourth, just a few days hence, near the city of McCook, Nebr., groundbreaking ceremonies for the Red Willow Dam and Reservoir will be held. These ceremonies will be sponsored by the city of McCook, its chamber of commerce, and the Republican Valley Conservation Association. This day has long been anticipated by the people living in the Republican River Valley, which cuts across the southwestern quarter of Nebraska.

The ceremonies for this Independence Day mark the culmination of more than 20 years of careful planning and labor by these folks to control one of the worst flood offenders in the upper Republican watershed.

By construction of a dam on Red Willow Creek, about 9 miles north of McCook, a reservoir with a capacity of about 88,000 acre-feet will be formed. The top 50,000 acre-feet of capacity will be devoted to flood control, and the remainder will serve other community needs. Thus the lake which is impounded will make possible opportunities for reclamation, irrigation, and recreation, affecting a three-State area.

Now is a highly opportune time, Mr. President, to name this reservoir after Nebraska's beloved Senator Hugh Butler.

He was well acquainted with the ravages of Red Willow Creek. He was reared at nearby Cambridge. Later, he owned a farm which repeatedly suffered heavy damages from the floods that came from Red Willow Creek. But apart from these personal experiences, the close contact which he maintained with the community throughout his life kept him apprised of the misery and loss that came by the alternating droughts and floods.

The intense interest in reclamation and its benefits—irrigation and flood control—which Senator Butler expressed throughout his distinguished career in this body, developed from his awareness of the problems created each season by the course of the Republican River. The desire to protect the soil and crops and to prevent the loss of lives, homes and businesses, the inevitable aftermath of a devastating flood, occupied him so completely that he became one of the stanchest proponents of reclamation and flood control serving in the U.S. Senate.

A quotation from a speech Senator Butler delivered on this floor in 1947 serves to illustrate the importance he attached to the subject of conservation:

I have told the reclamation people of my State that irrigating an additional million acres of land means more to the State than the discovery of oil. If we can continue with the sound, progressive development of our water resources along the lines charted by reclamation, then we will be adding [to the State's] permanent wealth, safety and resources.

These views on an orderly development of our natural resources are especially significant today. We are deeply committed to a vast program of public works projects. This program has expanded tremendously in the past 8 years. The best evidence of the extent of this commitment can be found in the progressive enlargement of appropriations each year, not only for work in progress, but also for new starts that are authorized.

The growing number of flood control and reclamation projects are vitally needed. We recognize that in this field much remains yet to be done. We should not lose sight, however, as President Eisenhower has timely cautioned, of the necessity for an orderly development of our resources within our Nation's fiscal ability. We face the hard task of scheduling these construction programs according to a priority dictated by their urgency.

This sound principle governed Senator Butler while serving first as a member, and later as chairman, of the Senate Interior Committee. The result: The Red Willow Dam and Reservoir now is underway, with the total assurance that the project will be successfully completed in rapid and good order.

It is natural for Nebraskans to recall the career of Senator Butler, when speaking of projects such as the Red Willow Dam and Reservoir. Likewise, we would pay honor to his memory by naming the reservoir "Hugh Butler Lake."

My friend, Perry Phillips, of Cambridge, Nebr., has sent me a resolution, recently adopted by his city urging that this be done. The resolution, signed by Paul Minnick, mayor of Cambridge, exemplifies the warmth and affection with which Senator Butler is still remembered by the people of his State.

Other folks in the Republican River Valley who have long been active in the conservation of its natural resources have expressed similar sentiments. The senior Senator from Nebraska joins with them most gladly. By affixing Senator Butler's name to this noteworthy accomplishment that so amply reflects his great service to Nebraska, we pay homage to a great citizen of our State and a highly respected, deeply revered former colleague. I now introduce, Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and Senators CURTIS, AIKEN, and DIRKSEN, a bill to accomplish this purpose, and ask that it be appropriately referred.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3804) to designate the reservoir formed by the construction of a dam across Red Willow Creek in the State of Nebraska, as Hugh Butler Lake, introduced by Mr. HRUSKA (for himself, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. DIRKSEN), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the reservoir formed by the construction of a dam across Red Willow Creek, a tributary of the Republican River, in the State of Nebraska, shall hereafter be known as Hugh Butler Lake, in honor of the late Senator Hugh A. Butler of Nebraska. All laws, regulations, maps, documents, or records of the United States in which such reservoir is designated or referred to under the name the Red Willow Reservoir shall be held to refer to such reservoir under and by the name Hugh Butler Lake.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is a distinct privilege to join with my colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HRUSKA], in introducing a bill to honor the memory of Hugh Butler. Our State of Nebraska will applaud this effort to pay tribute to one of its most distinguished sons. Many Senators now present served with Hugh Butler during his 14 years in the Senate and will warmly receive this opportunity to memorialize his noble service to his beloved State.

Hugh Butler served twice as chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. He was chairman at the time of his death, on July 1, 1954. An engineer by profession, he had an intense interest in the work of this committee and became expert in all facets of our vast reclamation program. He was deservedly proud to lead the Senate in the enactment of the Flood Control Act of 1944 which authorized the development of the Missouri River Basin.

Today we honor Hugh Butler, and seek to enlighten posterity of his good works by naming a unit of the Missouri River basin development program in his memory. We seek to name the lake above Red Willow Dam, a part of the Frenchman-Cambridge project, the Hugh Butler Lake. This lake lies but a few miles from the homestead where Hugh Butler spent his early days. It is adjacent to the community of Cambridge, Nebr., where he grew to manhood and where, as a poor but ambitious youth, he labored diligently to win his scholarship to Doane College.

Hugh Butler's life was a success by anyone's measure. In its broadest measure it is the story of a man who lived in humility, with dignity, whose greatest pleasure was in giving his great abilities and acquisitions for the good of others. It is my sincere hope we can give, in his memory, this richly deserved tribute.

COMPETITIVE BIDDING IN GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the State Department has defended its refusal to purchase furniture for the Venezuelan Embassy through competitive bidding, on the grounds that it is technically legal to do so. The Comptroller General at first disputed this. Later in a letter to me, which the minority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], has put into the RECORD, the Comptroller General indicated that the State Department may have found a legal loophole that provides technical justification.

There has never been a word of justification, however, of the public policy of buying standardized office furniture from one furniture manufacturer, for the obvious reason that there is no justification. This policy is bad for competing American business which should have an equal opportunity to compete and it is bad for the American taxpayer who has to pay more in the absence of competition.

Mr. President, to meet this situation I submit a sense of the Senate resolution and ask that it be appropriately referred.

The resolution is short, and I should like to read it, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that any contract made by the Government for supplies or services should be awarded in accordance with the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes, except when competitive bidding would be clearly impracticable or demonstrably uneconomical, and that in such cases a full report of the reasons for the exception to the competitive bid procedure should be made by the department or agency concerned to the Comptroller General.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 348) was referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROXMIRE. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator from Wisconsin submitting his resolution as the result of the revelations which he has made in connection with the sending of furniture at high cost from the Mueller Furniture Co. of Grand Rapids, Mich., to the American Embassy in Venezuela?

Mr. PROXMIRE. The Senator from Illinois is correct, although I may say that a far more substantial justification for this is the presentation which the Senator from Illinois made to the Senate in his brilliant speech, showing that in case after case the Defense Department has wasted taxpayers' money by paying far too much in many instances, when there was no attempt made to obtain bids in cases where it was obviously feasible and would have been economically desirable.

VOLUNTARY PENSION PLANS BY SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS—AMENDMENT

Mr. AIKEN submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 10) to encourage the establishment of voluntary pension plans by self-employed individuals, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954, RELATING TO POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES—AMENDMENT

Mr. MCNAMARA (for himself and Mr. KENNEDY) submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (H.R. 5547) to amend certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to possessions of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DIRKSEN:

Statement by Senator KUCHEL on accomplishments of U.S. space exploration under the Republican administration.

By Mr. BUTLER:

Address entitled "The Influence of the Federal Government on the National Economy," delivered by him on June 27, 1960, at Mergenthaler Vocational Technical High School, Baltimore, Md.

By Mr. DODD:

An address delivered by Representative MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN, of Ohio, at the first annual roundtable conference of the Institute of Ethnic Studies at Georgetown Unisity, April 26, 1958, entitled "Realities of Soviet Strategy."

By Mr. WILEY:

Editorial entitled "Champion of Liberty," published in the Green Bay (Wis.) Press Gazette, and press release by Postmaster General Summerfield relating to the barring by Czechoslovakia of mail bearing U.S. "champion of liberty" stamps honoring Thomas G. Masaryk.

PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry last week presented to Mr. Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American World Airways, the association's International Achievement Award for World Peace at a luncheon in the Chicago club.

Fortunately, a member of the association kindly forwarded to me copies of the head table list plus the brief remarks of Mr. Trippe and the introduction of the honored guest by Edwin A. Locke, Jr., president of the Union Tank Car Co. At the head table, Mr. President, were some of Chicago's and Illinois' finest, including Gen. Lawrence Whiting, president of the American Furniture Mart; Clarence B. Randall, economic adviser to President Eisenhower and the President's official representative to the Chicago International Trade Fair; Merrill Meigs, aviation pioneer, business leader, and an old and good friend of mine; Hon. John Chapman, Lieutenant Governor of the State of Illinois; Thomas H. Coulter, executive director, Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry; and Paul Goodrich, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry.

Mr. President, I have read with great interest the introduction of Mr. Trippe by Mr. Locke and I am amazed to learn of the many awards Mr. Trippe and his excellent company have won in the 33 years Pan American has been in operation. Likewise, I was greatly impressed with the brevity and sense contained in Mr. Trippe's responding address, and I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Locke's and Mr. Trippe's remarks be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTRODUCTION OF JUAN T. TRIPPE

(By Edward A. Locke, Jr., president, Union Tank Car Co., to the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry)

Seldom is it given to a Harvard man to comment publicly about a Yale man so soon after such a glorious afternoon as Harvard experienced on the Connecticut River at New London last Saturday. In all fairness, however, the only valid comment I can make is that Harvard's sweep of all three races is exactly the kind of sweep that Juan Trippe has made of all honors in the field of aviation. In recognition of his immense and unique contributions to air transport and world travel, he has received all of aviation's major awards, among them the Collier and Harmon Trophies, the Daniel Guggenheim Medal, and the Robert Dollar award.

Mr. Trippe is one of those rare and happy individuals who knew at an early age exactly what he wanted to do, and then went out and did it. When he was only 10, he was making a hobby of building model airplanes propelled by elastic bands and flying them in Central Park. At Yale, which he entered in 1917, he took private flying lessons and was soon accepted into the Navy Flying Service as a night bomber pilot. Only the armistice prevented his being assigned overseas.

Returning to college, he was active in athletics and many other affairs but most notably as the founder and president of the Yale Flying Club.

For a year or so after graduation, there was a slight deviation, and the only deviation, in Juan Trippe's steady progress toward preeminence in aviation. He was a bond salesman with the banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co. But by early 1923 he was back in aviation, first as the operator of a charter service on Long Island, then of a New York to Boston service having the first U.S. airmail contract ever awarded and, finally, in 1926, as the founder with two wealthy friends of the corporation that later became Pan American Airways. This fledgling enterprise, with an initial capital of $300,000, has grown in 35 years, under Mr. Trippe's leadership, to become the major international airline of the world, doing an annual business of close to half a billion dollars. The system serves all six continents and all the principal countries of the free world.

Some 15 years ago I happened to be working in the White House, handling international air route matters, and I had many contacts with Mr. Trippe. I came to know and to have a great respect for his quiet but undeviating purpose, for his dedication to America's air transport development all around the globe, and for his sound judgment of the key forces involved. He has in the postwar period championed two objectives: the consolidation of U.S. flying interests to meet foreign subsidized competition, and the development of low-cost air travel at tourist class rates.

Today Pan American is even more than an airline. It operates the guided missile range based on Cape Canaveral, the great proving ground for our national missile development. Some 8,000 Pan American technicians manage this 5,000-mile range. Other Pan American people control, calibrate and analyze the missile flights. Juan Trippe and his Pan American staff are carrying a major responsibility for our defense and that of the free world.

Pan American is also a dominant factor in the hotel field. Through its wholly owned subsidiary, International Hotels Corp., it plans, finances, constructs, and operates a chain of oversea hotels to accommodate in better ways the millions of New World travelers.

For his outstanding contribution in World War II, our Government conferred upon him its highest civilian decoration, the Medal for Merit. Decorated as well by the principal nations of Western Europe, the Middle East, the Orient, and South America, it is not surprising that such an ambassador of international good will has received more foreign civilian decorations than any other American. Mr. Trippe finds time, too, for other interests. He is a director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and the Chrysler Corp. He is a member of the Business Advisory Council and the Transportation Council of the U.S. Department of Commerce. He is a trustee of Yale University, Carnegie Institute, the National Geographic Society, and the National Safety Council.

Many of the Nation's leading universities have conferred honorary degrees on Juan Trippe, and I can best sum up his career of great service and great achievements by quoting the thrilling phrases of Yale's citation, "for organizing and administering a great new force in human life whereby space is forgotten and the ends of the earth are made neighbors."

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY JUAN T. TRIPPE, PRESIDENT, PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS, UPON RECEIVING THE CHICAGO ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY'S INTERNATIONAL ACHIEVEMENT AWARD FOR WORLD PEACE, JUNE 23, 1960

In accepting this award from the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, I speak not only for myself, but also on behalf of the many thousands of men and women of the Pan American Airways system. Today they are at their posts here in the United States and in 79 foreign countries. It is the teamwork of many at home and abroad, in the air and on the ground, which has brought about whatever contribution Pan American has made to world peace.

We, in the air transportation industry, as well as all of us in Pan American, are proud to receive this signal honor, particularly when we consider that our international air transport industry, and Pan American as well, are but 35 years old. We are still in the "baby carriage" as compared to our elders in the railroad, highway, and sea transport industries.

Most of us in this room, no doubt, can recall the beginning of air transportation. In fact, I well remember being present 35 years ago at the start of the first night airmail flight linking New York and Chicago. The experimental operation was conducted by the Post Office Department. The airplane was an old wood and canvas DH–4 of World War I vintage, with a water-cooled Liberty engine clattering away in its nose. The payload consisted of a few letters, which you could put in your hat. There were no airways. There were no radio beams; no other aids to navigation but a compass. There was no weather service to guide the pilot. All he had was an eye cocked aloft at the weather, and a prayer, as he took off on the adventure that was to usher in a great new form of transportation.

Perhaps you would be interested in hearing of a few Pan American milestones. These growing pains of a new industry, believe me, were real headaches to our company at the time. Our first service, some 35 years ago, was a winter operation in Alaska. During the long, winter months, transportation in Alaska then was difficult indeed. Anybody wanting to go from Fairbanks to Nome, for example, would have to reserve space with a dog-team operator. That did not mean that he rode the sled. He paid about 10 cents a mile for the privilege of walking beside the dog team and spending his nights on the snow in a sleeping bag. A 300-mile trip was an adventure that might take 2 or 3 uncomfortable weeks.

Little wonder, therefore, that when the airplane appeared in Alaska, the passenger was glad to use it—even though he had to ride with a cold nose, in a single engine open cockpit job. And although he had a cold nose, he did not have sore feet and he did not have to sleep in the snow.

A year later, in 1927, our company was privileged to open our country's first international air service. The plane was a three-motored Fokker F-7, the first multiengined transport to fly under the American flag. The route was between Key West and Havana—a mere 90 miles over water. The 1-hour flight, however, eliminated a rough 7-hour boat ride and enough daring passengers showed up to fill the eight-passenger plane every day.

During the next 6 years, the company pushed steadily southward. First went young American engineers to blaze the trail, to carve airports out of the jungle, to clear sites for weather stations in lonely mountain passes. Their aides were Indians who had no idea of what an automobile might be and who had never heard of a railroad train. Next came builders, to construct hangars, passenger stations, even hotels and the 200-odd radio control and weather stations, which today guide aircraft flying the airways of the Americas. By 1934, the United States was linked with every country and colony in the three Americas.

Two years later, in 1936, the China Clipper was poised on her ramp in San Francisco Bay. She was the first four-engined aircraft produced anywhere in the world, designed to fly an ocean route. Under the command of Capt. Eddie Musick, she took off on schedule, landing at Honolulu, Midway, Wake, and Guam; and arriving safely at Manila 6 days later.

We Americans were proud and thrilled that an airplane owned by an American company, built here in the United States by American workmen, flown by an American captain and operating under the American flag, was the first to fly a major ocean in scheduled commerce.

Again, 2 years later, in 1938, the North Atlantic was bridged. And again it was a American plane—the Yankee Clipper—that was first to fly passengers, mail, and cargo over the North Atlantic trade route to Europe, over which, last year, a million and a quarter passengers were flown.

After World War II, there remained the task of girdling the globe with scheduled air transportation. Again the honor fell to an American company and an American crew, when the Clipper America took off eastbound from New York just 13 years ago to inauguarate the first passenger service around the world.

Nearly 2 years ago, the first of the great long-range, high-speed jets was licensed and delivered to us. Jets, already, have cut travel time in half throughout the world for passengers, mail and cargo. Noise and vibration have been reduced. Comfort aloft "above the weather" has been achieved. High speed and regularity have been assured.

Chicago now enjoys nonstop oversea jet service east to Europe and beyond to the Middle East, Africa, and southeast Asia. Soon Chicago may have direct oversea jet service west as well. For our company, among others, is seeking Government authority to provide nonstop service to Honolulu—and also direct service from Chicago to the Orient over the short Polar route.

Chicago has been historically the railroad, highway, and domestic air center of the country. Its airports are the busiest anywhere. The St. Lawrence Seaway last year brought ocean shipping to your door. As I pointed out, Chicago can also soon become a major international airport with nonstop jets west to Honolulu and beyond—as well as north to the Orient via the short Polar route. Equally important, Chicago would thus become a major port of call on round-the-world jet service.

Yes, we Americans stand on the threshold of the jet age—when not just single nations but the entire globe will become a neighborhood—when Tokyo to the west as well as London to the east will be figuratively just "across the street."

I will not dwell on the tremendous implications of this jet age for I am sure you agree that the long-range jet can well introduce a new era in world trade, in world understanding and in world peace—always provided, however, that we Americans make full use of this new "magic carpet" for people-to-people contact and for trade development. There is no faster nor surer way to improve the economy and raise living standards of underdeveloped and still uncommitted nations.

We businessmen must also encourage the development of trade and of industry in backward countries with our own capital—supported, when appropriate, by credits from the Export-Import Bank and the Development Loan Fund. We must begin to train our youth for oversea business posts in larger numbers. We must change Horace Greeley's old slogan, "Go West, Young Man" to a new slogan for the jet age "Go Abroad, Young Man."

Above all, we should not forget time is running out and that the uncommitted nations will soon have to choose between the shackles of international communism and individual freedom and liberty. Individual American businessmen must, therefore, take off their coats and go to work for our common interest and ultimate security. We Americans have a job to do abroad. Our Government, with public foreign air funds, can't do the job alone.

Yes, in this jet age, we Americans have available a new "magic carpet" to make new friends abroad and new business partners as well. Yes, if we elect to—and really try—in the critical years ahead, we Americans can bring trade, prosperity and hope to the uncommitted nations and in so doing—assure ourselves the best chance for world peace in our time as well.

To the extent we, in oversea air transport, do our full part in this job that lies before us, we will have proved worthy of your citation and award today.

COMMUNITY OF FREE NATIONS IN AFRICA

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, an event of immense proportions and far-reaching significance for all of mankind has taken place in the Continent of Africa. The community of free nations has just been joined by five newly independent African countries with a population amounting to more than 30 million people, and a total area two-thirds the size of the continental United States.

Yesterday the Republic of the Congo became independent, bringing self-government to a population of 15 million in an area of over 900,000 square miles. On the 20th of June the Mali Federation was established, and 6 days later the Malagasy Republic, formerly Madagascar. British Somaliland also gained independence on June 26, and today she and Italian Somaliland will join to form the free nation of Somalia. This will increase the independent peoples of Africa by one-third to about 120 million, and will mean that more than half of the population and nearly half of the territory of that vast and turbulent continent will be self-governing.

Two smaller African countries—Togo and Cameroon—became independent earlier this year, and in the fall Nigeria's 40 million citizens and those of four other West African nations are scheduled for independence. Others will follow in 1961, and the present decade will probably see independence established in virtually all of Africa. The names of some of these new nations such as Gadon, Dahomey, and Chad may seem unfamiliar to Americans whose geography lessons taught them that most of Africa was divided into blocks of silent colonies governed by the nations of Europe. That political geography and that concept of colonialism are fast becoming matters of history. The peoples of Africa are now taking up their sovereign roles among free nations and we look forward both to their friendship and to sharing with them a voice in world affairs.

Involved with this new role, however, is the arresting reality of economic privation and political inexperience at present characteristic of much of Africa. This represents a grave challenge. Independence is not a simple matter. It is not comprised merely of cutting the chains of colonial bondage. Mixed with the exultation of freedom is the sadness of little education, seriously limited technical skills, no stabilizing heritage of strong political and social institutions. Some of the new nations are left better prepared by their colonial mentors than others. This is the personality of emerging Africa.

The development of economic self-sufficiency and political stability in these new countries is therefore an intensely complicated problem which greatly depends on the assistance and encouragement which the United States and other leading Western nations contribute. As they have repeatedly asserted, these new peoples wish to avoid involvement either as participants or as objectives in the cold war. They fervently desire to rise above the poverty, the ignorance, the disease, and the relative inability to influence their own fate which presently characterizes their lot. They feel the best way to do this is to keep clear of the power politics of the stronger, richer nations. They feel that to do otherwise would work to their disadvantage. We must respect this judgment even as we demonstrate our own way of life through policies vigorously assisting them to establish strength, freedom, and justice in theirs.

These new nations and the United States both face a similar problem in attempting to deal with Africa's future. The African states must free themselves from political bondage without breaking ties of friendship and assistance with their former masters which are critically necessary to their own strength and success. I believe that their future rests in a productive relationship with the former colonial powers. In this way only can Africa truly liberate herself from the past and move successfully into the future. Negative recriminations and emotional reminders of the past can only serve a destructive purpose.

In its role the United States must not allow friendship and loyalty to traditional Western allies and to the younger freedom-seeking peoples to cancel one another out, resulting in policies lacking vision and dynamism, policies characterized by indecision and emptiness. We, too, must find a balanced and creative middle way which can utilize the resources of assistance we would offer Africa and to persuade Europe and Africa to work together as partners.

Through mutual security aid utilizing traditional channels, as well as new means, such as the Development Loan Fund which is calculated to meet the specific economic needs of these less-developed areas, and through support given at the United Nations and in other channels of international diplomacy, we have already advanced the cause of self-governing Africa. Continuing and increasing support is necessary.

It is our obligation so to help these African nations to help themselves that they will be able to understand the basic elements of democracy as we cherish them here and achieve a higher standard of life as we know it here.

CORRECTIONS IN THE HAWAII OMNIBUS BILL

Mr. LONG of Hawaii. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of House Concurrent Resolution 706. This resolution authorizes and directs the clerk of the House to make technical corrections in H.R. 11602, the Hawaii Omnibus bill, as engrossed by the House. These corrections are completely of a technical nature. The leadership of both sides of the aisle has been consulted about the matter. There is no objection.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter to which the Senator from Hawaii refers has not yet been received from the House. If the Senator will wait until the House message has been received, it will be brought up in the Senate at that time.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SESSION OF THE SENATE

On request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, the Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs of the Committee on the District of Columbia was authorized to meet during the session of the Senate today.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that following the morning hour there will be some statements, and we expect to have the conference report on the military construction bill before the Senate. We anticipate that there will be some further discussion of H.R. 10. However, perhaps shortly after we act on the conference report, depending on how long the speeches may be, we will have a vote on overriding the President's veto of the Federal employees pay raise bill, in the event the House should override the veto.

Then we may proceed, after consultation with Senators interested in the matter, particularly committee chairmen, to proceed to the consideration of the extension of the Sugar Act.

The minority leader suggests that those in opposition to the Federal pay bill, and who favor sustaining the veto, would be agreeable to a 2-hour limitation, in connection with that discussion. I ask unanimous consent, in the event we do proceed to the motion to override the veto, that there be 2 hours of debate on each side.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is just an informal suggestion for the moment, as I take it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the suggestion is agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope we may be able also to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1821, H.R. 11207, to amend the Small Business Act, about which I spoke to the majority leader last night, and also to the minority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I shall discuss that matter with the Senator.

SUGAR AS A FOREIGN POLICY INSTRUMENT

Mr. LONG of Hawaii. Mr. President, the Congress is considering legislation to extend the Sugar Act, which otherwise would expire this year. We must insure stability for our national sugar market by protecting it and the many production areas which comprise the sugar industry, from disturbances caused by deficiencies in the quota assigned to Cuba.

The complexities of the situation facing the Congress in extending and amending the Sugar Act are well appreciated in Hawaii. An editorial in the Honolulu Star-Bulletin for June 29 states the issues with clarity. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUGAR AS A FOREIGN POLICY INSTRUMENT

Whether the United States Sugar Act, which allocates quotas to sugar-producing areas, foreign and domestic, is to become an instrument of foreign policy is a question that sugar growers here, as elsewhere, would like to have answered.

Apparently it was on the basis of its use as a foreign policy instrument that Chairman Harold Cooley and other Democrats joined forces with Republicans to approve Presidential power to cut Cuban quotas.

Secretary of State Herter delivered the clinching argument last week when he told the committee the time had come to protect the American supply.

The fact that this argument was offered by Secretary Herter, and not the Department of Agriculture, hints that foreign policy rather than economic considerations provide the leverage to get favorable action. Whether the power, if finally voted, will be exercised in that manner is another thing.

Cuba has been a major supplier to the American market, providing roughly one-third of our needs.

In recent weeks, however, Cuba has talked of selling millions of tons of sugar behind the Iron Curtain.

Cuba also has talked of driving American entrepreneurs out of Cuba, and in the case of the sugar industry this could result in dwindling production through loss of technical know-how.

Consequently, there is serious concern over the ability of Cuba to fill its U.S. quota—if it actually does divert a large share of its crop to Communist bloc countries.

Because the Eastern and Gulf refineries which process Cuban sugar are geared to handling cane, increases in beet acreage would not provide the immediate answer to a cut in Cuban imports.

Hawaii, with a 2-year crop, could not fill the gap, even if land were available for a substantial increase in production here.

Cuba's sales in the United States total more than 3 million tons a year; Hawaii's production is not much more than a million tons.

Hence, if there is a material decline in Cuban imports, it is unlikely that domestic producers would be able to take up the slack in cane sugar requirements.

Consequently there is a lively interest in South America to get into the American sugar market not only because of the increase in dollar revenue, but because of the stability this would give to what are now sometimes shaky economies in those countries.

The position of the Hawaii industry is in support of the Presidential Power Act—that is, giving the executive branch the authority to adjust quotas.

Lacking precise details of the legislation approved Monday, the H.S.P.A. cannot say immediately if it approves this specific amendment. It does, however, feel that economic rather than foreign policy considerations should govern sugar policy if the Hawaii industry is to have steady, stable growth.

Obviously the use of presidential quota-setting powers as an instrument of foreign policy could result in economic uncertainty that would be unsettling to the domestic industry.

Any reduction of Cuban imports accompanied by a corresponding reallocation of cane sugar quotas would be beneficial to the Hawaiian industry. But the gains could not be realized immediately.

Hawaiian sugar takes 2 years to mature, consequently growers here would want more assurances than are given by a mere 1-year extention of the sugar act before embarking upon any major expansion program.

Meanwhile, the committee's action can best be interpreted as a show of bipartisan foreign policy rather than a sudden change of heart by Chairman Cooley and his Democratic majority on economic issues.

WORLD REFUGEE YEAR ENDS JULY 1

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today marks the end of the World Refugee Year. As this enterprise of man's possible humanity to man concludes it is marked by both triumph and tragedy: triumph for what has been accomplished, and tragedy, because so much remains to be done.

Clearly there is triumph in the partial fulfillment of the purpose of the World Refugee Year. It did not hope to solve the great problem to which it was dedicated. It proffered no Utopian hope of solving the gigantic worldwide problem of millions of refugees.

Rather, the year was dedicated to stimulating thought and effort on the part of all people and every government toward solving the problems arising from the homelessness of these millions of unfortunates. It was dedicated to the proposition that there can be an end to their grotesque physical, social, and mental suffering.

As the year ends there is triumph for the nations, for the numerous public and private organizations, the churches, the groups, and the individuals throughout the world who have helped to make it a success, and who have actually aided in the rescue of over 100,000 homeless persons.

Finally, there is indeed triumph for the rescued.

But there is tragedy for those whose hopes were raised and who were not among the fortunate. There will be tragedy if the World Refugee Year has not aroused the conscience of the world to the plight of the helples refugees, and created a renewed endeavor to find remedies.

Millions of refugees still languish, homeless and stateless, in camps and out of them, desperately yearning for the opportunity to lead normal lives. Not only are they in need of normal food, shelter, medical attention, education, opportunities for self-support and bolstered self-respect; they are in need of the mental and spiritual solace and stimulus of a home. To some these amenities are completely unknown. Children born in refugee camps of parents doomed for over 15 years have known no other than a pitiful existence. Older people, plagued with the memories of a better life, are weary with vain hope.

These pitiable victims of political discord, of religious bigotry, of international conflict, of "man's inhumanity to man" at its very worst, are scattered from Europe to Hong Kong. They numbered at one time some 40 million. Some 15 million remain. To these must be added the millions who have fled from East Germany seeking refuge in the Free World.

Many of these millions are considered a problem on a purely national basis, in such countries as Pakistan, which has not asked for aid even from the United Nations. But even without these there are still millions, including many "hard core" cases, the most pitiable of all. These are the sick, the handicapped, and the old, unwanted and doomed to hopelessness unless we open our hearts and our countries to them.

World Refugee Year has made some progress in softening the unhappy lot of this "hard core." Countries which formerly excluded them have granted entry. Barriers against the sick and handicapped have been reduced. Families have been allowed to join more fortunate relatives.

As the Year comes to an end let us call attention to several major considerations affecting the plight of refugees. First, the world cannot afford to let the situation as it now is fester without remedy. It is a source not only of distress but also of possible dissension.

Alleviating the distress frequently turns to the benefit of the benefactors. We should remind ourselves that providing for the care of refugees may be more a matter of enlightened self-interest than of charity. Refugees, even the handicapped, contribute greatly to the countries in which they find a haven. Freedom of thought, high courage, resourcefulness, and independence of spirit are attributes of the political and religious refugee. Such people should be welcome in every country. Let us remember that the United States was settled in large part by refugees. To them and their many contributions we owe much of our greatness.

If World Refugee Year has quickened the senses of the world to these considerations, triumph will overcome tragedy.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL DECRIES FCC FORD'S STRANGE VIEW ON SPECIAL PRIVILEGE FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I have reported to the Senate that the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission has told me that it is settled policy for the FCC to give Members of the House and Senate a preferred or favorable category in the award of television or radio licenses. This is done on a civic participation rationalization, because the FCC views a Congressman's election as evidence of his demonstrated interest and involvement in his constituency.

I have pointed out the obvious payola evils of this practice—with a Congressman passing directly on every phase of the operations of the FCC, including salaries. As Members of the Senate, we are even charged with responsibility for passing on confirmation of the Commissioners.

The Milwaukee Journal has recently commented on this situation in an excellent editorial that concludes:

There can be no denying that the policy, wherever it originated and whoever perpetuates it, leaves the FCC wide open to suspicion that it is playing politics behind the scenes, that it is currying favor of Congressmen to whom it looks for appropriations and legislation.

If Chairman Ford and the other Commissioners cannot see the impropriety or the danger here, or the necessity for immediate repudiation of such favoritism, time for another FCC shakeup is certainly at hand.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FCC FORD'S STRANGE VIEW

John C. Doerfer finally felt forced to resign as Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) because he hadn't been able to see the impropriety of accepting personal favors and entertainment from leading figures in the broadcasting industry, which the FCC regulates. His successor as FCC Chairman, Frederick W. Ford, seems to be having similar difficulty in recognizing rank impropriety on the part of his Commission.

Senator PROXMIRE, Democrat, of Wisconsin, said that he had learned that it was FCC policy to give weight, in deciding TV channel assignments, to financial interest of a Congressman in any applicant station. If he is quoted correctly, Chairman Ford not only verifies this but insists that stock interest of a Congressman should be considered a "favorable factor" because people have shown confidence in the Congressman by electing him.

Can't Chairman Ford appreciate that this is an invitation to TV stations to get some Congressman as a stockholder by hook or crook? Mr. Ford denies it.

Can't he recognize that political success has no connection with the ability to manage a TV station successfully, impartially, and in the public interest? And dosen't he know how many other things besides public confidence may account for a Congressman's election or defeat?

Doesn't he see that, to be consistent, the FCC would have to hold that it was an "unfavorable" factor for a TV station to have a defeated candidate for Congress as a stock holder? Or hasn't Mr. Ford thought that far?

There can be no denying that the policy, wherever it originated and whoever perpetuates it, leaves the FCC wide open to suspicion that it is playing politics behind the scenes, that it is currying favor of Congressmen to whom it looks for appropriations and legislation.

If Chairman Ford and the other Commissioners cannot see the impropriety or the danger here, or the necessity for immediate repudiation of such favoritism, time for another FCC shakeup is certainly at hand.

COST OF MEDICAL CARE MAKES WIDOW FEAR LIFE AS MUCH AS DEATH

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the most touching letters that come across my desk are those from senior citizens that support the case for medical care for the aged far more ably than any testimony before a committee or a speech in Congress. That is why I have been calling these letters to the attention of the Senate every single day we are in session, for more than a month.

I have here such a letter describing the fate of a widow in poor health and with low income who now faces cancellation of her medical insurance. In this letter she asks the heartbreaking question, "Now if I live longer than a year, what am I going to do?"

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Just wanted to tell you how much it means to me and others like me to have the Forand bill pass. First I have just lost someone very dear to me, my husband, age 69. He had been hospitalized many times the past 2 years since retiring from the railroad in 1957. He got a railroad pension, but he had never worked under social security. But I did work under social security and got a pension of $40 a month and $25 railroad pension. I am 66. At first we got along very well on our pensions, then sickness set in and we had to start using the little savings we had laid away. Soon that was gone. We have an insurance policy which paid part of our hospital bill but always left a big balance. What I will do now I don't know. The last illness brought the hospital and doctor bills way up. The insurance we had for death did not fully cover funeral expenses although we paid out of our pensions $31.96 a month insurance and $50 and sometimes more for medicines. My husband had cerebral vascular spasms and a heart condition and I am a diabetic and also have a heart condition. Yes, we have 5 children and they have done all they could, but they also have sickness, children, and many bills. We have never asked for help, but what's worrying me now is this insurance company cancels the widows out a year after their husband's death. Now if I live longer than a year, what am I going to do. I cannot get in another insurance company because I am a diabetic and have a bad heart, this is why it is so important to me and others like me to hope and pray that the Forand bill will pass. Please help us, and thank you.

SENATOR CLARK SOUNDS CLARION CALL FOR COURAGEOUS LEADERSHIP

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] has written an unusually thoughtful and perceptive article on "The Challenge to the Democrats," published in the July issue of the Progressive. I am sure all my colleagues know that this great magazine was founded in 1909 by the late Senator Robert M. La Follette, Sr. Published in Wisconsin, it continues to this day as an outstanding organ of American liberalism.

In his article, the senior Senator of Pennsylvania examines the nature of the goals which we Democrats ought to be pursuing in this election year of 1960. He examines a key problem for Americans concerned to maintain our role of world leadership: the underutilization of our resource possibilities. He calls for optimism tempered with the wisdom that stems from clear-eyed examination of the tasks before us. He notes that—

> The great challenge of the times is to design and present to the Communists a system of arms control and peacekeeping machinery which offers an acceptable alternative to the present dangerously delicate balance of terror.

The message of this article is that the present is a time requiring a high order of courage and leadership from liberal Democrats seeking to change the course of doubt and drift that has been our lot in the past 7 years. To bring it to the attention of a wider audience, I ask consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHALLENGE TO THE DEMOCRATS

(By Senator JOSEPH S. CLARK)

For nearly 8 critical years our Nation has been sitting placidly on the sidelines watching the rest of the world go by. And all the evidence indicates there is grave danger that, unless a liberal Democrat is elected to the Presidency in November, America will continue to sit on the sidelines for still another 4 crucial years. If this should happen, our freedom and security would be in greater danger than ever before in our history.

Fortunately, there is genuine hope that the Democratic Party will nominate a candidate with the will to resume for our country the role of creative participant in world affairs. If this hope becomes a reality, the American people once again will have a chance to do what they did in 1800, in 1828, in 1912, and in 1932: endorse a fundamental change of purpose in American political life.

While we have been sitting on the sidelines a great many things have been happening, here at home as well as abroad, that are not good for America—things which our children and grandchildren will not be proud of. I want to consider first the developments on the domestic scene.

In our national chase after private material wealth and social status, American leadership has been neglecting its public duty and permitting the public sector of our economy to deteriorate.

We have been told by the chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Raymond J. Saulnier, that "the ultimate purpose of the American economy is to produce more consumer goods. This is the object of everything we are working at—to produce things for consumers." This astounding statement summarizes the narrow vision, the insensitivity, indeed, the actual evil and danger, in the philosophy of those in control of the executive branch of our Government.

For the aim of our economy is not the production of more consumer goods. It is to provide a decent and healthy environment for every American man, woman, and child, an environment which builds a strong floor beneath which we will not permit the standard of living of the poorest American to fall; an environment which places no ceiling on the aspirations of Americans of every color and creed to live the good life in freedom and to contribute to the spiritual advancement of Western civilization.

The failure of our political leadership to recognize America's true goals presents a challenge to the Democrats to adopt a platform which enunciates these philosophical, political, and economic principles, and to nominate a candidate who will enthusiastically lead the fight and put them into practice. The Democratic candidate must generate an electric response in each of us, a determination to put our talents to use for the benefit not only of ourselves but of all mankind.

What are the areas at home in which our change of purpose should become manifest?

Perhaps the most important is in our attitude toward the national economy. We must replace a psychology of timidity with one of confidence in our future. Instead of wringing our hands over wage and price increases and the rise in gold exports, we must direct our attention toward increasing the rate of useful growth of our economy. Instead of checking our growth with unsound monetary measures—restraining credit and deliberately running up the interest rate—we should be utilizing unused plant capacity, putting unemployed and underemployed citizens back to work, and producing the wealth which yields the tax revenues needed to remedy the obsolescence in the public sector of our economy.

We liberal Democrats should not take the easy way out. It is fiscal responsibility to condone controllable inflation. It is irresponsible to laugh off unbalanced budgets in times of general prosperity. We should use the full power of the Federal Government to maintain reasonable price stability. We should insist that the Federal Government collect sufficient revenues to balance the budget and yet meet our responsibilities at home and abroad.

But the vital need is a bold attack on both unemployment and inadequate production. There is no inconsistency between maximum employment, maximum production of useful goods and services, and reasonable price stability. The economy can grow, the Federal budget can be balanced, and the needs of our people met with the assistance of sensible public leadership.

We must have stricter tax enforcement—and as a result of Democratic congressional pressure, we are about to get it. Tax chiselers must be punished. Outrageous tax loopholes must be closed. If necessary, we may have to go part of the way back to the tax rate structure as it was before the irresponsible Republican tax cut of 1954.

If we do these things, we can have, without heavy sacrifice, the money we need, within a balanced budget, to meet our public responsibilities. What these responsibilities are is fairly clear:

Eradication of poverty: When the Special Senate Committee on Unemployment Problems held hearings in West Virginia last fall, we were told of a survey in one of the public schools designed to measure the effect of the school's hot lunch program. The weight of school children was checked at the opening of the fall semester and again before and after their Christmas vacations. Before Christmas, following three or so months of eating hot lunches at school, the children had gained an average of 3 to 5 pounds, but the gain was wiped out during the Christmas vacation when the children ate at home. That simple illustration conveys in a small way what poverty costs this rich nation in human suffering and waste. In recent years, despite general prosperity, we have come to accept a relatively high rate of unemployment as "normal." Yet there is no reason why a democratic economic system should not promote the greatest general economic well-being amid conditions of maximum personal freedom and human well-being.

The best educational system in the world from grade to graduate school: We must help our primary and secondary schools through a program of Federal aid for classroom construction and teachers' salaries. We must also take drastic and immediate steps to equip our colleges and universities to turn out more and better educated students in the years ahead. We must have a larger, better trained, and better paid corps of professors and instructors. A large-scale expansion of academic facilities—libraries, laboratories, and classrooms—is required to meet the mushrooming demands on our colleges and universities. And we should be helping financially every high school graduate who needs economic aid and who has the capacity and character necessary to benefit from college training.

Trained manpower where it is needed for the public good: The United States is witnessing a tremendous waste of its manpower resources. Too many people are doing the wrong things. Too many people are doing nothing at all. And too many people are not being fully utilized, because they have never had their skills and talents fully developed. In the long run, we will lose the competition with a mobilized society unless we mobilize our resources also. America needs more and better teachers, scholars, scientists, doctors, musicians, artists, poets, writers, and politicians. I believe we can find, through voluntary methods of inducement, guidance, and counseling ways to achieve the same ends which the Soviet Union achieves through compulsion.

A decent home for every American family: This goal was stated as a national objective as long ago as the Housing Act of 1937. Yet the contrast of luxurious mansion and wretched slum, of airy, comfortable suburb and decaying, crowded central city is daily evidence of man's inhumanity to man. As a result of coordinated local and Federal effort, the inventory of substandard housing in America has been drastically cut in the last twenty years. But there are still six million housing units which should be demolished and replaced with safe and sanitary structures. A larger share of our gross national product should be devoted to the rehabilitation of urban areas, even if, as a result, we have less money to spend for tobacco, alcohol, and cosmetics. The construction industry is already spending $50 billion a year, but it is reliably estimated that this sum should be tripled. If we can increase the gross national product, we can devote a greater proportion of our income to improving the physical conditions of urban life.

Decent health for all Americans: Long overdue attention is being focused this year on the problem of providing adequate medical care for the elderly. This is perhaps the most acute aspect of the problem of providing adequate health care, but I believe all Americans should have access to complete medical care at a price they can afford. The growth of our economy means an increased level of expectation not only for consumer goods but for the services on which our health and welfare depend. Thus, we should not only enact a health program for the elderly under the social security system; we should appropriate Federal funds for such programs as aid for hospital construction and medical research, and we should continue to probe the outrageous drug prices which mean that for many people good health has been priced out of the market.

The development of our water resources: The careful and proficient use of one of our greatest national assets—our water resources—is now a matter of national, not just regional, interest. The creation of the Senate Select Committee on Water Resources is evidence that Congress recognizes the national scope of our problems in this field. In a State like my own—Pennsylvania—our population explosion and increasing industrial growth are having a serious impact on a water supply which we have wasted in the past and have still not harnessed in any orderly way. Economic and social expansion will slow down and prevent us from realizing our great potentials, unless we have a comprehensive water resource and development program. Each of the four major river systems in Pennsylvania has headwaters in another State—an illustration of why a Federal water policy is necessary if we are to deal competently with problems of quantity, purity, price, fluoridation, flood control, recreation, navigation, and—along the seaboard—intrusion of salinity.

Conservation and development of natural resources: Destruction of our forests, the increase of soil erosion, failure to manage and conserve our mineral wealth cannot be permitted to continue if America is to grow and prosper. Great civilizations have fallen because they have failed to meet the challenge of dealing intelligently with their physical environment. In this monumental field we now have a confusing hodgepodge of committees, commissions, and study groups examining problems piecemeal. The size and scope of these problems call for a central policy and a central agency for continuous inventory and appraisal of our national resources, charged with recommending to the President and the Congress the kind of adjustments needed to meet changes in industrial technology.

Civil rights and civil liberties: Our freedoms must be protected from the assaults of the surviving McCarthyites and their inevitable successors. The historic decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court should be a matter of great pride, not viewed with alarm. The Court is indeed the guardian of our individual liberties.

Civil rights is unfinished business. Legislation is needed to give the executive department authority and funds to help and hasten school integration. A Federal Fair Employment Practices Act and a workable voting rights bill must be enacted into law. But perhaps even more important and effective would be a President who believes in civil rights for all Americans and is prepared to take moral leadership in the fight to eliminate second-class citizenship.

The great weakness of the last decade has been an increasing political lag—a growing failure of our democracy to take the political action necessary to meet obvious social and economic needs. A revaluation of our traditional concept of federalism—outmoded as long ago as the end of the 19th century by the nationalization of our economy and the urbanization of our society—needs our urgent and immediate attention. We are an urban, not a rural nation. The sooner we discover this new America and act accordingly the better it will be for the future of our country.

This does not mean that we should neglect our farms. Indeed, preservation of the family farm through adequate assistance from the Federal Government is essential. But there is no need to subsidize corporate farming. And with thousands of people moving from rural areas into the cities and suburbs every year, surely we require a Department of Urban Affairs as urgenly as we continue to need a Department of Agriculture. The States have not adequately protected their own urban-directed citizens; the National Government should move in.

Why is it that so many Americans are afraid of our National Government? Elsewhere in the world the national government is the tool with which free people tackle problems public in character and national in scope. Yet whenever the suggestion is made that we turn to Washington to meet a new public need, a cry of horror arises. A great multitude of influential Americans regard their National Government with suspicion and hostility.

The Democrats will join this multitude at their peril. It is the philosophy of a dead past, and the Republicans, not the Democrats, are the defenders of outmoded ways of political life. It is only our National Government which can mobilize and commit the resources of our society where they are most needed. A chaotic and undirected society, chasing after personal material wealth, cannot long compete with the determined, mobilized, and aggressive society which confronts us on the other side of the Iron Curtain.

We, the people of United States, created our Federal Government to form a more perfect union and to provide for the general welfare. Let us use it in the public interest before it is too late.

The other major area in which there have been developments which are not good for America is the field of foreign affairs.

For most of the past 8 years there has been a steady deterioration in both American world power and in American leadership for peace, culminating in the recent summit fiasco. Clearly, there must be aggressive new leadership in the field of foreign policy and a greater initiative in the search for world law and disarmament. Today our attitude toward peace and, indeed, toward adequate defense until we can achieve peace, is timid when it should be bold.

America's military capabilities must be strengthened to offset growing Communist military might. We are in an arms race with the Communists, and it would be folly to forget it. But the ultimate purpose of the best deterrent weapons systems science and money can produce is not human destruction, but a series of international agreements which will prevent the use of, and eventually eliminate, the weapons involved. Obviously, the best deterrent system could not give us security. It would merely reduce the risk of armed attack. It would not remove Communist capability to destroy us and our allies. It would not remove the ever-present danger of war by accident rather than design. It would merely provide a little more time to come to grips with the real problem: how to achieve world peace through world law.

Maintenance of an East-West power balance in an ever-accelerating and ever-more-dangerous arms race must not be accepted as the ultimate objective. We must use our strength to negotiate enforceable disarmament agreements and to promote the rule of law as the enforcible foundation for world peace.

The great challenge of the times is to design and present to the Communists a system of arms control and peace-keeping machinery which offers an acceptable alternative to the present dangerously delicate balance of terror.

To meet this challenge to survival from abroad, we must be as bold and imaginative as in meeting our domestic challenges. The Democrats had better appreciate that this is no time for timid men, no time for the worship of the conventional wisdom, no time to stand still.

The men who made America were not timid men, and most of them, in my partisan judgment, were liberal democrats at heart. They crossed the ocean and conquered the continent because they had courage and vision. In our typically American term, they had "guts." And the Democrats will need "guts" this year. But if our hope is to serve the country as the country needs to be served, we must find a presidential candidate who will campaign with conviction on a platform which asserts that all the tools of government available in a free society must be used in the interests of social, economic, and political justice at home and abroad.

QUALITIES OF SUCCESSFUL LEADERSHIP

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in his commencement address to the graduating class of the Naval Officers Candidate School in Newport, Vice Adm. Lorenzo S. Sabin excellently charted the way to success in a military career.

He stressed the importance of experience, dedication, loyalty, integrity, and clarity of expression, as well as basic intelligence. The speech inspired those who heard it.

In order that other young people throughout the land may have the benefit of his sage and practical advice, I have obtained a copy of Admiral Sabin's talk and of the program.

I quote, in part, from the address:

One of the qualities we Americans prize highly is loyalty. To the naval leader engaged in the business of human relations, it is a fundamental requirement. Loyalty has often been referred to as a two-way street—and it certainly is. Some people think it is much easier to display loyalty up than it is to display it down. I don't think it makes much difference. Loyalty is not a chore or a task. Loyalty is an instinctive act of fidelity and support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire address be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY VICE ADM. LORENZO S. SABIN, CHIEF OF STAFF AND AIDE TO SUPREME ALLIED COMMANDER, ATLANTIC, AT THE GRADUATION OF CLASS 48, OFFICER CANDIDATE SCHOOL, JUNE 10, 1960

Admiral Moore, Captain Clarke, members of the graduating class, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, I am sure that the distinguished visitors here today will not mind if I address myself directly to the young gentlemen of this graduating class. They have made the grade. This is their day.

I suspect that there have been some changes in you young gentlemen between the day you were first sworn in the Navy and today, your graduating day. I know that some definite changes occurred in the motley group of young civilians who were sworn in with me 43 years ago and the day we graduated. Years later I met a classmate who was one of the young boys in the group sworn in with me. We got into an argument as to who was the countriest boy in that group. He claimed I was and I claimed he was. Finally, to end the argument, I remarked that I knew he was because he was wearing his first pair of shoes. "Yes," he replied, "and you asked me what they were." That settled that. But although our little argument was in fun, and more fun than in fact, it emphasizes that regardless of backgrounds, a heterogeneous group of young Americans can be molded into newly commissioned officers with a wonderful opportunity ahead of them, the opportunity to serve their country as members of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Today you young gentlemen face that same opportunity of service to your country, in one of the finest ways it can be served by duty in the Navy of the United States. The pages of U.S. naval history are rich in glorious achievements. But the greatest age of our Navy lies not in the past but just ahead. The fantastic achievements of science and the application of those achievements to the art of naval warfare offer a challenge to the imagination, ambition and professional competence of young men which is unparalleled in the past. Science is opening up new vistas for the future. But despite the exciting scientific prospects of the future, we shall still be faced with problems of human relations. The need for sound human leadership will continue to be a fundamental requirement of the naval leader.

I am therefore going to center my remarks on some of the qualities of naval leadership that involve human relations. Certainly those qualities I shall mention are not all of the requirements for naval leadership. But I believe that if they are cultivated, a rich harvest of many, if not all of the others will result. Before I discuss them, I should like to point out that when a young man receives a commission in the Navy he is officially designated a leader. He is so designated because of a little phrase which begins "reposing special trust and confidence"—not just "trust and confidence."

Now, neither that piece of parchment nor that little phrase will make him a leader. He will have to do something about that "special trust and confidence" business. And the first step is the desire to be a leader. If you don't want to be a leader you won't be one regardless of how many parchments you receive or the number of stripes you can bend on. But if you do want to be a leader you can be a leader, provided you are willing to work at it and are prepared to accept the responsibilities that go hand in hand with the authority of leadership.

The specific qualities I think you should have for the exercise of successful leadership in the field of human relations are intelligence, experience, dedication, loyalty, integrity, and articulation. Intelligence is one of the most widely discussed attributes of the human being. One often hears such expressions as "He's a savvy guy," "He's a brain," "He's not so smart," etc., etc. It is a fact that everybody in this world is not born with the same amount of native intelligence. God, in his wisdom, put more wrinkles in the brains of some than he did in others. But that isn't too important. What is important is how one uses the brains God gave him. Each of you is endowed with a reasonable amount of intelligence. If you weren't, you wouldn't be graduating here this morning. Each of you has a level of intelligence which for you is 100 percent. It may not be the same 100 percent as some other fellows. But for you it is all you've got, and it is your 100 percent. If you put it to 100 percent use, your profit will be enormous. You will acquire knowledge; and you will use your intelligence to temper that knowledge with the lessons of experience. And from your knowledge and experience will come that sound judgment which is sometimes called wisdom.

Experience is the one that you cannot start with. It is the only thing you must acquire as you go along. If you use your intelligence to profit by your experience, it will pay off. Years ago I witnessed an example of capitalizing on experience. I was a turret officer in the battleship Tennessee. We were anchored in a fog off the San Francisco main ship channel and the ship got caught in a heavy ground swell. My service projectiles broke loose in the handling room and when I arrived on the scene I was horrified to see those 1,500 pound, loaded and fuzed projectiles banging from one side to the other breaking up fittings, smashing voice tubes and denting bulkheads. I had no idea how to stop them. So I sent for the gunnery officer, a commander. He took one look and said, "Form a line to the berth deck and pass down the bedding." In 5 minutes those big bullets were jammed tight as a drum. I thought it was the smartest thing I had ever seen and I wondered how he had thought of it. So I asked him. His reply was, "I saw it done once before." I never forgot that lesson.

Dedication, next. I know of nothing more important to the successful career of a man in the armed forces than dedication. Just what is dedication? It is that intangible asset that will enable you to accept sacrifies because you live what you are doing and believe in what you are living. It is what makes you tackle a small job as well as a big job with the same fervor and desire for effective results. It is devotion to duty that transcends all personal considerations. It includes motivation. If you haven't got it you will never do a great job in the Navy. If you have got it, it will compensate for a lot of things you haven't got. I had a leading petty officer when I was a young officer who was as dedicated as any man I ever saw. Everything he did was motivated by a desire to improve the division, to make his gun crew the best in the Navy, to wear his uniform with pride and to be ready for any situation that faced him. His methods were sometimes unorthodox and his explanations for his actions were often quaint, but he always got results. This man was the left gun captain in my turret. He had just been married after many years as a bachelor. About a week after he was married, we put to sea to fire a gunnery practice. We were the first ship to fire after a major disaster in a turret in the Mississippi in which 48 men lost their lives. Naturally we were all a little nervous. On the next to the last salvo a flare-back occurred on his gun due to failure of the gas ejection system. Through the haze and smoke, I saw this man hold up his hand for silence, send his powder car below, trip his auxiliary gas ejector and clear the bore. When everything was ready, he completed his load and we fired the salvo. I thought it was a fine piece of work and reported it to the captain. He apparently thought so, too, because he directed me to bring this man to meritorious mast. When I told the man he was to receive a commendation, he said, "Aw, Mr. Sabin, I don't want no commendation. That was just part of my training." After the ceremony was over, the captain said to him, "Tell me what made you act so magnificently in that emergency?" The old boatswain's mate replied: "Well, Captain, No. 1, I just got married and didn't want to leave the missus a widow so soon, and No. 2, we ain't finished our honeymoon yet." Maybe that man's reason for his action was quaint, but the action itself, born out of dedicated training, was not.

One of the qualities we Americans prize highly is loyalty. To the naval leader engaged in the business of human relations it is a fundamental requirement. Loyalty has often been referred to as a two-way street—and it certainly is. Some people think it is much easier to display loyalty up than it is to display it down. I don't think it makes much difference. Loyalty is not a chore or a task. Loyalty is an instinctive act of fidelity and support. Right after I graduated from the Naval Academy I had a demonstration of wonderful loyalty. A week after I reported to my ship, my division officer, a lieutenant, was detached. I found myself as a fresh young ensign in command of a division of 90 men and a 3-gun, 14-inch, 50-caliber turret. In theoretical education, I suppose I was ready. In practical experience, I was nowhere near ready. My two leading petty officers were a chief boatswain's mate and a chief turret captain. They knew I wasn't ready. They could have left me to learn the hard way; but their inherent loyalty would not permit them to let their new division officer make foolish mistakes in front of his men. So they came down to see me. Very tactfully but firmly they offered to help me and I accepted. The boatswain's mate took me all over the forecastle, showed me how all the running gear operated, how to get the ship underway, how to bring it to anchor, how to moor, how to clear a fouled anchor, everything there was to learn about deck seamanship. The turret captain gave up his liberty in the evenings to instruct me in the turret machinery. When they got through with me, believe me, I was qualified. Now, those men didn't do that out of any particular affection for young Ensign Sabin. They did it because he was a symbol of something of which they were proud, naval leadership. They, too, were leaders in their own right. Their action was one of instinctive fidelity and effective support, of loyalty at its unselfish best.

One might say, "If a fellow is reasonably intelligent dedicated, and loyal, that's about all he needs in dealing with his fellow men as a leader." Well, it isn't quite. In the armed service, and especially in this beloved Navy of ours, we like to look up to our leaders. We like to respect them. And the quality they must have to command our respect is integrity. Integrity is character. It is honor, honesty, and decency all wrapped up in one package. Integrity never has to beg respect. It gets respect right off the bat. My father, who was a businessman, used to tell me to take a periodic stock inventory of my personal characteristics, "Add up your personal assets and debits," he said. And he added, "Make it an honest inventory because if you don't you will be sacrificing the most important thing in your life, integrity.

Finally, there is one more attribute which will pay off if you add it to your personal qualifications. It is the quality of articulation. Articulation is not verbosity. Articulation is simply the ability to express one's self with clarity both orally and in writing. It is the ability to give a command that is instantly understood. It is the ability to present a viewpoint or write an order or a letter in simple, definite, and understandable terms. Articulation is the art of clear expression. It can be acquired, it is worth acquiring. One of the most eloquent examples of simple articulation I ever encountered occurred in early 1955 when I commanded an amphibious task force engaged in removing Chinese Nationalist troops and civilians from two little islands called the Tachens about 20 miles southeast of Shanghai off the mainland of China. The people involved in the incident were not service people. They were Chinese civilians. It is a tragic story. I cite it only because, in the simplicity of its articulation, it is the complete story of a man's supreme sacrifice for the freedom of people he loved.

The head of one of the Chinese families was an old man sick and dying. He did not want to be evacuated. He wanted to stay on the island and die. "Why," he asked, "should I go to Formosa simply to take up a plot of ground to be buried? According to Chinese tradition of family fealty, if he stayed someone would have to stay with him. He begged his family to break the tradition and leave him. But they would not. Finally, on the last day of the evacuation, it was decided that two of his sons would remain with him. When the rest of the family left, the old man said to his sons, "You must not let the family leave without saying goodby. Go down to the boats, tell them goodby and come back to me." The sons did so and when they returned they found the old man hanging from a rafter, dead. And on his tunic was pinned a note in Chinese characters which read as follows: "The last obstacle in the way of your liberty has now been removed. Go to freedom."

Now how do these simple qualities of naval leadership which I have mentioned, and tried to illustrate, relate to naval service in an era of mach 2 airplanes, ballistic missiles, nuclear-powered ships, and space explorations? Well, for one thing, as long as we have human beings on this earth we shall have human relations. And as long as we have to deal with our fellow men we shall require leaders who possess basic human qualities. Even if we should ever reach an era of complete pushbutton activity somebody must know what button to push and what will happen when that button is pushed. Fantastic capability can be built into a machine. But it won't do a bit of good if the wrong button is pushed.

Now, in conclusion let me remind you that the world is locked in a struggle between two diametrically opposite political ideologies. On the one hand is democracy in which the state is subordinate to the will of the people. On the other hand is communism, in which the state is supreme and the people have no will. All of our cherished heritages of collective liberty, individual freedoms, and the dignity of man are at stake in this struggle. In essence, the choice is freedom, or slavery.

The Secretary General of the North Atlantic Council, Mr. Paul-Henri Spaak, said in a recent article: "When all is said and done, the great thing is not to know who will mine the most coal or produce the greatest quantity of steel, however important this may be. What really counts is to know under what regime mankind is most likely to fill its destiny without loss of freedom or dignity." The regime under which our great Nation has flourished has been one of steadfast adherence to the preservation of freedom and dignity. Because we have been willing to fight and die for those principles we have fashioned a way of life that for us is good and satisfying. And we are determined to keep it that way.

Your generation will one day be guiding the political destiny of our Nation. Young officers like you in our Military Establishment of today will be our military leaders of tomorrow. Around your shoulders will be draped the mantle of heavy responsibility for the grave decisions which will so profoundly affect the security of our Nation. Start today to prepare yourselves. Dedicate yourselves to your duties with constant awareness that it is your country you are serving, and its freedom you are protecting. That is your challenge. I know you will accept it.

Congratulations and good luck.

MY TRUE SECURITY—ESSAY BY JOSEPH RUSSIN, LARAMIE, WYO.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, in the early days of this week there was held in the Nation's Capital a competition by 50 champions of the 50 States of the Union who had written essays and delivered orations on the subject, "The Challenge to Personal Security." I have in my hand the remarks of the winner from the State of Wyoming. He is Mr. Joseph Russin.

Joe Russin, for the past several years, has won almost every kind of competition of this type sponsored by almost every national organization out in our area. His speech is entitled "My True Security." I thought enough of it that I, like the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], wanted to share it with all Senators. In his remarks, young Joe Russin is groping for what he calls true security. He wonders if perhaps our society is not putting up a false front in its own light which undermines the security of all of us. Says Joe:

> The rapid emergence of the "organization man" and the stress on material methods may be just an escape from reality—an escape into a delusion of security.

His plea to his elders—particularly to the Members of this body—is that we not lose sight of the importance of the individual and of the responsibility of the individual to make his peace with himself, not to talk through slogans, not to being afraid of criticism, not to having a crutch, but to tolerating differences of opinion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete remarks of Joe Russin, entitled "My True Security," be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MY TRUE SECURITY—THE AMERICAN WAY

(By Joseph Russin, Wyoming State winner, University High School, Laramie, Wyo.)

Somewhere on a bleak Arctic outpost, a radar scope scans and re-scans the snow-filled, cheerless skies. It searches for a tiny object we hope will never appear. The search is for a tiny enemy missile which could instantly destroy our "security."

This security we seek to preserve means many things. It involves not only national safety, but our homes, our jobs, our health, our main streets, and our system of free enterprise.

All these apparent securities, however, can only offer temporary peace of mind. They all depend on external conditions. They give the individual a sense of well-being in the same way that a fresh coat of paint hides a crumbling wall. The solution is only temporary and exterior. The individual is not forced to see himself for what he really is, but rather is allowed to escape the difficult job of facing the core of the problem—his inner self and its strength or weakness.

I am a teenager. I am told that I appear very relaxed and at ease. Inside, however, I am torn with turmoil. I am blindly groping for acceptance, for encouragement, and for the truth about myself. I am unsure of my actions, and insecure in my social status. I find that the easy way to temporary security is to follow the fads, to imitate the group, and to avoid the insecurity of individuality. For these reasons I wear loud socks. I struggle through bizarre ice cream concoctions. I speak the "crazy" language of jazz. To hide my insecurity, I put up a front.

I wonder if perhaps our society is also putting up a front. The rapid emergence of the "organization man" and the stress on material benefits may be just an escape from reality—an escape into a delusion of security. We are afraid to search for real security—afraid to look inwards, or to put ourselves in positions that will challenge us as individuals to draw on inner values and resources. We are afraid to be on our own. Many of us have never known the terror born of the necessity to act alone and accept all consequences, with everything at stake. Our protective society spares us the agony of complete independence and responsibility. There is always some crutch to rely upon. Many of us are even afraid to search for God in His essence. It is one thing to passively attend church on Sundays and give large offerings. It is quite another to experience the whole nature of God in a seemingly hopeless situation—to search alone, without the benefit of any help but one's faith and initiative, for God's wisdom.

For me there may come a day when I will be forced to stand alone on a bloody battlefield in the defense of my country. My conscience will be my only guide and strength. How will I react? Will I have the courage and the conviction to sacrifice my life for the freedom of others? I hope such wisdom will be mine. Yet I have never been tested. I am still young and only vicariously aware of the trials of life. I have yet to experience for myself true challenge and terror. Searching through my present insecurity, I must learn for myself the values of self-reliance and initiative that I eventually hope will build a strong character. Unlike the radar station which tried to keep security by not finding anything on the screen, I must find these strengths on the screen of my consciousness to discover my true security.

APPOINTMENT OF RETIRED MILITARY PERSONNEL TO CIVILIAN FUNCTIONS

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, not many days ago the Senate was discussing the question of retired military personnel increasingly taking over the civil functions of the Government. I have received a letter dated June 27, 1960, from Representative NEAL SMITH, of Iowa, on that question. Representative SMITH points up his deep concern particularly with the infringement of the military through purchasing power capacities in nonmilitary areas. The burden of the letter urges upon the Senate a closer scrutiny of this problem, and action upon it in the next session.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., June 27, 1960.

HON. GALE W. MCGEE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MCGEE: I want to congratulate you for focusing attention on the increasing influence of the professional military minds in our Government. Good military officer training is a full-time and lifetime job and involves the arts of destruction rather than creation. When persons well trained in this important field have control over the purchasing use of more than 50 percent of our total Government budget, the danger of too much influence by the military mind is apparent. What we should fear under those circumstances has been happening; to wit, they spread their influence into domination of civil functions.

I have felt that the real root of the power we must fear lies in the military making their own purchases. Without the power to spend so much money, they could not expand beyond their necessary functions so easily. This means a central civilian purchasing agency, such as the GSA, making the purchases rather than the military procurement officers doing so. Incidentally, I have recently learned that this has been the procedure in Great Britain for many generations, while they were spending so much on military weapons.

I have been working on this matter for many months, and the product of this concern and work has been the introduction of two bills, H.R. 12344 and H.R. 12345. They were only introduced recently, and there is not sufficient time for action in this Congress, but I hope you will look at them and consider improving them and introducing them next year. If I am reelected, they will be reintroduced in the House.

You will notice one bill was referred to the Government Operations and one to the Armed Services Committee. I am sure the leadership of the Government Operations Committee will be sympathetic and will not protect the evils of the present situation. The best hope for the other bill as a practical matter is probably that it pass the Senate first.

I am writing a similar letter to Senators ENGLE, GRUENING, and CARROLL, for they joined you in the Senate debate that prompted this letter to you.

Again, I congratulate you on your work and leadership and hope you will pursue the matter further with legislation striking at the root of the power endangering the supremacy of the civilian over the military.

Respectfully,

NEAL SMITH,
Member of Congress.

PURCHASES OF NEW GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES WHEN SAME ITEMS IN NEW CONDITION ARE AVAILABLE

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this time I may speak for 20 minutes on the question of purchases of new Government supplies when the same items are available as surplus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in the hearings of the Subcommittee on the Impact of Defense Procurement of the Joint Economic Committee which were held at the end of January, I raised a question with witnesses from the Bureau of the Budget concerning the concurrent buying and selling of supplies by Government agencies, or the buying by Government procurement agencies of new supplies at the same time that there were excess or surplus supplies of the same items in good condition which were available for their use.

I asked Mr. Staats and Mr. Mullins—page 231, hearings—the following question:

> Have you looked into the question as to whether at the time these items (surplus or excess) are being disposed of there is a simultaneous purchase of substantially similar items?

Mr. Mullins replied that—

> One of the things that we are doing is to determine how frequently material is purchased when it could be obtained from excess (pp. 231–232).

I had become personally interested in this because of a scandal in my own State, where surplus supplies were given to local communities and ended up in the hands of private contractors. Some of them were very costly items, including earth-moving equipment. When I asked the General Accounting Office to do a study of some of these items, to see whether there was concurrent buying and selling, as well as improper use of surpluses, they found that in half the cases tested the same item was being bought new that had been disposed of as surplus.

I am very happy to say that the Budget Bureau has now completed their own study on this question and that on June 23 of this year Mr. Staats—at my request—made available to me the conclusions of the Budget Bureau study. Before I go into it, however, I want to give full credit to the Budget Bureau for the study, and also to a number of Congressmen and Senators whose work over the years is in large part responsible for this action by the Budget Bureau.

In particular I want to mention the amendments of Senator O'MAHONEY and Representative MCCORMACK and Representative CURTIS on defense supply functions, and their persistence year after year in trying to make certain that the spirit and letter of their amendments on supply activities were being carried out.

In addition, there has been a stream of letters over the years from Representatives JOHN MCCORMACK, THOMAS CURTIS, and CLARENCE BROWN, among others, and from Senator LAUSCHE and myself to the Defense Department, the Budget Bureau, the Council of Economic Advisers, the General Services Administration, and a host of others, urging action to implement the McCormack-Curtis-O'Mahoney amendments to streamline the supply functions of the Government. Copies of some of these letters are to be found on pages 163 and 218–231 of the "Staff Report of the Joint Economic Committee on the Impact of Defense Procurement."

While I want to compliment the Budget Bureau for their study, and especially Mr. Taylor, who made the report, and Messrs. Mullins and Staats, who helped and encouraged it, and to say how very important it is, I also want to give credit where credit is due to those Representatives and Senators who have again and again and again called the attention of various Government agencies to the defects in the supply systems and in the handling of surplus supplies. Without their persistence over the years, little progress would have been made.

I also wish to give credit to one of the unsung heroes around Capitol Hill, Mr. Ray Ward, a member of the staff of the House Committee on Government Operations, who has worked ceaselessly for at least 10 years on this subject, and has shown great technical skill and has been of great assistance and of inestimable aid to those of us, both in the House and in the Senate, who have pursued this subject. It was my good fortune to have Mr. Ward serve as a temporary member of the staff of the Joint Economic Committee, loaned to us from the staff of the House Committee on Government Operations. He worked with us for some months. No one could have been more energetic, more public spirited, more honorable, more intelligent, and more persistent. I think often we do not give sufficient credit to the staff members, who, working quietly in the background, are devoted to the public service. I am happy to acknowledge publicly my indebtedness to Mr. Ray Ward. He is one of the great public servants of this generation.

THE LAW AND THE POLICY

This test and the way it was set up are very important. The policy of the Government for at least a decade has been that "excess property should be the first source of supply." Supposedly that is the Government's policy.

Section 202(a) of Public Law 152, the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, states:

> In order to minimize expenditures for property, the Administrator shall prescribe policies and methods to promote the maximum utilization of excess property by executive agencies, and he shall provide for the transfer of excess property among Federal agencies and to the organizations specified in section 109(f).

In addition to that, section 3(g) of the same act provides that:

> The term "surplus property" means any excess property not required for the needs and the discharge of the responsibilities of all Federal agencies, as determined by the Administrator.

In other words, the law is that no property shall be declared surplus unless no agency within the Government can use it or needs it. In addition, the law requires that the Administrator of the General Services Administration shall prescribe policies and methods to promote the maximum use of excess property within the Government and for its transfer. Finally, it is the law and policy of the Government to "minimize expenditures for property" by using up the excess supplies and that "excess property should be the first source of supply."

While I was not a supporter of Calvin Coolidge, and in many ways did not admire him—particularly, I did not admire his political and economic views—I think one phrase he used was pretty good advice; namely, "Use it up, wear it out, make it do."

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. There is absolutely no doubt about the question that if that concept were pursued, it would save this Government many billions of dollars every year.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think that is true.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The Senator from Illinois is one of those who supported the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Louisiana to try to prevent more than $100 million worth of additional Army barracks being constructed every year, when we have enough Army housing standing in this country to provide quarters for an Army of probably 10 million. Yet the Army wants to tear down old barracks buildings and put up new ones.

The Senator from Illinois knows it does not make a tougher soldier if he is housed in a new, steam-heated building. As a matter of fact, the Russians are quartered in much more cramped barracks. They march them down the center of a town, with towels slung over their shoulders, in order to take baths, and do not provide their soldiers with all the comforts and niceties with which we provide our soldiers.

The Senator from Illinois is one of those who supported my amendment in an effort to try to save $100 million a year by requiring that the Army use existing barracks. We were defeated in that effort, because some persons argued that some of the Armed Forces personnel were women and inasmuch as there were a few WACS in the Army there should be provided very fine, new brick buildings for everybody.

The Senator from Illinois recalls that; does he not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I recall it very well. Also, I think it is true that the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Illinois were quartered in Quonset huts during the early 1940's, and found them adequate.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Many of us know of the services the Senator from Illinois rendered to his country, at considerable personal loss to himself.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Illinois does not deserve any special credit for that.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Is not the Senator of the opinion that one is a better soldier if he learns to "rough it" while he is in the service?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I must say that even the barracks already provided and available in this country are better than anything the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Louisiana lived in while we were engaged in overseas activities during the war. The boys would be just as good soldiers if they did not have shiny, new barracks, and at that same time we would save a lot of money for the Government by using older barracks.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Many of us have been critical—severely critical—of the failure to "use it up, wear it out, make it do." We have been critical of the fact that some $10 to $12 billion per year of Government supplies are being sold or given away as surplus. When they are sold, they bring back an average of only 2 cents on the dollar.

We have been critical of the fact that the Government is to get rid of some $60 billion of surpluses over the next 3 to 4 years at the rate of $10 to $12 to $15 billion per year. We have been critical that the Government realizes only about 2 cents on the dollar—of acquisition cost—for these surplus supplies when they are sold. We have been critical because we know, both from personal knowledge and from the long list of items in the excess lists put out each month, that there must be literally millions of dollars of supplies which are sold off or given away as surplus which the Government and its agencies—and particularly the Department of Defense—should "use up, wear out, and make do."

HOW THE STUDY WAS SET UP

The Budget Bureau ran a test on the question of concurrent buying and selling within Government agencies. They selected three regions of the country, centering on New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, and they limited their test to the period July 1, 1959 to January 31, 1960. The test covered Government agency procurement activities in 13 States. About 100 procurement agencies in each region took part in the test.

I think I should make absolutely clear here that the Government procurement agencies were not confined to the Department of Defense. They included all Government services. The excess supplies were largely generated by the Department of Defense, I may say, but other than Defense agencies took part in the procurement.

The Budget Bureau limited the test to personal property items—the most common type of procurement of day-to-day necessities of Government agencies—which were available as excess during this period and which were in new condition or in repaired but excellent condition. In other words, these were not worn out items. They were new items or items which had been repaired, were in excellent condition, and could have been used by Government agencies had they had the will and determination to do so.

Furthermore, the excess materials had to be available within the general region of the test so that they avoided items which were in excess in the New York region but were needed, say, only in the California region.

The test, therefore, met the following conditions:

First. The excess materials must have been in new or in repaired but excellent condition.

Second. They must have been available in the region where the materials were needed.

Third. They must have been available at the same time that the items were needed by agency procurement officers.

In other words, there was a space test, a time test, and a first-class condition test.

From these procurement agencies and during the period of time involved, the Budget Bureau selected 238 items which were needed and for which there was available at the time and in the region excess Government property in new or excellent condition which could have been obtained and used by the procurement agency instead of buying the item new or going without.

FINDS OF THE TEST

I have gone into these preliminary matters concerning both the law and the way the study was set up in order to show the context in which the Budget Bureau study took place. What did they find?

After winnowing out the various procurement actions to those in which excess items in new or excellent condition were available, the Budget Bureau then tested them to see whether or not the agency had used the excess items instead of making a new procurement. As the report states:

> When the agency reports showed that a requirement existed for an item at the same time it was available as excess, it was counted as an opportunity for utilization. When the item was not obtained from excess, it was counted as a missed opportunity for utilization.

I think the results of the study are extraordinarily interesting. The study showed the following score:

In the New York region, of 100 opportunities for utilization, only 33 were realized, while 67 were missed.

In other words, in two-thirds of the cases in the New York region, covering the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, although there were excess items in stock available for use by other Government agencies, I repeat, in two-thirds of those cases the procurement officers did not utilize the excess stock, but bought new material at additional cost to the Government.

In the Chicago region, of 57 opportunities for utilization, 8 were realized and 49 were missed.

I am sorry to say that the Chicago region has the poorest score of any of the regions, but I think I should say the Chicago region includes not only Illinois, but also the States of Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin. It is quite possible that the Government procurement officers in these other States may—I repeat, may—have been responsible for the major portion. I think it is extraordinary that in this region only about 15 percent of the opportunities for using Government excess supplies were utilized.

In the San Francisco region, of 81 opportunities for utilization, 42 opportunities were realized but 39 were missed.

In other words, in the San Francisco region in about half the cases, although items were available for use, the procurement officers went out and bought new items and disregarded the excess surplus which was available.

In the three regions, of 238 opportunities, only 83 were realized but 155 were missed.

As the report points out:

> Even when excess property items are available as excess at the same time agencies have requirements for them, the chances for utilization are no better than 1 in 3.

The Budget Bureau calls this situation "serious." I call it shocking. It is clear that neither the law nor the policy is being carried out. However, since their study was somewhat limited in scope and because some qualifications about its results are made, I will place in the RECORD the copy of the letter from Mr. Staats and a copy of the summary report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my correspondence with Mr. Staats and a copy of the summary report of the Bureau of the Budget be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table giving the figures be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Opportunities for use of excess Government supplies by Government agencies in 3 regions in the period July 1, 1959, to Jan. 31, 1960, and number of times realized or missed

Region	Opportunities to procure needed items from excess Government supplies	Opportunities realized	Opportunities missed
New York	100	33	67
Chicago	57	8	49
San Francisco	81	42	39
Total	238	83	155
Percent	100	35	65

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have summarized these figures in what I have said hitherto.

What were the kinds of items which were available in new condition or in excellent condition and which were in excess and could have been used? The Budget Bureau has made available to me lists of about 97 of these items in these three areas. One can see that they are very common items, items which are constantly bought and used and which both under the law and the policy which has been in effect for 11 years should have been used.

Let me read some of them. Jute twine, manila rope, chain hoists, copper tubing, insecticides (DDT), linseed oil, sponges, scissors, gauze, tires, paper, cotton duck tarpaulins—that is the famous cotton duck—we have enough cotton duck to put under tents an army of millions of men. Fiberboard boxes, envelopes, soap, cotton cloth, men's raincoats, women's safety oxfords, hand hammers, screwdrivers, padlocks, sunglasses, flashlights, accounting machines, generator sets, and crane shovels. That is an expensive item.

Air compressors. That is an expensive item.

Folding beds, ditching machines. That is an expensive item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may be permitted to proceed. How long will the Senator require?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Approximately 7 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Illinois may proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

Other items included small scales, burlap bags, funnels, brass pipe, paraffin wax and pliers.

A SHOCKING SITUATION

Mr. President, this is a shocking situation which the Budget Bureau has brought to light by its study. It confirms the findings of the study made by the General Accounting Office at my request when they tested 14 items and found that there had been simultaneous buying and selling of half of them. We have all known that this goes on. We all know that it is against both our policy and the law. It must be stopped.

The Budget Bureau report cites some of the reasons why this has occurred and also makes certain recommendations about how to stop it.

I believe that with $10 to $12 billion of surplus supplies being sold or given away each year by the Government, with the purchase by the military of over $20 billion of new supplies per year, and with additional amounts purchased by other Government agencies which must amount to a few additional billions, that we must insist that the law and the policy be carried out.

The law is clear. Enforcement is needed. The Budget Bureau makes some specific recommendations. Frankly, I think these recommendations which are to be found in their report are too milktoastish in nature.

I would add to them the following:

First. Either do away with entirely or limit to token amounts, the reimbursable requirements for use of items which are excess. While some progress has been made, a good many items are not now used because the agency which wants them must reimburse the holding agency from existing appropriated funds for their use.

Second. The supply systems of the military must be integrated under the O'Mahoney amendment of 1952 and the McCormack-Curtis amendment of 1958.

Third. There must be further merging and integrating of procurement, transportation, disposal, and distribution activities. Too often, agencies doing similar jobs and performing similar functions have not the least idea what the other is doing.

Fourth. Before excess and surplus supplies can be adequately used, the Government must know what it has on hand. Just as one example, there are millions and perhaps billions of dollars of Government-owned equipment and supplies in the hands of private contractors who have contracts with the Government. During our hearings in January, we were unable to find out even the total of these amounts.

This is Government property in the hands of contractors, and the Government does not know how much is in the hands of these private contractors. There is very great danger that this material will wind up permanently in the possession of the private contractors and not be recovered, or that it will be declared surplus even though needed elsewhere.

Fifth. Finally, I think that each agency has got to get very tough with procurement officers. Anyone who misses an opportunity to use existing excess equipment in new or excellent condition must be called on the carpet for that failure. I am not a vindictive man.

Mr. President, in my exposure of military waste I have tried not to be personal in the comments I have made. I have shielded procurement officers and I have shielded contractors, because I have not been interested in smearing individuals but I have been interested in correcting abuses. But I think a few heads should roll—figuratively, of course, and not literally. If only a few of the guilty parties were fired, we would see an immediate improvement. They must be required to "use it up, make it do, and wear it out."

Such measures as these, along with the proper cataloging of supplies and standardizing them, and setting up central inventory control points, could save tens upon tens of millions upon millions of dollars merely by using what we have.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an elaboration which I have prepared of the need for a central inventory which, with the new electronic computers, could be used to set up a running tabulation of the supplies which are available which could then be utilized.

There being no objection, the information was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE NEED FOR A CENTRAL INVENTORY AND CONTROL SUPPLY ITEMS

We are told that the military has spent from $150 million to $200 million for the development of a catalog system which completely identifies each individual item in the supply system and gives it an identification number—an 11 digit number—with 1 number for each item held. These can be transmitted electronically on computers.

We are glad that this has happened, but it has taken a very long time and has happened very reluctantly.

In 1945 President Roosevelt directed a letter to the Bureau of the Budget saying that it was necessary to develop such a catalog and that there had been a lack of knowledge during the war of what we had and where.

President Truman renewed this request when he succeeded to the Presidency.

However, this was continually resisted by the services because they saw in it and knew that it would bring a greater unification and integration of supplies and possibly of the services. So we are only now completing this cataloging system.

Now it is or will soon be possible to say how many of each of these 3.4 million items we have, and we should be able to take a complete inventory of items and match the number of items on hand with the needs of the Government. We should be able to find out whether or not we have a 1-year, 5-year, or 10-year supply of each.

Following this there should be set up central inventory control points for the Government as a whole—military and civilian. Now, we have not a central control but a group of control points and it is estimated that there may be as many as 30 control points within the various services just for general stores items. This means needless duplication.

When we know how much we have on hand (supply) then we can determine the demand for each of these items.

When procurement officers need anything, they can find out whether or not the Government has it and where it is and how much of it there is.

Then, we should require that this be the source of supply for the entire Government for each of these items, and that no new procurement can be made until such time as these individual items have a low inventory level.

We can, also, as time goes on, cut down on the storage points, unify the storage points, decide where each item and in how many places it should be stored and available.

Procurement officers must be required to go to this source first. They must not be allowed to procure any of these items except from existing sources until it has been established that the inventory levels are low enough, that new purchases are really justified.

Furthermore, before they are allowed to procure new items, it should have to be established by responsible individuals that there is a genuine emergency that cannot be met except by procuring them new.

Finally, these items should then, with all of these protections, be issued without payment or reimbursement to those who need them.

We now have a catalog and we must proceed to these further steps if we are to "use up, wear out, and make do" the tremendous quantity of excess and surplus items now in the Government.

No pride of service or agency should be allowed to prevent this from happening.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, Government supplies belong to the people and to the taxpayers. They are willing to shoulder whatever burdens are necessary to carry on proper Government activities. They have a right to know that their money is being spent usefully and efficiently.

We made a forward step yesterday when we put into effect a 3-percent cut in the amounts appropriated for procurement in the Defense appropriation, and in the colloquy with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] I developed the fact that this meant that it was a mandate to the Defense Department to carry out its procurement functions more efficiently. If the Defense Department and the other Government departments will only buckle down to this job, they can save not merely $400 million, but they can save billions of dollars. Those billions can be used for more adequate national defense, for additional marines and troops in the Army, combat troops in the Army, for missiles, for submarines, and for the better supplying of troops with modern weapons, and for the other needs of the military and civilian agencies. One of the shames in what is happening is that the Government agencies are wasting precious economic lifeblood of this country, and in the process stinting the military forces of the equipment and the troops which are needed to defend the Nation adequately.

I yield the floor.

JUNE 17, 1960.

Mr. ELMER STAATS,
Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Budget, Bureau of the Budget, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. STAATS: When you and Mr. Mullins appeared before the Special Subcommittee on Defense Procurement of the Joint Economic Committee on January 29, 1960, I raised the question about concurrent buying and selling of similar or identical items by various agencies of the Government. In this connection I refer you to pages 228, and on, of the printed hearings.

At that time Mr. Mullins indicated that the Bureau of the Budget was making a study as to whether or not Government agencies were actually purchasing items which were available as excess. He indicated that he hoped the analysis being made would give some "definitive idea of how prevalent it is (concurrent buying and selling) and what the reasons are for it."

I have long had an intense interest in this particular matter and would like to have a copy of the analysis which the Bureau has made on this subject. I think this is important in connection with our committee work.

With best wishes.

Faithfully,

PAUL H. DOUGLAS.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D.C., June 23, 1960.

Hon. PAUL H. DOUGLAS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR DOUGLAS: This is in response to your letter of June 17, 1960, in which you requested a copy of the analysis which we conducted in order to determine the extent to which new property is being purchased by the Government when suitable excess property is available. The test which was described in our letter to you of February 19, 1960, has been completed. Enclosed is a copy of the report in which the results are summarized.

Our analysis consisted of a limited sampling of items known to be available from excess during the 7-month period ending January 31, 1960. A total of 238 opportunities to use excess property in lieu of new procurement was identified during the test involving Federal activities in the 13 States served by regional offices of the General Services Administration in New York, Chicago, and San Franicsco.

We consider the conditions disclosed by the test to be serious although final conclusions cannot be drawn from such a limited sample. The summary report together with pertinent information concerning each case tested have been sent to the heads of agencies concerned. The head of each agency has been requested to see that a similar but more comprehensive test of excess utilization is conducted promptly, that any unsatisfactory results disclosed thereby are acted upon and that a summary of the findings and actions taken is sent to the Bureau of the Budget. We intend to follow up.

As you know, several administrative and policy improvements have been initiated since the period covered by our test. The principal change is that excess property, including excess property carried in working capital funds can be transferred without the reimbursement requirements which have prevented or hindered utilization of excess property. We are hopeful that future followup tests will disclose that the condition has been substantially improved due to the actions which have been taken.

Sincerely yours,

ELMER STAATS,
Deputy Director.

SUMMARY REPORT ON EXCESS PERSONAL PROPERTY UTILIZATION TEST

Problem: To determine whether effective controls have been established to assure that excess personal property is considered the first source of supply in agency procurement programs.

BACKGROUND

As a continuation of its study directed toward an action program to identify and remove obstacles which stand in the way of maximum utilization of excess personal property, the Bureau has completed the survey to determine whether executive agencies have established and are maintaining effective controls to assure that excess personal property is considered the first source of supply in agency procurement programs. The survey consisted of a simple utilization test conducted among agency procurement activities located in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, California, Arizona, and Nevada. Personal property items were selected in each of these regions which were available as excess in the period covered by the test and which are known to have common and widespread use throughout the Federal Government. With but few exceptions only excess items which had been reported in new condition or in repaired but excellent condition were selected for inclusion in the test.

Each procurement activity which participated in the test (about 100 in each region) was asked to submit information for each of the items selected which would show whether any quantity of the item had been acquired during the test period (July 1, 1959, to January 31, 1960) and if so, the date or dates on which it had been acquired and whether it had been purchased commercially or obtained from other Government agencies including acquisitions from excess property. The staff analysis consisted of matching the date of acquisition against the date or dates the items were available as excess. When the agency reports showed that a requirement existed for an item at the same time it was available as excess, it was counted as an opportunity for utilization. When the item was not obtained from excess, it was counted as a missed opportunity for utilization.

FINDINGS

The tabulation of responses from procurement activities showed that more opportunities for utilization were missed than were realized. Of the 100 opportunities for utilization reported in the New York region only 33 were realized whereas 67 were missed. Of the 59 opportunities for utilization reported in the Chicago region, 8 were realized and 49 were missed. Of the 81 opportunities for utilization reported in the San Francisco region, 42 were realized and 39 were missed. The total reported in the three regions shows that only 83 out of 238 opportunities for utilization were realized. These reports indicate that even when excess property items are available as excess at the same time agencies have requirements for them, the chances for utilization are no better than 1 in 3. Although the survey was not designed to segregate utilization data on excess property items of high unit cost as compared to items of low unit cost, our discussions with representatives of GSA and the participating agencies would tend to support a conclusion that utilization experience may be somewhat better on items of high unit cost. Excess machine tools, construction equipment, automotive equipment, office equipment, and the like, find a readier market among Government agencies than excess items of the type normally stocked in stores for issue to using activities. However, the latter, a high percentage of which are common use items, represent a multimillion dollar utilization potential. The data produced by this study indicate that utilization of such excess items gets too little consideration by procurement activities.

The Bureau staff contacted agency field procurement activities to ascertain the causes of their failure to use excess property in lieu of new procurement. The following are the causes most frequently offered:

1. A frank admission that the procurement activity was not aware that the items were available as excess at the time the purchases were made.

2. Item descriptions on excess property lists, although much improved recently, are often too incomplete to determine whether the item offered is identical to or acceptable as a substitute for the item needed.

3. Condition reports on excess property are frequently not reliable. Several of the activities contacted recited instances where excess property items reported to be in good as new condition were, when received, found to be worthless because of age deterioration, exposure to weather, storage damage, key components missing, etc.

4. Delivery time is frequently too slow for short procurement leadtime items.

5. Internal inventory level standards frequently limit the quantity of an excess item which can be acquired to a 60- or 90-day supply.

With respect to reason No. 1 it is clear that the answer lies in the improvement of communications within the agency so that information on the availability of excess property reaches the right people at the right time. With respect to reasons Nos. 2, 3, and 4, the GSA and the DOD are jointly striving toward improvement and although the good progress to date is encouraging, continuing management pressure and surveillance will be necessary to achieve the degree of item description adequacy, condition report reliability and faster service essential to really make excess property the first source of supply in lieu of new procurement. With respect to No. 5 above, GSA is developing revised inventory or stock level standards to provide a degree of flexibility sufficient to encourage rather than discourage the use of excess property to meet longer term requirements for repetitively used stock items.

CONCLUSION

The facts developed in this test indicate that excess personal property is not considered the first source of supply in agency procurement programs, particularly for standard stores stock items. Although most agencies have policies intended to assure that maximum use is made of excess property in lieu of new procurement, this survey shows we are falling far short of this objective in actual practice. The data reported by the procurement activities participating in this test indicate that the chances of an excess personal property item being utilized in lieu of new procurement are no better than one out of three—even when the excess item is available at the same time the requirement exists.

RECOMMENDATIONS

To provide a more favorable climate for utilization of excess personal property in lieu of new procurement, it is recommended that the head of each agency:

1. Make clear to his organization that he is personally interested in seeing that excess property is used wherever practicable to carry out agency programs.

2. Examine internal policies with the objective of modifying those which may adversely affect maximum utilization. For example, inventory level policies may need to be modified to authorize temporary penetration of stock level ceilings to permit acquisition of excess property; or lines of authority may need to be clarified to assure that adequate authority exists at the various organization levels to acquire excess property; or internal financial and administrative controls may need to be examined for consistency with the new Government-wide policy relating to reimbursement for the transfer of excess property.

3. Examine lines of communication at each organizational level to make sure that GSA information on the availability of excess property gets to the people who make procurement commitments.

4. Followup on performance to see that agency policies on the maximum use of excess property in lieu of new procurement are being carried out. A simple utilization test, such as the one covered by this report, would be effective for this purpose.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4 OF ACT OF JANUARY 21, 1929 (48 U.S.C. 354A(C))

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3545) to amend section 4 of the act of January 21, 1929 (48 U.S.C. 354a(c)), and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the second sentence of section 4 of the Act of January 21, 1929 (48 U.S.C. 354a (c)), is amended by inserting after the words "public auction" the first time they occur therein the words "or, in the case of a lease, to the person who submits the highest bid at a public auction or through sealed competitive bidding" and by deleting the words "public auction" the second time they appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "proposed sale or lease".

SEC. 2. The said Act is further amended by striking the words "Territory" or "Territorial" wherever they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the word "State".

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, the Senate passed S. 3545 to amend section 4 of the act of January 21, 1929, which provides for a method for Alaska to lease its lands. The House approved the bill with a minor amendment, which does not change the bill in substance.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BECAUSE OF AGE

Mr. HART. Mr. President, an editorial in the Detroit Times of June 29 gives deserved praise to my distinguished colleague [Mr. MCNAMARA] for a bill he introduced to prohibit discrimination in employment because of age by employers with Government contracts.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the editorial be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR VETERAN WORKERS

While others soar to utopian heights in their plans for our older citizens, plans which usually consider only one phase of the problem such as health insurance and leave unanswered a host of others, Michigan's Senator MCNAMARA has introduced a bill which would relieve most of the headaches of our older people.

The bill would outlaw job discrimination for reasons of age in the personnel and employment practice of contractors holding Federal contracts.

Most healthy men don't want to be retired. They want to choose their own time of retirement.

Forcing them out of their jobs before they are ready contributes to the climate which experts on the problems of the aged are wrestling—frustration, boredom, loneliness, depleted and insufficient income.

Medical science has done much to relieve the physical impairments of age. A man's usefulness has extended far beyond the arbitrary limits for employment set by a social order when men were old at 40.

Employers who refuse to recognize this fact are cheating themselves. The vigorous older employee carries with him a bonus of experience, training, and judgment.

Nor do higher pension costs need be a bar to a sound hiring policy based upon ability rather than age. Extensive studies by the Labor Department indicate this is a false contention.

Government contracts are the backbone of many companies. It is fitting then that those whom the Government sustains should provide employment for older people who are able and who wish to work and maintain themselves in dignity.

Senator MCNAMARA's bill would provide this opportunity for reciprocity.

RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I welcome the news that House Joint Resolution 397, which is a bill to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, has been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Under this bill, we commit ourselves to parole into the United States over the next 24-month period 25 percent of the number of refugees admitted by other countries over the 30-month period beginning July 1, 1959, and ending June 30, 1962.

The bill provides that 500 of the refugees may be handicapped persons who, under ordinary circumstances might not be admissible but who can, with some assistance, become self-supporting or are members of family units capable of becoming self-supporting.

The bill also provides for the admission of Dutch ethnic refugees compelled to flee from Indonesia in the wake of the nationalist revolution. The number of Dutch refugees to be admitted shall be equal to the immigration quota for the Netherlands for 2 years. Finally, the bill provides for the admission of 2,000 residents of the Azores left homeless by the terrible earthquake of several years ago.

The prime credit for House Joint Resolution 397 belongs to Representative FRANCIS E. WALTER who is internationally known as the father of Displaced Persons Act and as the founder of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration. The Judiciary Committee, under the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, also deserves a world of credit for the conscientous manner in which it considered and amended the bill.

I am, of course, pleased that the revised version of House Joint Resolution 397 incorporates two of the proposals made in S. 3513, a refugee immigration bill which I introduced on May 10. In the original version of House Joint Resolution 397, the 25-percent formula was equated against the number of refugees admitted by other countries over the 2-year period commencing January 1, 1960. In my own bill, the period covered by the matching formula was dated back to July 1, 1959, which, as I have pointed out, is the opening day of World Refugee Year. This proposal has been adopted in the revised version of House Joint Resolution 397. This will have the effect of admitting at the most a few thousand more refugees to this country.

I am especially pleased that the revised bill has accepted my proposal for the admittance of 500 handicapped refugees. One of the wonderful things about World Refugee Year was that nations which had not previously accepted handicapped refugees opened their doors to them and made special provisions to assist them in their rehabilitation. In fairness to the United States, it should be pointed out that over the years since the Displaced Persons Act, at least some hundreds and possibly several thousands of handicapped refugees have been admitted to our country. In every case, however, the strongest personal and voluntary agency sponsorship was required for such refugees and even then certain categories remained inadmissible.

Under Public Law 85-316 tubercular refugees who were spouses of refugees already in this country were ruled admissible. But the revised version of House Joint Resolution 397 marks the first time that refugee legislation has contained a clause providing for the admission of all handicapped refugees considered difficult to resettle by the United Nations High Commissioner—with the sole exception of institutional cases, and with the sole provision that the refugees admitted be capable of becoming self-supporting or are members of self-supporting family units.

This is a modest bill. To be frank, I would have liked to see a bill of somewhat more generous scope, especially in view of our commitment to World Refugee Year. But I believe that House Joint Resolution 397 comes close to being the best that could realistically be hoped for, and I enthusiastically urge its passage. It will do much to alleviate the plight of the thousands of refugees who are homeless today because they loved freedom enough to sacrifice everything they possessed for it.

STRENGTHENING THE INTERNAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I had the pleasure yesterday of reporting to the Senate from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill S. 2652, a bill to strengthen the internal security of the United States.

This bill is the outgrowth of extensive hearings held by the Internal Security Subcommittee during the period from April 20, 1959, through May 15, 1959.

This bill, S. 2652, represents a nonpartisan effort to accomplish the enactment of what I believe to be the absolute minimum of internal security legislation which the Congress should enact at the present session. In jointly sponsoring this bill, the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] and I are engaged in a joint effort to present to the Senate the most noncontroversial and most urgently needed of the numerous suggestions for internal security legislation which were presented to the subcommittee and considered during the hearings to which I have referred.

I am hopeful that the leadership of the Senate will schedule this bill for consideration soon after we return following the summer recess; and of course, I expect that the bill will be fully debated and explained at that time. However, I want to give my colleagues at this time a sort of thumbnail sketch of the bill's provisions.

Basically, the bill deals with four separate matters. The first section of the bill has as its primary purpose extension of the espionage law to cover acts committed anywhere in the world in order to permit the prosecution in the United States of such offenses committed against the United States in foreign countries. The form of this provision is such that it would permit an indictment or information for any offense against the United States committed on the high seas or in the territory of a foreign country in spite of the fact that the offender or offenders might not be arrested and returned to the United States. Of course, there could be no trial of an offender in absentia; but by permitting an indictment to be brought before the offender had been returned to this country, extradition could be expedited.

Section 2 of the bill would amend the Foreign Agents Registration Act so as to make it applicable to domestic organizations which are substantially "supervised, directed, controlled, or financed" by a foreign government or foreign political party.

The objective of this proposed amendment is to clarify the so-called commercial exemptions of the Foreign Agents Registration Act so as to make it clear that in order for the agents of a foreign principal to be eligible for exemption from registering under the act it must be clear that the foreign principal is engaged in activities which are either private and nonpolitical and financial, or private and nonpolitical and mercantile.

At the present time, the term "foreign principal" as used in the Foreign Agents Registration Act is defined to include a domestic organization which is subsidized by a foreign government or a foreign political party. The Department of Justice has told us that there is great need for inclusion within the term "foreign principal" of domestic organizations which, though they may not be directly subsidized by a foreign government or foreign political party, are nevertheless substantially controlled, directed, or financed by a foreign government or foreign political party. Proof of such control, direction, or financing often is available where proof of subsidy is difficult or impossible. The provisions of section 2 of S. 2652 will correct this situation.

Section 3 of the bill would restore enforcibility to the organizing section of the Smith Act. Senators will remember that this section of the Smith Act was rendered unenforcible against current Communist activity by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Yates and Schneiderman et al. v. The United States (354 U.S. 298) wherein the Court held the word "organize" to be applicable only to the original organization or the complete reorganization of the Communist Party. Section 3 of S. 2652 would make the term "organize" applicable to the continued recruitment and expansion activities of the Communist Party and other subversive organizations.

I call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that enactment of section 3 of S. 2652 would carry out the recommendation of the American Bar Association that the Congress—

> Amend the Smith Act to define the word "organize" to include the recruitment of new party members, the formation of new party units, and the regrouping, expansion, or other activities of an organizational nature performed by members of existing clubs, cells, classes, and other units so as to insure the applicability of this section of the act to Communist actionists, agents, organizers, colonists, or members currently performing organizational work.

Section 4 and the remaining sections of S. 2652 include comprehensive provisions for the granting and withholding of passports by the Secretary of State, and embody the principle that the Secretary should have the right to deny passports to members of the Communist Party under procedures which will safeguard against any arbitrary action.

In this connection, the bill adopts the cutoff date approved by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the other body, making the authority to withhold or withdraw a passport contentioned upon a showing that the applicant or holder "is, or has been since January 1, 1951, a member of, or affiliated with, the Communist Party, or knowingly engages or has knowingly engaged, since January 1, 1951, in activities intended to further the international Communist movement." There is also a requirement for a finding by the Secretary of State, before a passport may be withheld or withdrawn, that the activities or presence abroad of the applicant or holder would be "harmful to the security of the United States."

Under the language of S. 2652, the Secretary of State would be specifically authorized to require that a passport applicant submit a written statement verified by oath or affirmation whether he is presently, or has been since January 1, 1951, a member of the Communist Party or a supporter of the international Communist movement.

The bill would also give the Secretary authority to withhold a passport in the national interest on the basis of confidential information where the Secretary certifies that it is contrary to the interests of this Nation that a passport be issued to the applicant. But in the very next sentence, the bill provides that—

> The Secretary of State shall not deny a passport to any person solely on the basis of membership in any organization, association with any individual or group, adherence to unpopular views, or criticisms of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies.

Senators will note that the bill amends both the Passport Act and the Immigration and Nationality Act, and would bring both these acts into line in conformity with the principles I have just explained.

With regard to blanket refusals of passports for travel to particular areas, the bill establishes the criterion of a predetermination by the Secretary of State either that first, the U.S. Government is unable to provide adequate protection to persons traveling in the particular country or area, due to the lack of diplomatic relations or due to disturbances within such country or area; or second, that travel of U.S. nationals to or in the particular country or area would seriously impair the foreign relations or foreign policy of the United States. Where such a determination has been made, and while it is in force, the bill would ban travel to that particular country or area by any U.S. citizen or national, except where the Secretary of State has approved a specific exception.

The bill goes on in section 6 to set up specific review procedure in passport cases, so as to guarantee a hearing to any applicant who has been refused a passport or the renewal or extension of a passport on any grounds other than those relating to citizenship or nationality. In connection with any such hearing, there is a specific requirement that the applicant shall be given reasonable notice of the reasons for the action taken on his application, shall have the privilege of being advised, assisted, or represented by counsel, shall have a reasonable opportunity to present all information relevant and material to the formulation of a recommendation in his case, and shall have the right to testify in his own behalf and to present witnesses or offer other evidence. Applicants are given the right to have a complete verbatim stenographic transcript of the hearing proceedings.

The bill contains a provision that proceedings in passport cases shall be conducted so as to protect from disclosure information which in the opinion of the Secretary of State or his special review officer would affect the national security, safety, and public interest, or would tend to compromise investigative sources or investigative methods. There is, however, a proviso that no such information shall be the basis for the denial, withdrawal, cancellation, or revocation of a passport in any proceeding under the bill unless the applicant has been furnished a statement summarizing such information in as much detail as is possible without jeopardizing the national security, safety, and public interest, or compromising investigative sources or methods.

Mr. President, as I said when Senator KEATING and I introduced this bill, I believe it represents a minimum but essential program for meeting the continued menace of international communism. Other bills are pending in the Judiciary Committee and before the Internal Security Subcommittee which I feel would be helpful, and which I intend to support. In formulating S. 2652, we sought to include only those proposals on which we felt it would be possible to obtain Senate approval. I reiterate my hope that the leadership may schedule this bill for early consideration after we return from the summer recess, so that the Senate may have an opportunity to express its will in these matters.

SOVIET-AMERICAN RELATIONS, 1933–60: A BRIEF SELECTED CHRONOLOGY WITH INTERPRETATIVE COMMENTARY

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, some years ago when I was still in the House, I prepared a study on the Soviet Union, which was called "Communism in Action." The study was made in conjunction with the research facilities of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. Actually, the work became a best seller. It was distributed, as a text, to perhaps as many as 400 colleges and universities.

Although I have not looked at the figures for a long time, over a million copies were printed and distributed by the Government Printing Office.

I am having the work resurveyed and brought up to date. Meanwhile, in view of our relations with the Soviet Union, I thought it would be excellent to have a factual study of Soviet-American relations from 1933 until now brought up to date. The new report contains a selected chronology and an interpretative commentary that has been prepared by the Library of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the study be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the study was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIET-AMERICAN RELATIONS, 1933–60: A BRIEF SELECTIVE CHRONOLOGY WITH INTERPRETIVE COMMENTARY

PART I. YEARS OF ACCORD AND DISCORD, COOPERATION AND DISILLUSIONMENT, 1933–41

Hitler's challenge to the European political order established after World War I and the expansion of Japanese power in the Far East were the major determining forces in international relations during the 1930's. It was precisely these external forces, together with the American desire to seek markets in the Soviet Union to relieve its depression-stricken economy, that brought the United States and the Soviet Union together. For both nations the establishment of diplomatic relations was a positive act of will based upon an awareness of mutual interest.

But trends in Soviet and American foreign policy were operating by and large at cross-purposes. In the 1930's the United States, fully aware of its geographic insularity, had an extended commitment to a policy of neutrality in a world system that many observers believed required full American participation. In contrast, the Soviets beset by fears for their security from expansionist Germany and Japan, emerged from isolation and entered into an era of direct though circumspect engagement in world affairs. They espoused the principle of collective security, indivisibility of peace, called for universal disarmament, and pursued the so-called united front policy with and within democratic countries.

For many Americans these were years of great expectations and great disillusion in Soviet-American relations. Most had accepted the fact of recognition in 1933 with a crossed finger attitude. It was fully expected, however, that rising Soviet trade would help pull the United States out of the depression. It was also hoped that recognition would help stabilize the world and maintain peace. For a variety of reasons, many beyond our control, neither expectation was fulfilled.

The optimism created by recognition was displaced by frustration in 1934–35. Negotiations on the question of Tsarist debts collapsed, and in mid-1935 relations were brought almost to a breaking point by the public disclosure at the Comintern Congress in Moscow of American Communist leaders' subversive activities in the United States. The United States protested against this violation of the recognition agreement, but the Soviets disavowed responsibility.

Hopes for establishing relations on a sound basis of mutual understanding were rapidly dissipated by subsequent events. The great purge trials in Moscow exposed the brutality of Stalin's totalitarian regime. Soviet intervention in the Spanish civil war raised serious doubts in the minds of some Americans. It was the Nazi-Soviet pact of August 1939, however, that had the greatest impact, for it transformed the entire structure of international relations at that time. In effect, this pact gave Hitler the green light to invade Poland and then to turn his armies against France and Britain with assurances of Soviet neutrality. Though neutral, the United States was clearly sympathetic with the Allied Powers. Subsequent aggressive Soviet acts against Poland and the Baltic States, and its invasion of Finland deepened the fissure in Soviet-American relations. Not until the Nazi invasion of Soviet Russia in June 1941 did these relations return to the cordiality of 1933.

January 30, 1933: Hitler becomes Chancellor of German Reich and institutes program to establish totalitarian Nazi regime.

March 4, 1933: Franklin D. Roosevelt becomes 32d President of United States.

March 27, 1933: Japan gives notice of withdrawal from League of Nations, marking first serious blow at League structure and providing stimulus to aggression elsewhere.

October 14, 1933: Germany announces withdrawal from Disarmament Conference and League of Nations.

November 16, 1933: United States and Soviet Union establish diplomatic relations.

Stipulations setting forth the terms of recognition and of other mutual commitments were embodied in an exchange of 11 letters and one memorandum between President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Soviet Commissar of Foreign Affairs Maxim Litvinov. The first letter contained an expression of mutual desire to establish relations. The second contained a series of detailed pledges by the Soviet Union to refrain from participating in or encouraging any propaganda or subversive activity which would affect the United States. Mr. Litvinov asserted that these pledges would be the fixed policy of the Soviet Government. The Soviets pledged not to intervene in the internal affairs of the United States. They pledged further to prohibit subversive activity by agents of its Government or by individuals or organizations directly or indirectly under its control or receiving financial assistance from it that would "injure the tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions, and in particular, from any act tending to incite or encourage armed intervention, or any agitation, or propaganda having as an aim, the violation of the territorial integrity of the United States, its territories or possessions, or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

Article 3 contained a guarantee by Moscow not to allow "the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group" claiming to be the Government of the United States or of any military group planning an armed attack on the United States. It further pledged not to "form, subsidize, support or permit" such organizations to take shape on its territory aimed at "armed struggle" against the United States and to "prevent any recruiting on behalf of such organizations and groups."

Article 4 contained the following pledge intended to afford greater assurances against subversive activity carried on by the Third International located in Moscow:

"Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or the bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

The third exchange of letters guaranteed religious rights for American nationals in the Soviet Union. The Soviets asked for no reciprocal stipulation, but this agreement served a useful propaganda purpose for Moscow to refute charges of religious persecution. The next exchange related to the legal rights of American citizens residing in the Soviet Union. The final exchange concerned outstanding debt claims but no final settlement was reached. The matter was left open for future negotiations. A joint communique by Mr. Roosevelt and Foreign Commissar Litvinov stated that an "exchange of views" had taken place on debts and claims and that Litvinov would remain in Washington for several days to continue discussions. Litvinov departed from Washington on November 23 leaving the debt problem unresolved.

At a press conference on November 17, President Roosevelt announced the appointment of William C. Bullitt as first Ambassador from the United States to the Soviet Union. On November 19, Litvinov announced that Alexander A. Troyanosky was to be the Soviet envoy.

February 12, 1934: Washington announces plans for establishing Export-Import Bank to finance trade with Soviet Union.

September 18, 1934: Soviet Union joins League of Nations.

January 31, 1935:

Negotiations break down on debt question.

The United States still held the Soviet Government responsible for loans advanced to the pre-Bolshevik government. Settlement of this question at the time of recognition had been deferred for future negotiations. At the time the President suggested the figure of $150 million as the principal; the Soviet Foreign Commissar believed $100 million might be acceptable. Negotiations, resumed early in 1934, collapsed after the United States refused to include provisions for loans and credits to the Soviet Government, which the Soviets insisted upon, as part of the stipulations in the debt settlement. By the terms of the Johnson Act the United States could not advance loans to nations that defaulted in their war debts. Subsequently, the United States gave concrete evidence of its displeasure and disillusionment by withdrawing attachés from the Moscow Embassy, announcing its decision to reduce the staff, and by closing the consulate general in Moscow. The Soviets tried to minimize the effects of the entire affair, presumably, not wishing to endanger the new status of recognition. Already the abortive negotiations irritated certain Members of Congress to the extent that resolutions were submitted in both Houses asking for severance of relations. The American press also reacted unfavorably toward the Soviet refusal to honor its debts.

March 16, 1935: Germany formally denounces clauses of Versailles Treaty restricting rearmament and expands military forces.

July 13, 1935:

Soviet Union and United States conclude trade agreement.

The only bright spot in the otherwise gloomy postrecognition years in Soviet-American relations occurred with the conclusion of a trade agreement. Secretary of State Cordell Hull proposed extending to Soviet Russia the tariff reductions granted to other nations under the reciprocal trade program. On its part, the Soviet Union agreed to purchase $30 million worth of goods in the United States during the next year. The purpose of this plan was to get some economic profit out of the resumption of relations after the collapse of the debt negotiations. The Soviets agreed to the proposal. Its success led to renewal in subsequent years until 1940. After 1937, the guaranteed sum of Soviet purchases rose to $40 million.

Comintern advances line of united front.

At the Seventh Congress of the Communist International the Soviet Union laid down the general line that the strategy of revolutionary extremism, which ruled out cooperation with anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist parties, was to be replaced by the so-called united front strategy of cooperation with the democracies against fascism. Communists were encouraged to support their non-Communist governments and to form coalitions with democratic forces against extreme rightwing movements.

August 25, 1935:

United States protests against Soviet violation of recognition pledges revealed at Comintern Congress proceedings.

At the Seventh All-World Congress of the Communist International meeting in Moscow, American leaders of the CPUSA reported faithfully on the progress of the revolutionary movement in the United States under their direction. The United States regarded this incident a violation of the recognition pledges and in a protest to Moscow warned that the "most serious consequences" would result if the Soviet Union were "unwilling or unable to prevent further acts in disregard of the solemn pledge given by it to the Government of the United States." The note stated flatly that the continuation of such subversive activities would "preclude the further development of friendly relations" with the United States.

The Soviet reply of August 27 categorically denied the American charges, asserting that all commitments undertaken with the United States had been scrupulously observed. According to the Soviet Foreign Office, the Soviet Government "cannot take upon itself and has not taken upon itself obligations of any kind with regard to the Communist International."

The United States was generally incensed by this blatant violation of recognition pledges. But the Soviet Government, as in the case of the debt question, tried to minimize tensions emerging from the incident. In the final analysis the U.S. Government, presumably with broader foreign policy considerations in mind, held in reserve more drastic measures recommended by Ambassador Bullitt and was satisfied with a severe reprimand to the Moscow Government. The cordiality and good will that had permeated relations in November 1933 were now replaced by disappointment and irritation.

September 1935: Italo-Eithiopian crisis begins.

March 7, 1936: Germans reoccupy Rhineland in violation of Versailles and Locarno treaties.

July 28, 1936: Civil war begins in Spain.

This war lasted until 1939. Hitler and Mussolini backed Franco who attempted to overthrow the leftist government of the Loyalists in Madrid. The Soviets supported the Loyalists. Sections of American opinion condemned the Loyalists and some of the press referred to Soviet-supported Loyalists without qualification as Reds. In 1937, a Fortune magazine poll showed that the American people ranked Soviet Russia along with Japan, Germany, and Italy as the most disliked nations.

July 1937–38: Soviet purge trials shock Americans.

In pursuring policies of collective security and disarmament the Soviets had created a favorable impression among some Americans. But the extraordinary purge trials and mass executions, including three leading revolutionaries and eight prominent generals, had a disturbing countereffect. Terror tactics on this vast scale did violence to traditional American conceptions of justice. All but convinced partisans of the Soviet system were critical of the purge trials.

January 20, 1937: Franklin D. Roosevelt is inaugurated for second term.

May 1937: Neutrality Act is passed.

The act reaffirmed and somewhat enlarged upon statutes passed in 1935 and 1936. Export of arms and munitions to belligerents was to be forbidden. Certain materials had to be paid for before leaving the United States and had to be transported on foreign ships. Among other restrictions was the barring of loans to belligerent powers. The act was intended to reduce the hazards of involvement in war.

July 7, 1937: Lukouchiao incident reopens Sino-Japanese War and marks resumption of Japanese military campaigns to conquer China.

March 12–13, 1938: German forces invade and annex Austria.

September 29, 1938: Munich Conference of Germany, Britain, France, and Italy, convenes and agrees on dismemberment of Czechoslovakia giving Germany control of strategically important Sudetenland.

March 10–16, 1939: Czechoslovak state is annihilated as German forces seize Czech lands and place Slovakia under protectorate.

August 23, 1939: Nazi-Soviet pact of friendship and nonaggression is signed.

By the terms of this pact the Nazis were given a free hand to invade Poland without fear of Soviet intervention. Under secret protocols negotiated at the same time Germany and Soviet Russia divided Eastern Europe into spheres of influence.

September 1, 1939: German forces invade Poland and initiate World War II; 2 days later Britain and France declare war on Germany.

September 5, 1939: United States proclaims neutrality in European war.

September 17, 1939: Soviet forces invade and seize eastern Poland.

November 30, 1939: Soviet troops invade Finland.

In October, the Soviet Union imposed by force mutual assistance pacts on the Baltic States. When the Soviet Government attempted a similar action in Finland, the Finnish Government resisted. In response, the Soviets broke off relations and invaded Finland, thus initiating a war that continued until March 1940. In December 1939, the Soviet Union was expelled from the League of Nations. American sympathies were clearly with the Finns. Congress made available $30 million in loans to be used for nonmilitary supplies. The House of Representatives very nearly brought about a breakdown in Soviet-American relations by denying funds for the Moscow Embassy.

April 9, 1940: Germans invade Denmark and Norway.

May 10, 1940: Germans invade Belgium, Netherlands, and Luxembourg.

June 10, 1940: Italy declares war on France and Great Britain.

June 15–16, 1940: Soviets seize Baltic States.

On July 21, the Soviet-imposed regimes in Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia voted unanimously to join the U.S.S.R. as Union Republics. Two days later the U.S. Government denounced the Soviet seizure of the Baltic States. The United States continues to recognize the Baltic governments-in-exile and has never acceded to the Soviet absorption of the three States.

June 21, 1940: France signs armistice with Germany.

June 27, 1940: Rumania accepts Soviet ultimatum demanding cession of Bessarabia and northern Bukovina.

September 27, 1940: Germany, Italy, and Japan conclude three-power pact pledging total mutual aid.

January 20, 1941: President Roosevelt is inaugurated for third term.

January 21, 1941: United States replaces "moral embargo" imposed on Soviet Union with licensing system.

April 13, 1941: Japan and Soviet Union sign 5-year neutrality pact.

This action had a direct effect on American-Japanese relations. Many Americans interpreted it as a Soviet attempt to direct the Japanese southward toward the Philippine Islands in a fashion similar to that of the Nazi-Soviet pact which turned the Germans toward Poland and then the West. The U.S. Government responded by freezing Soviet funds and withholding further licenses for exports to Vladivostok.

May 27, 1941: President Roosevelt proclaims unlimited state of national emergency.

PART II. ALLIANCE AND MISALLIANCE, 1941–45

The German invasion of Soviet Russia drastically altered the power alinement in the world. At once the Soviets made common cause with the British in the European war. With almost equal speed the United States set into operation plans to aid the U.S.S.R. as it was then aiding Great Britain. U.S. relations with Soviet Russia now became closer than ever before. After Pearl Harbor, the battle lines were more clearly drawn, but only in Europe. There, the United States, Britain, and Soviet Russia opposed Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. Soviet Russia remained neutral in the Far Eastern war where the United States, Britain, and the Chinese opposed Japan. In a sense, two separate wars were being carried on simultaneously: for the Soviets it was a one-front ground war stretching from the Arctic to the Black Sea; for the United States and Britain it was a global war on land, sea, and in the air.

The strange alliance that brought the United States, Britain, and Soviet Russia together in the anti-Axis coalition was more a marriage of necessity than one of convenience. The imperative need of all three powers to defeat the common enemy bound them together in an uncommon friendship of a very limited duration. With the defeat of the Axis Powers, the primary source of unity dissolved and the coalition itself dissolved, for the deep-rooted, incompatible interests of the Soviet Union and its Western Allies could not long remain subdued.

Sources of discord were many in the 4 years of this alliance. Soviet suspicion proved to be a constant irritant. The Soviets never reciprocated by giving detailed information on weapons and military plans. Members of the American and British military missions, indeed, all Western officials in Soviet Russia were treated more as spies than friends. The office of the British military mission, for example, was found to be honeycombed with well-concealed microphones of the Soviet secret police. Delays in lend-lease shipments were looked upon as deliberate attempts by the United States to weaken the Soviet Union. Supplies, delivered at great sacrifice, were not credited to the United States. The shuttle bombing tactic (that is, flying bombing missions from the west, over Germany and landing in Soviet territory) was put into operation only after much Soviet resistance. When its limited usefulness came to an end, American military forces, according to Gen. J. R. Deane, of the American military mission in Moscow, were literally forced out of the Soviet Union. Even during the desperate days of the seige at Stalingrad, Soviet leaders agreed to accept the American offer of heavy bombers to be based in the Caucasus but without the services of the highly trained American Air Force personnel. Under these restrictive conditions the United States presumably saw little point in dispatching the planes. Except for the shuttle operations, the only foreign aircraft permitted to fly over Soviet territory not held by the Germans were those carrying foreign dignitaries.

Delays in launching the second front in Europe formed another serious source of discord within the coalition. Moscow strongly suspected that its Western Allies were deliberately holding back the cross-channel operation in pursuance of a bleed-each-other-white policy, that is, a policy designed to let the Nazis and Soviets destroy themselves. Large-scale operations in the Pacific were dismissed by Moscow as having no significance for the main European theater. Allied invasions of north Africa and Italy which ultimately knocked Italy out of the war were ridiculed by the Soviet press, and the mass destructive operations of the strategic bombing forces over Germany were brushed aside as being negligible. Distrust by both sides produced fears of a separate peace. On the other hand, Americans were irritated by Soviet Russia's failure to appreciate their point of view in the war; namely, the great risks and dangers in launching a cross-channel attack while carrying on extensive military and naval operations in the Pacific against the Japanese.

Other irritants also strained the coalition. The Soviets distrusted American policy toward Vichy France, Franco Spain, and Turkey. America's refusal to declare war on Finland found little sympathy in the Kremlin. The Polish question added to the elements of discord, the West supporting the democratic Polish Government exiled in London and the Soviets supporting their own handpicked pro-Soviet Lublin committee. The highhanded methods Moscow employed in setting up pro-Soviet regimes throughout all Eastern Europe alarmed Western statesmen during the last weeks of the war and induced a mood of deep uncertainty concerning Soviet postwar intentions. Failure of the Soviets to enter the Pacific war until the last minute and then to reap enormous gains at little personal sacrifice was a constant source of dissatisfaction for many Americans.

As the war came to a close the strange alliance became a misalliance. Tensions increased as the Soviet Union became more self-assertive. Only with great difficulty was the United Nations established as a world organization to insure world peace. Successful military operations brought Soviet power deep into the European peninsula. Even before Germany capitulated, the Soviets had firmly in their grasp the Baltic States, Poland, East Germany, East Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, and Albania. Months before the last shot was fired in the European theater, the Soviets took initial steps to consolidate their power in Eastern Europe in open violation of their pledged word to the Western Allies. The stage was thus being set for the transition from the "hot" war to the "cold" war.

German armies invade Soviet Union along 2,000-mile front.

The German invasion transformed the entire character of the war for the Soviets. During the era of the Nazi-Soviet pact (Aug. 23, 1939–June 22, 1941) Soviet leaders and their Communist followers throughout the world, including American Communists, condemned the war as an "imperialist" conflict precipitated by the capitalistic democracies. After the attack by Germany, the war became a "holy" and "just" war against "German fascism" in which the democracies, including Soviet Russia, were fighting as allies. Observers of the American scene state that Americans welcomed the Soviets with considerable satisfaction. Many reasoned that the Nazi and Communist menaces would eventually exhaust themselves in a war in which Americans would not have to participate. For some it was difficult to see the advantage of substituting a Communist menace for a Nazi menace. Many who thought along these lines hoped that the Soviets would collapse, but the majority of Americans hoped for Hitler's defeat.

August 2, 1941: United States pledges all economic aid practicable to Soviet Union and renews trade agreement for 1 year.

August 14, 1941:

President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill proclaim Atlantic Charter setting forth peace aims.

The Atlantic Charter set forth the basic ideals for which the war was being fought. Mr. Roosevelt and the British Prime Minister asserted that the United States and Britain sought no territorial aggrandizement, reaffirmed the principle of self-determination of peoples, and stated their wish that the sovereign rights and self-government be restored to people who were forcibly deprived of them. Similarly, the two leaders favored equality of economic opportunity with access to essential raw materials for all nations. They expressed their desire to promote friendly collaboration among the peoples of the world, fair labor standards, social security, freedom from fear and want, freedom of the seas, abandonment of force, and the disarmament of aggressor nations.

August 24–29, 1941: British and Soviet forces enter Iran and establish pro-Allied Government.

September 1941:

American Communists stress Soviet line in urging United States to support creation of "second front."

Before America's entry into World War II, and until June 1944, the CPUSA persistently demanded the opening up of a "second front" in Europe to relieve the Soviet Union, which, according to the Communists, "single-handed" has engaged "the full might of Hitler."

September 4, 1941: Germans lay siege to Leningrad ending in failure in January 1943.

September 19, 1941: Germans storm Kiev and Poltava, advance into Soviet Union, enter Crimea by end of October and begin unsuccessful siege of Moscow.

September 24, 1941: at inter-Allied conference in London, Soviet Union and nine governments-in-exile declare adherence to Atlantic Charter.

October 1, 1941:

United States pledges aid to Soviet Union.

After the Nazi invasion of the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, President Roosevelt, presumably realizing the imperative need of keeping the Russians in the war, unfroze Soviet credits, refused to invoke the Neutrality Act against arms shipments to the U.S.S.R., extended loans, and on his own initiative pledged a billion dollars' worth of lend-lease supplies during the next 9 months.

December 7, 1941:

Japanese attack Pearl Harbor, Philippines, Guam, Midway Island, Hong Kong, and Malaya.

On the following day the United States declared war on Japan. On December 11, Germany and Italy declared war on the United States.

January 1, 1942: Soviet Union signs United Nations declaration in Washington.

May 26, 1942: Soviet Union and Britain sign 20-year mutual assistance pact, establishing close alliance against Germany.

June 11, 1942:

Roosevelt-Molotov conference ends.

In a series of talks beginning May 29, President Roosevelt and Foreign Commissar Molotov conferred on (a) the problem of creating a second front in Europe in 1942, (b) measures for increasing and expediting war supplies to the Soviet Union, and (c) basic problems of cooperation and safeguarding peace.

September 22, 1942: Soviet press criticizes British and American Armies as being "mere bystanders" while war is being decided at Stalingrad.

November 6, 1942:

Stalin outlines program of action of Allied coalition.

Marshal Stalin urged that the Allies (a) end all racial exclusiveness, (b) recognize the equality of nations and the inviolability of their territories, (c) liberate enslaved peoples and restore their sovereign rights, (d) acknowledge the right of self-determination, (e) extend economic aid to nations which have suffered in the war and aid them in regaining their material well-being, (f) restore democratic freedoms, and (g) destroy the Nazi regime.

November 8, 1942: U.S. Forces land in French North Africa.

January 14–24, 1943:

Roosevelt and Churchill confer at Casablanca.

At this 10-day conference at Casablanca, Morocco, President Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Churchill worked out plans for an Allied offensive in 1943 aimed at the "unconditional surrender" of the Axis Powers.

February 2, 1943: Germans surrender at Stalingrad as Russians mount second winter offensive against crumbling German defenses.

March 8, 1943:

Ambassador Standley charges Soviets withhold information from people on American aid.

On the following day Sumner Welles disclaimed Government responsibility for the charge. At the same time Moscow radio broadcasted a complete statement on U.S. shipments to the Soviet Union.

April 25, 1943: Soviet Union breaks off relations with Polish Government-in-exile, charging Poles were in "contact and accord" with Hitler in conducting hostile anti-Soviet press campaign.

May 8–12, 1943: Axis resistance ends in North Africa.

September 3, 1943: Allied Forces cross Straits of Messina and land in southern Italy.

September 9, 1943: Badoglio Cabinet accepts terms of surrender for Italy.

October 19, 1943:

Allied Foreign Ministers confer in Moscow.

Present at the conference were Secretary of State Cordell Hull, British Foreign Secretary Eden, and Soviet Foreign Commissar Molotov. An official communique issued on November 2 stated that the Allies had pledged themselves to fight until the enemies surrendered unconditionally and to continue to act in unity to insure world peace. Agreement was reached on (a) the creation of the European Advisory Commission and the Italian Advisory Committee, (b) a joint pledge to restore Austrian independence, and (c) the trial of German war criminals.

November 28, 1943–January 12, 1944:

Allied Powers confer at Teheran.

President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Marshal Stalin announced after a series of discussions, that they had coordinated their war plans and reached agreement on their implementation. In a declaration of December 1, they pledged economic aid to Iran during the war and after. In the interim Soviet Forces were to guard the area north of Teheran, the British would occupy southern Iran, and American units patrol supply routes.

December 1, 1943: Cairo Declaration is proclaimed.

President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Chiang Kai-shek of Nationalist China conferred in Cairo and announced in a joint declaration their determination to defeat Japan.

December 12, 1943: Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia sign treaty of friendship, mutual assistance, and postwar collaboration.

May 20, 1944: CPUSA "dissolves" and is replaced by Communist Political Association headed by Earl Browder.

June 6, 1944: Allied Forces invade Normandy and establish second front.

July 23, 1944:

Soviets announce creation of Polish Committee of National Liberation.

The purpose of this pro-Soviet committee was to maintain a provisional government in liberated Poland. The Polish Government exiled in London was originally slated for this function. Three days later the Soviet Government signed an agreement with the so-called Lublin Committee on relations of the Soviet Army and Polish administration in the liberated areas.

August 1944: Soviet forces reach borders of East Prussia and invade Poland and Rumania.

August 1–October 3, 1944: Warsaw uprising against Germans led by General Bor destroys Polish resistance movement as Soviet forces stand by and withhold assistance that would have saved important Polish units.

August 23-24, 1944: Rumanians accept armistice terms with Allies as Russians are about to occupy Bucharest.

September 9, 1944: "Pro-Soviet" Fatherland Front government is established in Bulgaria.

September 12, 1944: American First Army crosses German frontier.

October 1944: Albania's Communist leader, Hoxha, aided by Tito, seizes Tirana, nation's capital, from Germans.

October 9, 1944: Allied powers confer at Dumbarton Oaks to establish permanent international organization to be known as United Nations.

October 19, 1944: American forces land at Leyte and open campaign to reconquer Philippines.

October 20, 1944: Soviet forces and Tito's Yugoslav Partisans enter Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

December 10, 1944: France and Soviet Union conclude treaty of alliance and mutual assistance.

January 11, 1945: Greek civil war ends temporarily in truce between British and the Greek "leftists."

January 17, 1945: Red army captures Warsaw.

February 7–12, 1945:

Allied leaders confer at Yalta in Crimea.

President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Marshal Stalin conferred at Yalta on matters relating to the war and impending peace. According to an announcement, they coordinated plans on the final defeat of Germany and for the occupation, control, and collection of reparations. The Allied leaders pledged to assist liberated countries in Europe and to support the establishment of a general international organization to maintain peace and security.

By the terms of a secret agreement disclosed on February 24, 1946, the Soviet Union pledged that it would enter the war against Japan "in 2 or 3 months" after the surrender of Germany. The reason for the secrecy was said to be a desire not to provoke Japan until Germany was defeated, after which Soviet forces could be shifted to Siberia. For this pledge, the status quo in Communist-dominated Outer Mongolia was to be preserved and the former rights of Russia, lost as a result of the Russo-Japanese War, were to be restored. Thus, the Soviets were to receive the southern part of Sakhalin, preeminent rights at the Manchurian port of Dairen, restoration of the lease of Port Arthur as a naval base, and assurances on the joint operation of the Manchurian railroads by the Chinese and Russians. The Russians were also to have possession of the Japanese-owned Kurile Islands. The need to secure Soviet military assistance in the war with Japan which was expected to continue for more than a year was said to have been the main purpose for this agreement.

February 13, 1945: Soviet forces seize Budapest, Hungary.

March 6, 1945: Soviets impose pro-Soviet government on Rumania.

April 5, 1945: Soviets denounce 5-year nonaggression pact with Japan.

April 25–June 26, 1945: Delegates confer at San Francisco to complete charter for United Nations Organization.

April 28, 1945: Mussolini is captured and executed by Italian anti-Fascists.

May–August 1945: United States launches greatest air offensive in history against Japan.

May 1, 1945: Hitler is reported dead as Soviets fight way into Berlin.

May 7, 1945: Germans surrender.

June 5, 1945:

Allied Control Council for Germany proclaims Allied assumption of German Government.

Occupation zones were established under authority of Great Britain, United States, France, and the Soviet Union. Greater Berlin was placed under the Inter-Allied Governing Authority operating under the Allied Control Council.

June 23, 1945: Conference of Lublin and London Poles in Moscow results in establishment of provisional national government for Poland.

July 17–August 2, 1945:

Allied Powers confer at Potsdam.

President Harry Truman, Prime Minister Churchill (Clement R. Attlee replaced Mr. Churchill after July 28), and Marshal Stalin conferred on plans for reestablishing peace in Europe. Decisions reached at the conference dealt mainly with problems relating to defeated Germany.

The communique released by the Allied Powers announced: (1) Plans to decentralize Germany politically and economically; (2) the creation of a Council of Foreign Ministers, including those of China and France, to prepare tentative peace treaties; (3) preliminary agreement on some border issues; (4) arrangements on German reparations; (5) plans for the trial of German war criminals; (6) the determination to prevent the Franco Government from entering the United Nations; (7) agreement on revision of control commission procedures in Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary; and (8) the intention to undertake the repatriation of Germans from Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary.

July 27, 1945: CPUSA is reconstituted under leadership of William Z. Foster.

August 6, 1945: Atomic bomb is dropped on Hiroshima.

August 8, 1945: Austria is divided into four occupation zones as Allied Council assumes authority over country.

August 8, 1945: Soviet Union declares war on Japan and opens invasion of Manchuria.

August 14, 1945: Japanese surrender.

August 21, 1945: United States lend-lease to Soviet Union ends, totaling about $10 billion in aid through May 31, 1945.

August 23, 1945: Stalin announces victory over Japan, occupation of Manchuria, and surrender of Japanese Kwantung army.

August 27, 1945: Soviet forces occupy southern Sakhalin.

September 21, 1945:

Japanese sign formal terms of surrender at Tokyo.

By the terms of the surrender the Japanese home islands were placed under the control of the U.S. Army of Occupation, although the Emperor remained head of the state and the Japanese political and police officials continued their functions.

The military high command and organizations were progressively disbanded. American forces occupied island possessions regained or captured in the Pacific during the war. Korea was placed under Soviet-American occupation pending the creation of a Korean democratic government. The Kurile Islands and southern Sakhalin went to Soviet Russia. Outer Mongolia was regarded as part of the Soviet sphere and the Soviets shared with the Chinese the facilities at Port Arthur and the Manchurian railroads. China regained sovereignty over Inner Mongolia and Manchuria, Formosa, and Hainan. The British reoccupied Hong Kong.

PART III. STALINISM REGENERATED AND AMERICA'S RESPONSE, 1945–53

World War II brought about a radical change in the structure of international relations. The distribution of world power now shifted from the main actors in world politics during the 1930's to those who had hitherto played a lesser role. The destruction of Japan's imperial domain and Hitler's Third Reich together with the voluntary and involuntary liquidation of British, French, and Dutch imperial systems created vast power vacuums in the world. New states and new constellations of power emerged, and the alinement of world forces took on a bipolar character. This was the beginning of the era of bipolarity and global confrontation between the United States and Soviet Union. America's objective was to preserve a world order acceptable to the common interests of free peoples; the Soviet Union sought to destroy this order and transform it into its own image with its own distinctive governmental and economic forms and authoritarian, mechanistic value systems.

The Soviet world outlook in this period as before was conditioned by Stalin's interpretation of Marxism-Leninism. He held that the war, like World War I, would further weaken world capitalism and inevitably unloose forces that would hasten communism's expansion. Stalin conceived of the world as being divided into two incompatibly opposite camps, one the Communist camp led by the Soviet Union, and the other the capitalist camp led by the United States. He still maintained that Soviet Russia was in a "capitalist encirclement." However, the Soviet leaders, responding presumably to ideological impulses and an inner drive for political power, launched what was essentially a global offensive against world capitalism even before the war had ended. Theoretically, the Communist war on capitalism was never suspended. The purpose of this offensive was to hasten a victory which they claimed history preordained. The result was Stalinism regenerated and expanded on a global scale.

During this period the Soviets projected their aggressive thrusts in every direction. They seized all territory in Eastern Europe occupied by Soviet troops and initiated policies that transformed them into a constellation of Soviet satellites. Within a few years this seemed to have been completed. They tried to drive the Western Powers out of Berlin in the blockade of 1948–49. They exploited their vast asset in the Communist Parties of Western Europe by urging their followers to frustrate every anti-Soviet measure. The Soviets probed into Greece and ultimately failed in a civil war that lasted there for 3 years. They tried, unsuccessfully, to pressure Turkey into giving the Soviet Union a preferred position in the Straits. Only under concerted pressure from the West did the Soviets withdraw their troops from Iran. In the Far East, the Soviets consolidated their gains over former Japanese-held areas. They supported the activities of indigenous Communists on every front: in China, India, Burma, Indochina, the Philippines, Malaya, Indonesia, and elsewhere. In Korea, they staged the military invasion of South Korea by the North Korean Communists, initiating a bitterly fought war that lasted 3 years. The United Nations, too, which had held the high hopes of many for a peaceful world became a cockpit of tension and acrimony as every area of Soviet foreign policy activity became permeated with the aggressive spirit of Stalinism.

The Soviet intent to disrupt the wartime Grand Alliance was not entirely unexpected by American leaders. It is said that President Roosevelt died knowing or strongly suspecting that his bid for conciliation had failed. In the weeks prior to his death the President protested vigorously to Stalin against violation of the Yalta Agreement, particularly Soviet machinations in Rumania and Poland. Among American leaders the mood of disillusionment deepened by the end of 1945 and early 1946. Former British Prime Minister Winston Churchill's "iron curtain" speech at Fulton, Mo., reflected the growing awareness of hostility in Soviet conduct and attitudes. By the summer of 1946 and in some instances even earlier a great majority of the American people believed that, (a) Soviet Russia could not be trusted to cooperate effectively in the United Nations; (b) the United States could not approve of Soviet foreign policies; (c) Soviet domination over Eastern Europe was prompted by aggressive rather than by defensive designs; (d) the Soviet Union was not a peace-loving nation; (e) another world war was probable within 25 years or so; (f) the Russians were most likely to start the next war; and (g) a "get tough" policy was necessary in order to stop the Soviets.

At this time the United States faced what has come to be recognized as its greatest challenge. The massive American military machine had been quickly dismantled after the war. And the favorable balance of military power inherent in the sole possession of the atomic bomb did not last long. However, the United States placed its power resources—political, economic, and military—against Soviet expansionism. The United States, with its Western allies, resisted Soviet pressure in Iran and Turkey. Military and economic aid to Greece and Turkey in early 1947 played a decisive role in the victory of the anti-Communist forces in the Greek civil war. The Marshall plan for European recovery regenerated Western Europe and revitalized its political, economic, and social institutions. In the Berlin blockade the Soviets threw down a serious challenge which the West effectively met. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, in addition to corollary West European and American agreements, harnessed the resources of the free world to counterbalance the Soviet threat to Europe. The decision to intervene in the Korean war gave Soviet Russia a clear, unequivocal demonstration of America's determination to resist Communist aggression.

The challenge of Stalinism also had distinct domestic repercussions in the United States. Disclosures in the Canadian spy investigation and those revealed in the Fuchs-Gold-Greenglass-Rosenberg atomic spy ring demonstrated concretely the success of Soviet espionage. The Hiss trial had serious repercussions on the American political scene. As the cold war became more intense, the United States took legal action against leading American Communists and Communist-inspired organizations.

By the end of 1952 and early 1953 Soviet-American relations were completely deadlocked. No prospects for change seemed to appear on the near horizon. War in Korea continued, abated but unresolved. Communists continued their unrelenting drive for power elsewhere in the world. The 19th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party offered no discernible clues of a possible shift in Soviet policy. Indeed, the so-called doctor's plot against Stalin seemed to be a foreboding of trouble ahead in Soviet domestic and possibly foreign policy. On the other hand, President Truman's last state of the Union message warning Stalin of the awful destructive power of war with atomic and hydrogen bombs appeared to symbolize the seemingly unsoluble character of the protracted stalemate in Soviet-American relations. However, Stalin's death in March 1953, which meant the emergence of new leadership in the Soviet Union, taken with the inauguration of General Eisenhower as President of the United States suggested the end of one era and the beginning of another in Soviet-American relations.

September 11–October 3, 1945: London Conference of Foreign Ministers fails to reach agreement on Italian Peace Treaty as serious differences emerge among wartime peacemakers.

September 25, 1945: Molotov criticizes American policies in Japan and asks creation of allied control commission for Japan with Soviet participation.

October 17, 1945: Pravda reports incorporation of Tanna-Tuva and Königsberg area into U.S.S.R.

October 24, 1945: United Nations comes into formal existence as 29 nations ratify charter.

November 1, 1945: Soviets suggest internationalization of Ruhr under commission including Soviet Union in its membership.

November 13, 1945: Tito retains total power in Yugoslavia after Soviet-style elections.

November 18, 1945:

Revolution erupts in Azerbaijan Province of Iran.

Two days later the Iranian Government requested that the United States intervene to counter Soviet support of the Azerbaijan revolutionaries.

November 29, 1945: Tito establishes Federal People's Republic in Yugoslavia and 2 months later adopts constitution along Soviet lines.

December 3, 1945: Soviet Government rejects American proposal calling for evacuation of all military forces from Iran by January 1.

December 27, 1945:

Moscow Conference of Big Three ends.

The Foreign Ministers' Conference which began December 16 reached general agreement on, (a) the procedure for drawing up European peace treaties; (b) Soviet participation in the control of occupied Japan; (c) the status of Korea; (d) evacuation of American and Soviet troops from China; (e) establishment of an Atomic Energy Commission; and (f) conditions concerning British and American recognition of Rumania and Bulgaria.

January 11, 1946: Hoxha establishes People's Republic in Albania and conforms policies with other Soviet bloc states.

February 6, 1946: Molotov condemns "Third World War" talk and points to "anti-Communist armies" still maintained in British zone of Germany, in Italy, and Austria.

February 9, 1946: Stalin announces new 5-year plan of reconstruction for period 1946–50.

February 14, 1946: General W. B. Smith replaces Averell Harriman as American Ambassador to Soviet Union.

February 27, 1946: Soviet Union and Mongolian People's Republic sign military alliance and economic and cultural agreement.

February 28, 1946: Secretary of State Byrnes reassures Soviet Union on American friendship but warns against aggression "accomplished by coercion or pressures * * * or political infiltration."

March 1, 1946: Soviets announce decision to leave some Soviet troops in Iran despite 1942 agreement setting March 4 as deadline for withdrawal.

March 1, 1946: United States announces proposal to begin negotiations with Soviet Union for billion dollar credit which never materialized.

March 4, 1946:

Canadian espionage investigation links Soviet Embassy in Ottawa with organization of extensive atomic spy network and indicates existence of other rings.

Iran protests to Moscow against retaining Soviet troops in country; British ask Soviets to clarify position on Iran.

March 5, 1946:

Former Prime Minister Churchill delivers "iron curtain" speech at Fulton, Mo.

The Soviet press initiated an attack on Mr. Churchill for this speech a few days after it was delivered. Stalin charged that the former British Prime Minister was a warmonger. In retrospect, many observers credited Mr. Churchill with sounding the alarm for the emerging cold war between East and West.

March 5, 1946: United States protests to Soviet Government against aggressive policy in Manchuria and Iran.

March 22, 1946: Stalin asserts Soviet Union does not seek war and reaffirms faith in United Nations as instrument of peace.

March 27, 1946: British and American Governments warn Tito against invasion attempt of disputed Trieste area.

March 27, 1946: Soviet delegate walks out of United Nations when Security Council refuses to drop discussion of Iranian question for 2 weeks.

April 3, 1946:

Soviet Government informs United Nations of plans to evacuate troops from Iran to be completed in 6 weeks.

On the following day the Soviet delegate resumed his seat on the Security Council after the Soviet promise of withdrawal was accepted and drops discussion of Iranian case until May 6.

April 10, 1946: Nikolai Novikov replaces Andrei Gromyko as Soviet Ambassador to United States as Gromyko becomes Soviet delegate at United Nations.

April 11, 1946: Moscow supports Yugoslavia in dispute over Trieste and the Venezia Giulia boundary question.

April 14, 1946: Chinese Civil War resumes.

May 1946–October 16, 1949: Greek Civil War goes on for over 3 years ending with defeat of pro-Soviet rebel forces.

May 8, 1946: Soviet-American conference on interim government for Korea fails.

May 21, 1946: Iran officially announces withdrawal of all Soviet troops from territory as of May 6.

May 26, 1946:

Communists gain in Czechoslovak elections.

In elections to the Constituent Assembly the Communists gained 2.7 million of the total 7.1 million votes and 114 of the 300 seats. Consequently, Klement Gottwald, the Communist leader, formed a new coalition cabinet.

May 30, 1946: Communist poll 40 percent of vote in Czechoslovakia, largest of any single party.

June 11, 1946: Soviets agree to supply Tito's army with arms and help build up Yugoslavia's munitions industry.

June 14, 1946:

United States offers atom plan.

The United States proposed to destroy its atomic bombs and release atomic secrets to an international authority whose decisions would not be subject to veto by any nation. On June 19, the Soviet plan presented by Andrei Gromyko proposed that the Security Council maintain control, with the veto power for the Big Five to remain in effect. It also provided for the outlawing of atomic bombs by international agreement and severe punishment for violators. A few days later Pravda charged that the American plan was a "product of atomic diplomacy and reflects an obvious tendency toward world domination." On July 24, the Soviets rejected "as a whole or in separate parts" the American plan for international control of atomic energy.

July 1, 1946: Soviet observers witness fourth U.S. atomic bomb explosion over Bikini atoll.

July 15, 1946:

Joint Chiefs of Staff issue new directive to American Commander in Germany ordering assistance in rebuilding German industry and promising additional American financial aid.

The objectives of U.S. policy in Germany were said to be: (a) German self-government and ultimately federalization of the four occupation zones; (b) free political parties with no party enjoying a privileged status; (c) the elimination of war industries, exaction of reparations, and encouragement of the Germans to rebuild a self-sustaining state dedicated to peace and integrated into the economy of Europe.

July 29–October 15, 1946:

Peace conference discusses treaties for former Axis nations.

The conference of 21 nations which fought against the Axis coalition met in Paris to discuss draft treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Finland. The treaties were prepared by the Foreign Ministers' Council of Britain, France, United States, and the Soviet Union. On February 10, 1947, the peace treaties were signed in Paris.

August 12, 1946:

Soviet request revision of Montreux Convention, Turkey discloses.

Reportedly, the Soviets demanded that only the Black Sea powers (Soviet Union, Turkey, Bulgaria, and Rumania) were to be parties to agreements regulating the straits. They demanded also an arrangement for a joint Soviet-Turkish defense of the Dardanelles. On August 21, the United States rejected the Soviet proposal for sharing control of the Dardanelles. Three days later the Turkish Government likewise rejected Soviet proposals for its joint defense.

August 21, 1946:

United States issues ultimatum to Yugoslavia.

In a 48-hour ultimatum the U.S. Government demanded the release of occupants of an American plane shot down over the Yugoslav frontier. The United States threatened to bring the issue before the United Nations if the demand was not met. On the next day the Yugoslavs complied to the terms set down by the United States.

September 6, 1946:

Secretary Byrnes delivers Stuttgart speech.

In this address at Stuttgart, Germany, Mr. Byrnes urged the formation of a centralized German Government. He rejected proposals to sever the Ruhr and Rhineland from Germany but approved of the transfer of the Saar to France. The Secretary pointed out further that the German-Polish frontier was not final. He predicted also that security forces would probably remain in Germany for a long time.

September 12, 1946: Secretary of Commerce Henry Wallace warns against "tough" policy toward Soviets in New York rally.

On September 20, the Secretary resigned at the request of President Truman for his criticism of American policy toward the U.S.S.R.

October 1, 1946: International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg finds 19 or 22 Nazi leaders guilty of conspiracy to wage aggressive war, crimes against peace, crimes violating laws of war, and crimes against humanity.

October 28, 1946: Stalin states views on foreign policy.

In reply to a questionnaire dealing with foreign affairs submitted by Hugh Baillie, president of United Press, Stalin disclosed that (a) the Soviet Union did not have the atomic bomb and supported plans for a strong control over atomic energy; (b) 60 divisions of the Soviet Army were stationed in central and eastern Europe while none were in Yugoslavia; (c) the Soviet Government favored economic and political reunification of Germany under a central administration; (d) he did not believe tensions were growing in Soviet-American relations, and that the veto power was not being overworked in the United Nations; and (e) former Prime Minister Churchill and people thinking his way in the United States and Britain were the most serious threat to world peace.

November 4, 1946: Foreign Ministers' Council of Big Four meets in New York to conclude peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland.

November 10, 1946: Communist poll largest vote in first elections under new French Constitution.

December 1946: "Communist-inspired" Azerbaijan and Kurdish regimes collapse.

December 2, 1946. Britain and United States sign agreement, to be effective January 1, 1947, for economic merger of German occupation zones designed to make zones self-sustaining in 3 years.

December 30, 1946: United Nations Atomic Energy Commission approves American plan for far-reaching provisions for atomic control and inspection; Soviets and Poles abstain.

On February 18, 1946, the Soviets opposed the provision for international control recommended in the Commission's first report. The Soviet's delegate vetoed subsequent efforts of the Security Council to draw up a plan for atomic control.

January 19, 1957: Poland's first general election, preceded by Communist repressive measures against non-Communists, gives "pro-Soviet" Government bloc a majority and political control.

The United States and Great Britain protested against the violations of the Yalta agreement providing for free and unfettered elections. On February 4, Communist leader Boleslaw Bierut was elected President of the Polish Republic. During the year 1948 Poland was transformed into a Communist-dominated Soviet satellite state.

March 10–April 24, 1947: Moscow conference of Big Four foreign ministers reveal wide disagreement on German question.

American and British policy aimed at making West Germany economically self-supporting directly opposed the Soviet demand for $10 billion in reparations from Germany to be paid from current production.

March 12, 1947: Truman doctrine is proclaimed providing aid to Greece and Turkey.

June 5, 1947: Secretary of State Marshall launches Marshall Plan for European recovery in Harvard commencement address.

July 12–15, 1947: Sixteen west European nations confer in Paris on drafting European recovery program (Marshall Plan).

August 31, 1947: Hungarian Communists win in general election after period of terrorism and political suppression.

September 2, 1947. United States signs Treaty of Rio de Janeiro providing for mutual assistance among American republics.

October 5, 1947:

Soviets establish Cominform.

The purpose of the Communist Information Bureau (Cominform) was to coordinate the activities of the Communist parties of Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary, Poland, France, Czechoslovakia, Italy, and the Soviet Union. Headquarters were set up in Belgrade. Western students of Communist strategy and tactics believed the organization to be the successor to the Comintern.

October 24, 1947: Alexander S. Panyushkin succeeds N. V. Novikov as Soviet Ambassador to United States.

December 15, 1947: Fifth session of Council of Foreign Ministers convened in London November 29, adjourns indefinitely after failure to reach agreement on Germany.

March 14–31, 1948. Congress passes Foreign Assistance Act (Marshall plan) and authorizes initial $5.3 billion for European recovery.

March 17, 1948: Britain, France, Belgium, Netherlands, and Luxembourg sign Brussels Treaty.

The treaty established a 50-year alliance among signatory nations against armed attack in Europe. It provided also for economic, social, and military cooperation.

June 11, 1948: Senate approves so-called Vandenberg resolution supporting principle of U.S. association with certain types of regional collective security arrangements.

June 19, 1948: Congress passes peacetime selective service bill.

June 24, 1948: Soviets institute Berlin blockade in attempt to force United States, Britain, and France out of city; Allies respond with counterblockade and initiate massive airlift to relieve beleaguered Berlin.

June 28, 1948: Cominform expel Tito's Yugoslavia from membership, charging doctrinal errors and hostility toward U.S.S.R.

August 15, 1948: Republic of Korea is proclaimed with Syngman Rhee as President.

The Republic was formed after repeated failures by the United States and the United Nations to reach agreement with the Soviets and North Koreans on the formation of a government. The Soviets would not permit U.N. supervised elections for a National Constituent Assembly in its zone. The United Nations Commission thereupon recommended elections in South Korea alone for a new National Assembly.

August 25, 1948: Soviet Union breaks off consular relations with United States when Washington refused to surrender Soviet citizen against her will.

September 9, 1948: Korean People's Democratic Republic is established over North Korea under presidency of Communist leader Kim Il Sung.

The Republic claimed authority over the entire nation. Its institutions were modeled after those of the Soviet Union.

October 28, 1948: Stalin charges West with aggression in Berlin.

In an interview with a Pravda correspondent, Stalin charged that the Western Powers repudiated two agreements relating to Berlin and that the "policy of the present leaders of the United States and Great Britain is a policy of aggression."

November 6, 1948: Soviet leader Malenkov stresses peace propaganda theme in speech commemorating Bolshevik revolution.

December 12, 1948: United Nations General Assembly endorses South Korean government as only lawfully elected one and establishes commission to aid in unifying country.

February 8, 1949:

Cardinal Mindszenty is found guilty and is sentenced to life imprisonment in Hungary amid protests by West.

Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty, Roman Catholic primate of Hungary, arrested in December on charges of treason, espionage, and black market dealings, was brought to trial on February 3 and sentenced by the Hungarian Government. A resolution passed by the House of Representatives condemned the Mindszenty trial.

February 9, 1949: Negotiations continue on Austrian treaty by Big Four negotiators.

February 2, 1949: French Communists protest against NATO treaty and assert policy of nonresistance if Soviet Union occupies France as other Communists in other countries stress same line.

March 4, 1949:

FBI arrests Justice Department employee and Soviet diplomat on suspicion of espionage.

Valentin A. Gubitchev, a Soviet engineer working for the United Nations, and Judith Coplon, an employee with the Justice Department, were arrested in New York. On June 30, Miss Coplon was convicted as a Soviet spy and sentenced from 40 months to 10 years. Trial for the charge for conspiracy to commit espionage with Gubitchev was set for a future date.

April 1, 1949:

Soviet Government protests formally to member states of NATO.

At the beginning of the year the Soviet Foreign Ministry denounced the proposed NATO treaty as a reflection of alleged aggressive Anglo-American aims.

April 4, 1949:

North Atlantic Treaty is signed in Washington.

Signatories to the treaty were the foreign ministers of Great Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Italy, Portugal, Denmark, Iceland, Norway, the United States, and Canada. The treaty provided for mutual aid against aggression within the North Atlantic area. It provided also for close cooperation in military planning, training, and arms production under the direction of a North Atlantic Council.

April 20, 1949:

Adm. Alan G. Kirk succeeds Gen. W. B. Smith as U.S. Ambassador to Soviet Union.

May 1949:

Belgium, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and United Kingdom sign Statute of Council of Europe.

On August 8, the Committee of Ministers recommended that Greece, Turkey, and Iceland be brought into the membership. Greece and Turkey accepted immediately.

May 4, 1949: Western Powers and Soviet Union formally agree to lift Berlin blockade and counterblockade.

May 23, 1949: West German Federal Republic comes into existence after Western Parliamentary Council adopts basic law for establishing republic.

May 23–June 20, 1949: Big Four foreign ministers meeting in Paris fail to agree on proposed German reunification and peace treaty.

June 29, 1949: United States completes evacuation of occupation forces from South Korea.

August 1, 1949:

United States and Great Britain formally ask Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania to join in appointing commissions to consider their violations of human rights provisions of peace treaties.

On September 14, the Communist governments rejected the Anglo-American proposal.

August 7, 1949: Hungarian Government proclaims establishment of People's Republic and adopts constitution along Soviet model.

August 24, 1949: President Truman proclaims NATO treaty in effect after ratifications by signatory governments are deposited.

September 1949: Soviet Union denounces friendship and mutual assistance treaty with Yugoslavia as other satellite states take similar action.

September 21, 1949: West German Federal Government formally begins in Bonn with promulgation of occupation statute and establishment of Allied High Commission to replace military government.

September 23, 1949: President Truman reports detection of first Soviet atomic explosion.

September 24, 1949: Laszlo Rajk, Hungarian Communist leader, is sentenced to death for treason and hanged on October 15.

October 1, 1949: Chinese Communists proclaim People's Republic of China.

October 6, 1949: President Truman signs Mutual Defense Assistance Act providing more than $1 billion for military aid primarily to NATO members.

October 7, 1949: Soviets establish German Democratic Republic in Soviet Zone of East Germany.

October 14, 1949: Leaders of American Communist Party are convicted for conspiracy to advocate violent overthrow of Government and sentenced to fines and imprisonment.

November 22, 1949: Hungarian Government announces arrest of Robert A. Vogeler, American I.T. & T. executive, allegedly on charges of sabotage and espionage.

November 29, 1949: Cominform calls for overthrow of Tito's government and appeals for organization of European workers in campaign against Western "imperialism."

December 8, 1949: Nationalist Chinese complete withdrawal from mainland China to Formosa (Taiwan).

December 10, 1949: Chinese Communists conquer nearly all China.

December 14, 1949:

Traicho Kostov is found guilty in Bulgaria as United States denies implication.

The Bulgarian Communist leader was found guilty of treason and espionage; sentenced to death and executed on December 16. On the 20th U.S. Minister Donald Heath denied Communist charges that he was implicated in the Kostov "conspiracy." On January 19, 1950, Mr. Heath was declared persona non grata by the Bulgarian regime and his recall requested. On February 20, the United States suspended diplomatic relations with the Bulgarians.

January 21, 1950:

Alger Hiss is found guilty of perjury.

The former State Department official denied any Communist affiliations. He also denied turning over State Department secrets to the Soviet Union before World War II. Mr. Hiss was, however, found guilty and sentenced on January 25 to a prison term of 5 years, as a result of a second trial.

January 29, 1950: United States agrees to provide arms and equipment to members of NATO.

January 31, 1950: President Truman instructs Atomic Energy Commission to continue with work on hydrogen bomb.

February 11, 1950: Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin, charges 57 Communists work in State Department; State Department denies charge.

February 14, 1950: Sino-Soviet 30-year treaty of alliance is signed.

February 17–20, 1950: Hungarian court convicts and sentences Robert A. Vogeler, American I.T. & T. executive, to 15 years in prison allegedly for sabotage and espionage.

March 7, 1950:

Judith Coplon, former Justice Department employee, and Soviet diplomat Valentin A. Gubitchev are convicted of being Soviet spies.

The Coplon conviction was reversed by U.S. Court of Appeals in New York on December 5 on legal technicalities. Gubitchev was sentenced to 15 years in prison, but the sentence was suspended on his promise never to return to the United States. On March 20, the Soviet diplomat returned to the Soviet Union.

March 15–19, 1950: Communist World Peace Congress meets in Stockholm, Sweden, and issues "Stockholm Peace Appeal."

April 8, 1950:

Soviets shoot down American patrol plane over Baltic.

In the exchange of notes that followed the incident the United States denied that the unarmed plane transgressed Soviet territory and asked for an apology, punishment for the offenders and an appropriate indemnity. The Soviets rejected the charges.

May 1950:

Soviets highlight "peace" propaganda drive with dissemination throughout world of Stockholm "Peace Appeal."

May 23, 1950:

FBI arrests Harry Gold on charges of carrying on espionage for Soviet Union.

June 6, 1950:

East Germans and Poles establish frontier at Oder-Neisse line in treaty agreement.

June 9, 1950:

Soviet Union's Cominform journal, For A Lasting Peace, urges strengthening of "peace" movement and charges West with war preparations.

June 16, 1950:

FBI arrests David Greenglass as suspected atom spy in Gold-Fuchs spy ring.

June 25, 1950:

Communist forces from North Korea invade South Korea.

June 27, 1950:

United States enters Korean war.

President Truman ordered American air and sea forces to support the South Korean troops. He further ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa or an attack from Formosa on the mainland, and announced increased military aid to the Philippines and Indochina. On the 30th, Mr. Truman authorized American Air Force missions above the 38th parallel, ordered a naval blockade of the Korean coast, and authorized the use of American ground units in the Korean war.

June 30, 1950:

Cominform press charges United States with "aggression" in Korea.

July 17, 1950:

FBI arrests Julius Rosenberg on charges of engaging in atomic espionage for Soviet Union in Fuchs-Gold spy ring.

August 18, 1950:

FBI seizes Morton Sobell, eighth atomic spy suspect in Fuchs-Gold spy ring.

August 18, 1950:

United Nations forces stop Communist drive at Taegu, about sixty miles from Pusan, Korea.

September 5, 1950:

U.S. fighter planes shoot down Soviet bomber off western Korea.

September 12–19, 1950:

Western Big Three decision to liberalize policies on West Germany provokes Soviet criticism.

At a meeting in New York the Foreign Ministers of the United States, Britain and France agreed upon a more liberal policy toward Western Germany. They further agreed to include a West German contingent in a united Western defense force. The Soviet bloc Foreign Ministers meeting in conference at Prague on October 20–21 denounced the Western decisions, opposed West Germany's remilitarization, and called for German unification and a German peace treaty.

September 15–16, 1950:

American and South Korean forces land at Inchon and advance toward 38th parallel.

September 23, 1950:

Congress passes internal security bill calling for registration of Communists and Communist "front" organizations.

October 9, 1950:

General MacArthur, Commanding General of U.N. forces, orders crossing of 38th parallel and in three weeks approaches Manchurian border.

October 23, 1950:

Justice Department begins roundup of 86 alien Communists for deportation under Internal Security Act.

November 26, 1950:

Chinese Communist forces intervene en masse in Korean war and by end of year drive U.N. forces back to area of 38th parallel.

December 9, 1950:

Harry Gold is sentenced to 30 years in prison for engaging in Soviet espionage.

December 16, 1950:

President Truman declares state of national emergency.

December 18–19, 1950:

General Eisenhower is appointed commander in chief of NATO forces with headquarters in Paris.

December 29, 1950: President Truman signs bill authorizing use of $38 million of Marshall plan funds to aid Yugoslavia.

April 3, 1951: United Nations forces halt Communists' first spring offensive in Korea and counterattack across 38th parallel.

April 11, 1951: General MacArthur is relieved of commands in Far East and is succeeded by Gen. Matthew Ridgway.

May 15, 1951: Chinese Communist and North Korean forces launch second spring offensive and withdraw after week of heavy losses.

May 27, 1951: Chinese Communists announce "peaceful liberation" of Tibet after military invasion.

June 20, 1951: FBI arrests 17 Communist leaders.

June 23, 1951:

Soviets give hint of accepting armistice talks in Korea.

Soviet representative to the United Nations Jacob A. Malik indicated in a vaguely worded radio broadcast over an American network Soviet wishes for a cease-fire and armistice talks in Korea. On June 25, President Truman expressed the Government's willingness to negotiate. On June 29, General Ridgway broadcast to the Communist commander in chief in Korea a proposal to negotiate an armistice. Subsequently, Communist and United Nations' military leaders conferred on a negotiated peace, though intermittent fighting on a reduced scale continued.

July 4, 1951: William N. Oatis, American newsman, is sentenced to 10 years imprisonment by Czechoslovak court on espionage charges.

July 26, 1951: FBI arrests more "second-string" Communists.

August 28, 1951: FBI seizes seven leading Hawaiian Communists.

August 30, 1951: Philippines and United States conclude mutual defense pact in first of series of security pacts between anti-Communist powers in Far East.

September 8, 1951: Peace treaty for Japan is signed at San Francisco by delegates of Japan and 48 other powers without adherence of Soviet and other Communist delegates who boycott final session.

September 10, 1951:

Western foreign ministers confer on measures to contain Soviet aggression.

Meeting in Washington in a 2-day conference, the foreign ministers of Great Britain, France, and the United States agreed on plans for a German "peace contract" to replace the occupation statute and on the integration of West German forces in a European army.

September 14, 1951: Western Powers announce intention of persisting in efforts to conclude Austrian state treaty in face of Soviet intransigence.

September 15, 1951: 12-nation NATO Council confers on defense matters in Ottawa and recommends Greek and Turkish admission to NATO.

October 10, 1951: President Truman signs $7.48 billion Mutual Security Act of 1951.

October 26, 1951: Battle bill, imposing new security controls on East-West trade, is signed into law.

November 1951: Disarmament talks reach stalemate in United Nations General Assembly.

November 14, 1951: Yugoslavia and United States conclude arms aid pact under mutual security program.

November 21, 1951: Soviets demand revocation of Mutual Security Act, particularly section relating to Soviet-bloc escapees and residents; United States rejects protest.

December 27, 1951: Korean armistice talks continue in stalemate on issue of prisoner exchange and building of airfields in North Korea during armistice.

January 1952: World Communists stress "peace" propaganda theme.

February 20–25, 1952: NATO Council, meeting in Lisbon, agrees to reorganize NATO and adopts goal of 50 divisions in West Europe before end of 1952.

February 22, 1952: Communists charge United Nations forces in Korea with germ warfare and continue making charges throughout Korean war.

March 10, 1952:

Soviet-Western Allies deadlock over Germany continues.

The Soviet Government delivered notes to the United States, Britain, and France calling for a four-power conference to discuss the reunification and rearmament of Germany. On March 23, the Western Powers replied in notes drafted identically that they would consider the formation of an all-German Government solely on the basis of free elections. Such a government should be free to join the European army and participate in security agreements with other states. The note further declared that the German frontiers drawn at the Potsdam Conference of 1945 were subject to revision.

March 31, 1952: Soviet-organized International Association of Democratic Lawyers formally charges United States with germ warfare in Korea.

April 2, 1952: George F. Kennan, State Department Soviet specialist, becomes U.S. Ambassador to Soviet Union, succeeding Adm. Alan G. Kirk.

April 29, 1952: Anzus security treaty between Australia, New Zealand, and United States enters into force.

May 27, 1952: Treaty setting up European Defense Community, with related agreements, is signed in Paris.

June 6, 1952: Georgi N. Zarubin succeeds A. S. Panyushkin as Soviet Ambassador to United States.

July 3, 1952: U.S. proposal for impartial investigation of Communist germ warfare charges is vetoed by Soviets in U.N. Security Council.

July 9, 1952: Soviets veto U.S. resolution presented to U.N. Security Council rejecting and condemning Communist germ warfare charges.

July 14, 1952: U.S. Air Defense Command charges Soviet planes scout Alaskan coastline.

August 5, 1952: Federal grand jury convicts 14 California Communist leaders.

October 3, 1952: Moscow demands recall of Ambassador George F. Kennan for "slanderous attacks" against Soviet Government.

October 5–14, 1952: 19th Congress of Communist Party of Soviet Union is held in Moscow.

October 9, 1952: Soviet fighters fire on B–29 bomber near Soviet-occupied Yuri Island north of Japan.

October 13–December 17, 1952: Senate Internal Security Subcommittee holds hearings in New York on activities of American citizens employed by United Nations.

November 20, 1952: Rudolf Slansky, Czechoslovak Communist leader, pleads guilty to treason and espionage charges, is sentenced to death, and executed December 3.

December 24, 1952: Stalin informs New York Times correspondent of his willingness to meet President-elect Eisenhower and of his favorable views on new approach to end Korean war.

January 7, 1953: President Truman delivers last state of the Union message, confirms fact that United States has hydrogen bomb, and warns Stalin of destructive consequences of hydrogen-atomic war.

January 16, 1953: American casualties reach 128,971 as Korean war continues.

January 20, 1953: General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower is sworn in as 34th President of United States.

January 21, 1953: 13 leaders of CPUSA are convicted, making record of convictions of all accused Communist leaders brought to trial since 1949.

January 27, 1953: William W. Remington, former Commerce Department economist, is convicted of perjury on two counts and later sentenced to prison.

February 6, 1953: Negotiations for Austrian State Treaty continue deadlocked as Soviets refuse to discuss existing treaty drafts.

February 18, 1953: Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin, carries on probe into State Department and Voice of America.

February 23, 1953: Captured American fliers in Korean war "confirm" germ warfare charge, Communists state.

February 28, 1953: Greece, Turkey, and Yugoslavia sign Balkan Pact, 5-year treaty of "friendship" and "collaboration."

March 5, 1953: Stalin dies at 9:50 p.m.

PART IV. FROM COLD WAR TO "PEACEFUL COEXISTENCE," OLD PROBLEMS AND NEW CHALLENGES IN A NEW AGE, 1953–60

The last 7 years produced a revolution in Soviet-American relations. These were years of detente and diversion in Soviet foreign policy, liquidation of the sharpest points of conflict in the cold war, crisis, adjustment and consolidation within the Communist bloc, and a spreading belief among Soviet leaders of a shift in the balance of world power favorable to world communism. American policy, outgoing, demonstrative, and forceful, focused on a buildup of even greater pressure along the periphery of the Sino-Soviet bloc. Bipolarity became a global confrontation on the grand scale. But in the midst of these countervailing forces a new age was born, the space age, which put into the hands of the Russians and the Americans instruments of long-range delivery. When wedded to the already developed and highly refined thermonuclear capability, these instruments gave each the capacity for decisive instantaneous destruction.

With Stalin's death, Soviet Russia's new leadership initiated what in restrospect appears to have been an era of gradual detente in Soviet foreign policy. Negotiations for an armistice in Korea, then, in the second year, were concluded within 3 months. War in Indochina was brought to a halt by a negotiated peace within less than a year. In May 1955, the first major break occurred in the Soviet position in Europe with the conclusion of the Austrian State Treaty after a decade of tedious and sometimes bitter negotiations. The first phase of this era of detente appeared to end with the first "summit" conference of heads of governments in July 1955. Henceforth, Soviet policy seemed to have been more intensely focused upon the underdeveloped areas of Asia and Africa. Blocked in Europe, the Soviets seemed to probe for "soft" spots in the colonial areas and former dependencies of the Western Powers. Bulganin and Khrushchev completed their extraordinary tour of southern Asia. Coupled with the launching of a vigorous trade and aid campaign, this unprecedented venture into personal diplomacy demonstrated concretely the new diversionary thrust of Soviet foreign policy.

By this time the instability within the so-called collective leadership in the Soviet Union seemed to have lessened as Khrushchev assumed greater authority in partnership with Bulganin. By 1957, Khrushchev, having effectively consolidated his power within the party apparatus, conveniently disposed of Bulganin and assumed dominating power in the Soviet Union. Khrushchev's new prominence put him in the position to impose his point of view which was defined simply as a political detente domestically, internationally, and within the Communist bloc. This changing view had widespread implications for American foreign policy. At the 20th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party in February 1956, Khrushchev endowed his policy of detente with the raiment of doctrinal authority. The enormous growth of the Communist bloc, the prospects for equally enormous expansion of Soviet economic, political, and military power and the emerging "zone of peace"—as he described the Afro-Asian neutralist states—had now outmoded the Leninist concept of the inevitability of war with the "capitalist camp." Khrushchev implied further that "capitalist encirclement"—the traditional bogey of Stalin's era—was no longer valid. He stated categorically his belief in the ultimate victory of communism, arguing that "peaceful coexistence" was the only valid basis upon which Soviet foreign policy could be based. At the 21st Congress in 1959, Khrushchev reaffirmed this same doctrine, asserting that in the present era when mutual destruction was a reality of international life no other course than "peaceful coexistence" was rationally acceptable. He stated emphatically that the era of "capitalist encirclement" had now positively ended and that balance of world forces had shifted decisively away from the "capitalist camp" toward the "Communist camp."

During these years crises occurred along the Turkish-Syrian border, the Lebanon, in Eastern Europe, the Far East, and in Berlin, but, however grave they may have seemed at the time, they did not alter appreciably the main approach of the Soviet Union to foreign policy. It is still unclear whether or not the Berlin crisis of 1958 was intended as only a tactical maneuver to achieve larger political objectives. And in Khrushchev's words are to be taken at face value—and his power to control policy in the last few years seems to have been unquestioned—even the U–2 incident and the calculated act of wrecking the second summit conference will not necessarily mean a drastic change of Soviet policy from "peaceful coexistence" to a renewal of the cold war. Presently, there is serious doctrinal conflict between Communist China and the Soviet Union over this very point. Peiping opposes Khrushchev's doctrine of denying the inevitability of war with capitalism and argues for a harder Stalinist policy in world affairs. The difference between both points of view is one of means and not ends. Both seeks the destruction of "world capitalism," one by an enormous buildup of power-in-being to be employed in a campaign of peaceful attrition; the other by direct engagement, confrontation and open struggle.

One of the dominant features of American policy toward Soviet Russia during this period seemed to be a vigorous assertion of power. Energetic, and even on occasion daring, American policy sought to create pressures against the Communist bloc in a critical confrontation of power. Reflecting largely the thinking of Secretary of State Dulles, American policy seemed to strive for a stage beyond containment.

"Massive retaliation" was the term used to describe the general strategical conception within which American policy was to operate. Some of the practical manifestations of this policy were: (a) the creation of the European Defense Community (EDC), the integration of West Germany into NATO, and providing for the defense of Europe with the distribution of missiles and nuclear warheads among the NATO forces; (b) the deneutralization of the Formosa Strait, unleasing and then leashing the Nationalist forces on Taiwan, and ultimately committing the United States to the defense of the offshore islands; (c) the active buildup of military and economic power in Indochina against Communist aggression, including considering the idea of military intervention; (d) conclusion of anti-Communist mutual defense pacts with the free peoples of Asia, particularly the founding of SEATO; (e) participation in the formation of the Baghdad Pact (METO); (f) proclamation of the Eisenhower doctrine for the defense of free peoples in the Middle East against Communist aggression; (g) sending of troops to Lebanon and support for Turkey in the Turkish-Syrian crisis; (h) providing leadership in the struggle against communism in Latin America and throughout the Western Hemisphere. The limitations of American policy in dealing with political disturbances in the Communist world were revealed by the decision not to intervene militarily in East Berlin during the anti-Communist riots of 1953 and in Poland and Hungary during the crises of 1956. Following the tradition established in aiding Yugoslavia, the United States would go no further than to provide temporary material relief to the East Germans and negotiate economic aid agreements with Poland's Gomulka regime.

Soviet-American relations in this period had a direct influence on American domestic affairs as seen in the increased concern over the Communist threat from within the United States. Congress passed numerous anti-Communist bills, and the President signed them into law. The administration took further measures to safeguard the Nation against internal subversion. And committees of Congress undertook extensive investigations of Communist infiltration in Government, education, defense plants, and religious organizations.

At midpoint in 1960 old problems and new ones continue to exacerbate Soviet-American relations. A substantial barrier to accord persists in the Berlin issue, the German problem, and the general problem of European security. The Berlin Conference of 1954, the summit conference of 1955, the Foreign Ministers' Conferences of 1955 and 1959, and the ill-fated summit conference of 1960 failed to resolve these questions. Similarly, the crucial question of arms control continues unresolved. Instead of becoming more manageable this problem has become further complicated by the Soviet development of the hydrogen bomb. Nuclear stalemate persists and prospects are not bright for a drastic change. With the advent of the space age and the development and refinement of long-range rocketry, the last advantage of insularity ended for the United States. Instant massive destruction now lies within the power of both sides. The numerous atomic and hydrogen bomb tests in 1956–1958 seemed to dramatize globally the problem of arms control, but the nuclear powers, though continuing a self-imposed restraint on testing so far as is publicly known, have yet to settle one of the most important questions in any arms control program, nuclear test suspension. Perhaps, the only really bright spot in recent Soviet-American relations has been the expansion of cultural exchanges, but even in this instance the positive effects are purely atmospheric and do not in any direct way alter the hard fact that grave political questions divide the United States and the Soviet Union.

March 5, 1953:

Georgi M. Malenkov assumes Stalin's position as Chairman of Council of Ministers (Premier).

From the death of Stalin to the assumption of total power by Khrushchev the Soviet Union was ruled by what Soviet leaders called a collective leadership. Comprising this political leadership were the leading figures in the Soviet Presidium and Central Committee during Stalin's last days, notably Molotov, Bulganin, Kaganovich, Beria, Zhukov, Mikoyan, Voroshilov, and Khrushchev.

March 14, 1953:

Soviet and American planes exchange fire off Kamchatka coast.

According to an Air Force announcement, the American plane, an RB–50 bomber, was flying a weather reconnaissance mission 25 miles off the coast of Kamchatka. The plane returned the fire after the MIG shot at it without warning. The U.S. Government filed a protest in Moscow on March 18 demanding punishment of the Soviet pilot and assurances that the incident would not be repeated. On March 23, the Soviet Government rejected the American protest, charging that the plane violated Soviet airspace.

March 14, 1953: Malenkov resigns from Secretariat of CPSU Central Committee, making way for Khrushchev's political ascendancy.

March 15, 1953: Soviet Premier Malenkov declares East-West conflicts can be settled by peaceful means in address to Supreme Soviet.

March 16, 1953:

Senator KNOWLAND, Republican of California, urges imposition of total blockade on Chinese Communist coast and move for U.N. condemnation of Soviet Union as "supporter of aggression" in Far East.

On February 2, President Eisenhower declared in his first state-of-the-Union message that the U.S. 7th Fleet would no longer deter Nationalist Chinese attacks on the mainland. The Straits of Formosa had been neutralized since the beginning of the Korean war by order of President Truman.

March 19, 1953: West German Bundestag approves EDC treaty and contractual agreements; Bundesrat takes similar action on May 15, making way for exercise of greater West German sovereignty and entry into NATO.

March 25, 1953:

Senate investigation subcommittee under Senator McCarthy launches investigation into State Department's oversea libraries.

In testimony before the subcommittee Louis F. Budenz, a former American Communist, indicated that "at least 75" Communists were cited in a partial list of writers whose books were in these libraries. Mr. Budenz asserted that he believed a "concealed Communist" was responsible.

March 27, 1953: Charles E. Bohlen, State Department Soviet specialist, is confirmed as Ambassador to Soviet Union by 74 to 13 vote of Senate.

March 30, 1953: FBI Director Hoover states American Communists have gone underground.

April 3, 1953:

Secretary Dulles voices skepticism of Soviet peace drive.

At a news conference Mr. Dulles said: "Nothing that has happened, or which seems to me likely to happen, has changed the basic situation of danger in which we stand." Three "basic facts" remained, he said: (1) The Soviet Union was still a "heavily armed totalitarian state" under the dictatorship of a "small group" that controlled "one-third of the people" and "the natural resources of the world;" (2) the Soviet leaders remained basically and deeply hostile to any other state that did not accept the Soviet system; and (3) the Soviet leaders "do not recognize any moral inhibitions against the use of violence." The Secretary added: "I see nothing which should delay or hamper the European Defense Community" and "the other basic policy measures that we are trying to take."

April 12, 1953: Ho Chi Minh's Vietminh troops numbering 40,000 invade Kingdom of Laos as war in Indochina continues.

April 13, 1953:

Australian Government grants asylum to Petrov and prepares for investigation into espionage charges.

Vladimir Petrov, formerly third secretary and consul at the Soviet Embassy in Canberra, had requested and was granted political asylum. Subsequently, the Australian Government set up a royal commission empowered to investigate evidence of espionage and attempted subversion in Australia. The reports of the commission published sometime later disclosed widespread Soviet espionage activity in Australia.

April 16, 1953:

President Eisenhower asks Soviet Union for "deeds" and not "mere rhetoric."

In a major declaration of American foreign policy as an answer to the Soviet "peace offensive" President Eisenhower challenged the Soviet Government to agree to an "honorable armistice" in Korea which would bring about "free" elections in a united Korea; "an end to the direct" and "indirect attacks upon the security" of Indochina and Malaya; "a treaty with Austria which will free that country from economic exploitation" and "from occupation by foreign troops"; "a broader European Community, conducive to the free movement of persons, of trade" and "of ideas," a community which was to include a "free" and "united" Germany with a government based upon the exercise of a "free" and "secret" ballot, and finally, to agree to the "full independence" of the satellite states.

April 23–25, 1953: NATO Council holds 11th meeting in Paris and approves long-haul concept for Western defense.

April 28, 1953: Soviets suggest "Big Five" peace pact to include Communist China.

May 1953: American Communists follow Soviet "peace" line, urge "united front" tactic, and broadening base of party action.

May 11, 1953:

British Prime Minister Churchill calls for meeting with Soviets "at the highest level."

The Soviets favored many of the Prime Minister's suggestions but in an article published in Pravda on May 24 rejected the idea of a new "Locarno" settlement in Eastern Europe. The significance of the Prime Minister's proposal for a "summit conference lies in the fact that it established the idea for a head of government meeting similar to those during the war, in the thinking of world political leaders. Almost 2 years to the week the first postwar "summit" conference convened in Geneva.

May 15–16, 1953: Czechoslovak regime pardons William N. Oatis, American newsman, imprisoned for 2 years for alleged espionage activities.

May 22, 1953: World Communists declare "Peoples Demand Peace Pact" as Soviets press "peaceful coexistence" line.

May 28, 1953:

President Eisenhower rejects independent action in Korea.

Senator Robert A. Taft, Republican, of Ohio, urged the administration to negotiate a truce in Korea if possible, but if unsuccessful, to act independently of the United Nations in the Far East. The President disallowed any go-it-alone policy.

June 1, 1953: Rioting breaks out in Plzen (Pilsen) and other areas of Czechoslovakia.

June 10, 1953:

NATO is described as "weak" in report.

The second annual report of the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe described NATO's European command as "still critically weak to accomplish its mission."

June 17, 1953:

Riots erupt in East Berlin.

The strikes began with a protest on labor conditions. Subsequent rioting got out of control and Soviet tanks and troops were brought in to bring about order. A state of siege was proclaimed and maintained until July 12. The East Berlin riots marked the first major protest against Soviet rule in Eastern Europe that provoked physical violence and Soviet military intervention.

June 19, 1953: Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, convicted atom spies, are executed at Sing Sing Prison.

June 26, 1953:

World Communists denounce Rosenberg executions.

Communist criticism, bitter in substance and accompanied by mass protests, seemed to be a part of the major Soviet campaign to discredit the United States in the eyes of the world.

July 1, 1953: President Eisenhower rejects intervention in Eastern Europe to aid anti-Communist uprisings.

July 3, 1953: Imre Nagy replaces Rakosi as Hungarian Communist head and institutes radical change in economic plans.

July 10, 1953:

Beria, Soviet secret police head, is dismissed and arraigned on treason charges.

Press reports at the time indicated that Beria, using his position as head of the powerful Soviet secret police, made a bid for power, but was struck down by a coalition within the collective leadership.

July 10, 1953: Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther replaces Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway as Supreme Commander of NATO.

July 27, 1953: Armistice agreement is signed in Korea ending 3 years of war; armistice line is established roughly along 38th parallel, the initial dividing line between North and South Korea.

July 27–August 16, 1953: United States distributes food parcels to East Germans in Berlin totaling some 2,600,000 parcels in first phase.

July 29, 1953:

Soviet jet fighters shoot down American B–50 bomber off Vladivostok.

According to a Soviet note acknowledging the action by the Soviet planes, the American bomber had violated Siberian air frontiers and opened fire first on the Soviet aircraft. Of the 17 men aboard the plane only 1 was known to have survived. The United States rejected the Soviet note.

August 8, 1953:

Malenkov stresses peaceful coexistence in address.

In an address before the Supreme Soviet, Premier Malenkov announced that there would be increased budgetary allocations to consumer goods, light industry, and agriculture. He stressed the theme of peaceful coexistence between states with contrasting systems and announced that the United States no longer had a monopoly on the hydrogen bomb.

August 12, 1953: Soviets explode hydrogen bomb.

September 2, 1953: Secretary Dulles warns Chinese Communists.

September 12, 1953:

Khrushchev is named to politically important post of First Secretary of CPSU's Central Committee.

Khrushchev was now in a unique position to build support for his ascendancy to total power. As First Secretary, he was in control of the party apparatus which in the succeeding years he was able to manipulate to his own political advantage. Significantly, Stalin's rise to power stemmed largely from his control over the party apparatus as General Secretary, a post he held from the early 1920's until his death.

October 1, 1953: United States and South Korea conclude mutual defense treaty.

October 6–December 14, 1953: Vice President NIXON tours 19 Far Eastern and Middle Eastern countries as President's personal representative.

October 6, 1953: American airmen repudiate alleged germ warfare confessions declaring that Communists extracted statements from them by torture.

October 12, 1953: U.N. Command charges Communists with moving military aircraft into North Korea in violation of armistice agreement.

November 12, 1953: World Communists put party strength at 25 million.

November 26, 1953:

Soviets agree to confer on Germany.

In a series of notes beginning on July 15 with the Western proposal for a conference on Germany and Austria, the Soviet Government and the Western powers finally agreed to confer in Berlin in January 1954 on the subject of Austria and Germany and easing tensions. Agreement to hold the conference was reached only when the Soviets dropped their condition that Communist China be invited.

December 14–16, 1953:

Secretary Dulles warns of "agonizing reappraisal" of policy.

At the 12th ministerial meeting of the NATO Council in Paris, Secretary Dulles discussed the possibility of an "agonizing reappraisal" of American policy toward Europe. The warning was issued by the Secretary to persuade Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, and particularly France to complete ratification of the EDC treaty. Described as the strongest effort by the United States to put pressure on the Allies, the Dulles warning was critically received in certain quarters of Western Europe. At a press conference later Mr. Dulles remarked, that if the West European nations "decide to commit suicide they may have to commit it alone."

December 21, 1953: Soviet Union agrees to confer on peaceful uses of atomic energy as proposed by President Eisenhower in U.N. address on December 8.

December 23, 1953: Vietminh's Communist forces numbering 20,000 reinvades Laos and reach frontier of Thailand, severing Indochina in a 5-day drive across Laos.

December 23, 1953: Beria, former Soviet police head, and six associates are sentenced to death and executed for treason.

January 12, 1954:

Secretary Dulles lays down "massive retaliation" strategy to hold Communist aggression.

In a speech before the Council on Foreign Relations in New York, Mr. Dulles warned that the United States would be prepared to meet aggression with instant retaliation "by means and at places of our own choosing." The Secretary disclosed that President Eisenhower and the National Security Council had recharted the basic security strategy of the Nation in an effort to "assure the stamina needed for permanent" world peace. According to the Secretary, they had decided that the best way in which to deter aggression was "to depend primarily upon a great capacity to retaliate instantly."

January 24, 1954: Yuri A. Rastvorov, Soviet espionage agent in Japan, asks asylum in United States; request is granted on August 13.

January 25–February 18, 1954:

Berlin Conference of Big Four Foreign Ministers deadlocks on German reunification and conclusion of Austrian treaty.

Some of the points in dispute were as follows: (a) Soviet insistence upon the Germans themselves undertaking reunification procedures without interference by the Big Four (the West insisted upon reunification brought about under Big Four responsibility and through genuinely free elections); (b) Soviet demands for guarantees that a united Germany would shun military coalitions, a restriction on German sovereignty the West would not admit. Mr. Dulles commented that the Soviet Union had "no intention of seriously seeking German unity with freedom" and was "actually attempting to hold on to the Soviet position in East Germany by preventing free elections" which the Soviets feared would "reject the present imposed regime."

February 20, 1954: Nikolai E. Khokhlov, Soviet secret police agent, seeks political asylum in United States and request is subsequently granted.

March 1, 26, and April 6, 1954: United States tests three thermonuclear devices in Pacific.

March 8, 1954: United States and Japan concluded Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement.

March 1–28, 1954:

Tenth Inter-American Conference is held in Caracas, Venezuela, and adopts "Declaration of Solidarity for the Preservation of the American States against International Communist Intervention."

On March 13, the Conference adopted the resolution by a vote of 17–1. Only Guatemala voted against the resolution. Secretary Dulles urged adoption of the resolution as part of the drive for collective inter-American action against communism. Mr. Dulles stated that not a "single country in this hemisphere" had not been "penetrated by the apparatus of international communism." The resolution condemned communism and suggested general and specific procedures for coordinating action against Communist activities.

March 13–May 7, 1954: Dienbienphu, key French stronghold, is besieged and captured by Communist Vietminh forces as war in Indochina reaches critical stage.

March 19, 1954:

Secretary Dulles explains "new look" in defense against communism.

In a review of the "new look" foreign and military policy of the Administration before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State Dulles declared that the purpose of the policy was to warn the Soviet Union that it would be "hit with everything we have" if it attacked the United States or "our vital interests." According to Mr. Dulles, the greatest deterrent to war was a "capability for massive retaliation without delay." This did not mean that "every local war" would be turned into a "general war." Mr. Dulles pointed out that the greatest factor in the new policy was its element of "selectivity" which enabled the free world to use its "special resources" to the "maximum possible advantage" and to act in the most effective manner against each threat as it arose.

March 29, 1954:

Secretary Dulles urges "united action" to halt Communist advance in Indochina; President reaffirms policy on intervention.

In a major address before the Overseas Press Club, Secretary Dulles asserted that a Communist victory in Indochina would lead to Communist domination of Southeast Asia. "That possibility should not be passively accepted but should be met by united action," the Secretary said. The Secretary also disclosed that the Vietminh Communist rebels were getting extensive military aid from the Sino-Soviet bloc.

On the following day President Eisenhower, who had approved the Secretary's speech in advance, indicated that he did not plan to use American troops in Indochina. The President restated the view, recognized as basic policy, that he could conceive of no greater disadvantage to the United States than to employ its military forces in great quantities around the world in order to meet each situation as it arose. American policy, he said, was to strengthen our allies sufficiently for them to handle local situations alone with financial, moral, and political assistance and with United States military help only in instances vital to the United States.

April 1, 1954: Communist Vietminh forces invade Cambodia in Indochina.

April 9, 1954: Communist press denounces EDC and West German rearmament.

April 16, 1954:

Vice President NIXON suggests possibility of American intervention in Indochina war.

In Washington, Vice President NIXON told a meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors that the United States, as a leader of the free world, could not afford further retreat in Asia and that Indochina presented a most urgent problem. American troops would have to be sent into Indochina, he said, if the only alternative were to permit the country to fall into Communist hands. Mr. NIXON also indicated that the United States had to be prepared to assume the initiative in Indochina alone, hoping that the allies would cooperate. The comment by the Vice President stirred critical comment in Congress from both parties. On April 19, Secretary Dulles stated that he thought it was "unlikely" that the United States would intervene.

During the critical months of the fighting in Indochina the United States poured in extensive aid in military equipment and supplies to strengthen the French and the South Vietnamese forces.

April 26–July 21, 1954: Geneva conference on Korean and Indochinese problems is held with Communist China participating and concludes armistice agreements for three Indochinese states ending years of war in Indochina.

May 7, 1954: Dienbienphu, French fortress in Vietnam, falls before Vietminh Communist onslaught.

May 17, 1954: United States expresses alarm at arms shipments to Guatemala from Communist Poland.

May 19, 1954: United States and Pakistan sign Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement.

June 26–28, 1954: Communist Chinese Prime Minister Chou En-lai reaffirms adherence to "five principles" of "peaceful coexistence" in visit to India.

June 29, 1954: Anti-Communist junta led by Castillo Armas overthrows regime of Jacobo Arbenz Guzman in Guatemala; Arbenz flees to Communist Czechoslovakia.

June 30, 1954: President Eisenhower deprecates "appeasement" in international relations but asserts that "peaceful coexistence" is "the hope of the world."

August 9, 1954: Treaty of Alliance, Political Collaboration, and Mutual Assistance is signed by Greece, Turkey, and Yugoslavia (Balkan Pact).

August 20 and 24, 1954: President Eisenhower signs into law anti-Communist bills.

September 4, 1954:

Soviet jet fighters shoot down U.S. Navy bomber off Siberia.

The Defense Department declared that the bomber was shot down while on a "peaceful patrol mission" more than 40 miles from the Siberian coast. Before the United States could lodge its protest to Soviet Russia against the "wanton" and "unprovoked attack," the Soviet Government charged that the American plane invaded Soviet territory and fired on the fighters. The United States denied the charge declaring the Navy plane was well within international waters.

September 6–8, 1954: Delegates from United States, Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, and Thailand meet in Manila to conclude Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty (SEATO).

September 27, 1954: United States and Canada agree on construction of distant early warning line of radar installations as detector of any Soviet plane attack.

September 28–October 3, 1954:

Western Foreign Ministers confer on West Germany's association with NATO.

The Foreign Ministers of Belgium, Canada, France, the West German Federal Republic, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Britain, and the United States meeting in London, drafted arrangements for the restoration of West German sovereignty and the inclusion of West Germany into the Western European Alliance.

October 5, 1954:

Trieste problem is solved as Italy, Yugoslavia, United States, and Britain, conclude memorandum of understanding providing for division of free territory of Trieste.

The Trieste question, involving Yugoslav and Italian claims to the territory of Trieste, had long been a serious problem growing out of World War II. Prior to Tito's break with the Cominform, Soviet Russia supported Yugoslavia's claims, using the issue as a means to stir up antagonisms and tensions in Europe. The West supported Italy. After Tito's expulsion from the Cominform, Yugoslavia moved gradually into closer political association with the Western Powers. The unsolved Trieste problem proved to be a powerful deterrent to a complete harmony of interests. The solution of the problem in 1954 had the effect of creating a greater bond of unity between NATO, to which Italy adhered, and the Balkan Pact which linked Yugoslavia indirectly to NATO through its commitments to Greece and Turkey.

October 22–23, 1954:

NATO Council acts on West German participation.

At a special ministerial session in Paris the NATO Council signed a protocol on West Germany's accession to NATO together with resolutions coordinating the functions of the West European Union with NATO.

October 26, 1954: U.S. Atomic Energy Commission confirms reports of series of nuclear detonations in Soviet Union in September and October.

October 29, 1954: Cominform press intensifies propaganda campaign against German rearmament.

November 7, 1954:

Soviet Mig fighters shot down American reconnaissance plane near Japan.

The plane was shot down while on a routine photo-mapping operation and according to Air Force authorities was "never in Russian territory" and, moreover, did not return the fire when attacked. The United States protested against the attack. The Soviets responded with the charge that the plane had "violated the state border."

December 2, 1954: United States and Nationalist China conclude mutual defense treaty.

December 17–18, 1954: NATO Council approves "forward strategy" for defense of Western Europe based on use of tactical atomic weapons.

December 31, 1954: House Select Committee on Communist Aggression publishes summary report outlining in detail acts of Soviet aggression and subversion.

January 29, 1955:

Formosa resolution is signed by President Eisenhower after passage in Congress, authorizing him to use force if necessary in Formosa Strait area.

The resolution was passed, on request of the President, as the Chinese Communists intensified their attacks on the Nationalist-held islands along the mainland.

February 5–11, 1955: Nationalist Chinese evacuate Tachen Islands off mainland coast, leaving them to Communist Chinese.

February 8, 1955:

Molotov reviews Soviet foreign affairs before Supreme Soviet.

In a 2½-hour speech on foreign policy delivered to the Supreme Soviet, Foreign Minister Molotov declared that the Soviet Union led the United States in the H-bomb race and was prepared to win an atomic war brought on by American "aggressors." The following principal points were made in the speech: in a new war the "rotten social system of the West would perish; Communist China had a rightful claim to Formosa; rearmament of West Germany would revive German militarism and prevent reunification; the United States pursues an "aggressive" policy as opposed to Soviet policy based on a desire for "peace."

Malenkov resigns as Soviet Premier and is replaced by Nikolai Bulganin.

At a meeting of the Supreme Soviet, Malenkov confessed his "guilt" and "responsibility" for the "unsatisfactory state of affairs which has arisen in agriculture." He endorsed also the further development of heavy industry. Previously, Malenkov had placed great emphasis upon consumer production, for which he had been criticized. During the proceedings of the Supreme Soviet, Khrushchev assumed the most conspicuous public position, and when he nominated Bulganin as Premier, he received a long ovation from the delegates present.

February 24, 1955:

Turkey and Iraq sign Baghdad pact of mutual defense; Britain accedes on April 5, Pakistan on September 23, and Iran on October 25.

On April 16, the Soviet Government condemned this Western-sponsored military alliance as a threat to Soviet security. In October and November, Foreign Minister Molotov warned the Iranians that membership in the pact was incompatible with good relations with the Soviet Union. The first meeting of the Baghdad Pact Council met on November 21–22 with American observers present.

April 6–10, 1955: Communist-inspired peace conference meeting in New Delhi with delegates from 13 nations calls for disarmament and peaceful coexistence.

May 6, 1955: United States reaffirms support of South Vietnam's anti-Communist leader, Ngo Dinh Diem.

May 6, 1955: West German Federal Republic formally becomes member of NATO.

May 7, 1955:

Soviet Government abrogates wartime treaties of alliance with Britain and France.

The Soviet action was taken in fulfillment of a threat made in December 1954 that if Britain and France ratified the Paris agreements to rearm West Germany, the Soviet Government would terminate their wartime treaties.

May 11–14, 1955: Soviet Union and East European states conclude treaty of alliance and joint military command (Warsaw Pact) at Warsaw, Poland, to enter into effect June 5.

May 15, 1955:

Austrian State Treaty is signed in Vienna by Foreign Ministers of Big Four and Austria.

Conclusion of the treaty meant the termination of 17 years of occupation of Austria, first by the Germans who seized the country on March 12, 1938, and then by the wartime Allies who occupied Austria since World War II. The treaty established Austria as a sovereign, independent and democratic state, and imposed the condition of neutrality on East-West relations.

May 26–June 2, 1955: Bulganin and Khrushchev visit Tito and issue joint declaration of friendship and cooperation, thus bringing to end temporarily breach existing since 1948.

June 22, 1955:

Soviet MIG's fire on Navy patrol plane over Bering Sea.

American Government asserted that the plane was over international waters when attacked by the MIG's. The incident was resolved satisfactorily when the Soviets agreed to pay reparation and expressed regret for the incident. The conciliatory Soviet action in this incident was said to have stemmed largely from its desire to contribute to a harmonious international mood prior to the first postwar summit conference.

June 30, 1955: United States and West Germany conclude mutual defense agreement.

July 18–23, 1955:

Summit conference convenes in Geneva.

The purpose of the conference was to seek ways to ease international tensions. Present were President Eisenhower, British Prime Minister Eden, French Premier Edgar Faure, and Soviet Premier Bulganin. The Foreign Ministers agreed upon a four-point agenda: German reunification, European security, disarmament, and improvement of East-West relations. Agreement on substantive issues was not reached at the conference, but discussion was deferred for the meeting of the Foreign Ministers in the fall.

The final directive agreed upon by the heads of governments instructed the Foreign Ministers to meet in Geneva in October to confer on the problem of German reunification and European security as well as improvement and development of East-West contacts.

In general, some observers have stated that the conference produced not more than an artificial climate of accord in East-West relations. The Soviet Union through its world Communist organizations stressed persistently the general theme, "the spirit of Geneva." When the Foreign Ministers conferred in October on the subjects outlined in the summit directive, however, the irreconciliability of the positions held by the negotiating powers became clearly evident.

July 23, 1955:

Senate Internal Security Subcommittee reveals Soviet record of broken treaties.

The subcommittee released a staff study on Soviet treaties with a statement that the Soviet Union had broken almost every one of some 1,000 treaties and agreements concluded in the previous 38 years. Senator EASTLAND, Democrat of Mississippi, chairman of the subcommittee, expressed doubt that "during the history of civilization any great nation has ever made as perfidious a record as this in so short a time." Mr. EASTLAND further questioned the value of any treaty concluded with a Communist regime.

August 4, 1955: U.S. Atomic Energy Commission announces detection of nuclear explosion in Soviet Union; similar announcements are made on September 4, November 10 and 25.

September 9–13, 1955: Soviet Union recognizes Federal Republic of West Germany in high-level diplomatic talks in Moscow and establishes diplomatic relations.

September 20, 1955: Soviet Union recognizes East German Democratic Republic as free and sovereign state.

October 27–November 16, 1955: Big Four Foreign Ministers' Conference meeting in Geneva fails to resolve problems of German reunification, European security systems, disarmament, and development of East-West contacts.

December 7–11, 1955: Council of Economic Mutual Aid meets in Budapest and takes measures to integrate Soviet and East European economies and trade.

December 8, 1955:

Secretary Dulles issues warning on Soviet tactics.

In an address before the Illinois Manufacturers Association in Chicago, Secretary Dulles asserted that the postwar decade of violence and threat seemed to "have undergone an eclipse" since spring, and "we are, it seems, in a new phase of the struggle between international communism * * * [and] freedom." Soviet rulers, "balked in their effort to extend their influence by force," had "picked the less-developed areas of the world as targets of their guile." The Soviets now have focused their efforts on subversion in these areas, and he warned that "we must act on the assumption that the present Soviet policies do not mark a change of purpose, but a change of tactics." The Secretary also declared that armed aggression would be met by collective action and that the free nations were "prepared to implement this political warning with deterrent power."

December 21, 1955: Bulganin and Khrushchev return to Moscow after visits to India, Burma, and Afghanistan and claim international support from these states.

December 29, 1955: Bulganin and Khrushchev sharply criticize West on range of outstanding issues in Supreme Soviet address on return from Asian tour.

January 27–28, 1956: Warsaw pact members meet in Prague and include East German contingents in unified armed forces.

January 28, 1956: President Eisenhower rejects Soviet proposal for 20-year bilateral treaty of friendship citing substantive articles were covered by "explicit provisions" in United Nations Charter.

January 30, 1956: United States and Great Britain reaffirm policies on defense of West Berlin.

February 5, 1956: Soviets protest against U.S. violations of airspace with meteorological balloons.

February 14–25, 1956:

Twentieth Congress of CPSU meets in Moscow, adopts Khrushchev's thesis "peaceful coexistence," and approves sixth 5-year plan.

In his main report to the congress, Khrushchev laid down the general principle asserting that war was not now inevitable. The basis for this assertion was the growing strength of the Soviet bloc, the expansion of Communist power as symbolized in the Sino-Soviet bloc, and the creation of a vast "zone of peace" of neutralist states. As a consequence, "peaceful coexistence," by Soviet definition, was now an acceptable and practicable doctrine.

In a secret speech delivered at a special meeting of the Congress, Khrushchev launched his anti-Stalin campaign. Severely critical of Stalin's excesses, this speech had a great influence on the course of future events in the Communist world.

March 8, 1956: Riots erupt in Tiflis, Georgia, U.S.S.R. in protest against Khrushchev's anti-Stalin campaign.

March 19, 1956: President Eisenhower cites shift of Soviet tactics in special message to Congress.

In a special message to Congress on military and economic aid, Mr. Eisenhower warned of the "new turns" in Soviet policy. He further warned of Soviet military strength and the strength of its Communist allies. The President went on: "There is nothing here to warrant a slackening of our efforts to strengthen the common defense of the free world. We must assume that Soviet expansionism has merely taken on a somewhat different guise and that its fundamental objective is still to disrupt and, in the end, to dominate the free nations."

March 21 and April 2, 1956: Atomic Energy Commission reports two nuclear tests in Soviet Union; other tests are held on August 24 and 30, September 2 and 10, and November 17.

April 17, 1956: Soviet Union dissolves Communist Information Bureau (Cominform).

April 18–27, 1956: Bulganin and Khrushchev visit Great Britain.

April 26, 1956: Commerce Department relaxes licensing requirements on export of nonstrategic goods to Soviet bloc countries in Europe.

May 4–July 23, 1956: Atomic Energy Commission conducts nuclear weapons tests in Pacific; hydrogen bomb is dropped from aircraft in test on May 20–21.

June 1, 1956:

Dmitri T. Shepilov relieves Molotov as Soviet Foreign Minister.

June 1–23, 1956:

Tito makes official visit to Soviet Union and concludes governmental and party agreements with Soviet leaders solidifying Soviet-Yugoslav ties.

June 28–29, 1956:

Riots break out in Poznan, Poland, resulting in serious casualties.

The Poznan riots were the second massive protest demonstration against communism in Eastern Europe. The regime was now compelled to recognize and acknowledge the validity of the economic and political grievances of the Polish people. The riots seemed to unleash forces in Poland that culminated in the October crisis 4 months later.

July 10, 1956:

Soviet Government protests against alleged American violations of airspace.

The Soviet Government charged that American military aircraft had "grossly violated" Russian airspace on July 4, 5, and 9 in flights over Western Soviet Russia. The United States denied the charges and rejected the protest.

August 4, 1956:

President Eisenhower responds to Bulganin letter on disarmament and disengagement.

In his letter responding to that of Bulganin's of June 6, Mr. Eisenhower stressed the need for "supervisory mechanisms" in a disarmament plan and noted that he accepted Soviet proposals "for ground inspection on the assumption that you would agree to my proposal for aerial inspection [and] exchange of military information." Concerning military forces in Germany, the President declared that this problem could not be dealt with as an "isolated matter" and reminded Bulganin of the "common responsibility" agreed upon at the Geneva "summit" conference for German reunification.

October 16, 1956:

President Eisenhower announces decision to continue economic aid to Yugoslavia.

Continued American aid to Yugoslavia was made contingent upon the President's determination as to whether or not it was in America's best interest. Since the Khrushchev-Bulganin visit to Yugoslavia in 1955 and Tito's return visit to Moscow in 1956, Yugoslavia had seemed to gravitate more conspicuously into closer alinement with the Soviet bloc.

October 19–21, 1956:

Polish Communist leaders defy Soviet delegation headed by Khrushchev and elect new anti-Stalinist Politburo headed by Gomulka.

There were days of grave crisis for Poland. During the most critical moments Soviet troops threatened military action against the Communist regime and the Polish people. The crisis subsided, however, when Khrushchev accepted the leadership of Gomulka. The Soviets were compelled to make concessions to Polish demands, but Soviet troops were permitted to remain stationed in Poland, the regime resolved to keep Poland within the Soviet bloc, and for all practical purposes ultimately preserved communism in Poland after a temporary retreat to satisfy immediate grievances of the Polish people.

October 19, 1956:

Soviets and Japanese sign treaty ending war status.

October 20 and 22, 1956:

President Eisenhower expresses sympathy for Poles and hints at aid; Poles charge interference.

October 22, 1956:

Secretary Dulles rejects military intervention in Eastern Europe but declares willingness of United States to give Poland economic aid.

October 23–November 4, 1956:

Hungarian Revolution erupts leading to mass intervention by Soviet military forces against Budapest "freedom fighters."

October 29, 1956:

Israel forces invade Sinai Peninsula in Egypt; Anglo-French military operations begin on October 31 after Egypt rejects proposal to end hostilities and permit temporary entry of Anglo-French forces in Canal Zone.

November 5, 1956: Soviet Union denounces action taken against Egypt and calls for joint United States-Soviet action to terminate hostilities; United States rejects proposal.

November 20, 1956: Gen. Lauris Norstad succeeds Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther as Supreme Allied Commander of NATO.

November 28, 1956: United States expresses "concern" over "substantial shipments" of Soviet arms to Syria.

November 29, 1956: United States issues declaration asserting its support of Baghdad Pact and independence and integrity of its members.

December 12, 1956: United Nations condemns Soviet attack on Hungary in American-sponsored resolution.

January 13, 1957: Soviet Union assails Eisenhower doctrine to halt communism in Middle East as being "flagrant interference" and "military intervention" into affairs of Arab world.

January 5, 1957:

President Eisenhower presents to Congress program for defense of Middle East against Communist aggression.

Before a joint session of Congress, President Eisenhower asked for authority to undertake "programs of military assistance * * * [and] cooperation with any nation or group of nations [in the Middle East] which desires such aid." According to the President, this aid should "include the employment of the Armed Forces of the United States to secure * * * [and] protect the territorial integrity * * * [and] political independence of such nations requesting such aid against overt armed aggression from any nation controlled by international communism." A joint resolution was introduced in Congress on the same day of the President's address giving the President the authority he sought. After weeks of debate and discussion, Congress acted on the request in early March, and the joint resolution was signed by the President on March 9.

January 20, 1957:

President Eisenhower begins second term as President of United States.

Soviet nuclear test is detected and announced by U.S. Atomic Energy Commission; other tests are held on March 8 and April 3, 6, 10, 12, and 16.

February 15, 1957: Andrei A. Gromyko succeeds Dmitri T. Shepilov as Soviet Foreign Minister.

March 12, 1957: FBI Director Hoover asserts CPUSA alleged "break" with Moscow is fraud.

March 22, 1957: United States makes decision to join Baghdad Pact Military Committee.

March 25, 1957: Treaty for European Economic Community and treaty creating a European Atomic Energy Community are signed by France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Netherlands, and Luxembourg.

May 15, 1957: Britain holds first hydrogen bomb test in Pacific; further tests occur on May 31 and June 19; and new series of nuclear tests are held in Australia between September 14–October 9.

May 28–October 7, 1957: United States carries on series of nuclear tests at Nevada proving ground.

May 30, 1957: Great Britain announces decision to reduce control on trade of strategic goods with Communist China to level existing in trade with European Soviet bloc; other nations follow; United States maintains embargo.

July 3, 1957:

Khrushchev succeeds in maintaining leadership after power struggle with "anti-party group" comprising Malenkov, Kaganovich, Molotov, and Shepilov; all are removed and "exiled" to minor posts in Soviet Union.

Reportedly, Khrushchev weathered this political crisis because of support he was able to muster within the Central Committee and from Soviet Defense Minister Marshal Zhukov. Bulganin and Voroshilov were said to have momentarily supported the "anti-Party" faction. This faction opposed Khrushchev's basic policies laid down at the 20th Party Congress, frustrated the decentralization of the economy, and opposed the policy of "peaceful coexistence." Subsequently, Bulganin's political fortunes began to decline as Khrushchev's power increased. For a few months Khrushchev seemed to share some power with Marshal Zhukov, but after Khrushchev removed him from the Defense Ministry on October 26, his influence rapidly declined.

August 22, 1957: Atomic Energy Commission reports nuclear weapons test of "substantial size" in Soviet Siberian proving ground.

August 26, 1957: Soviet Government announces successful launching of intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM).

August 29, 1957:

Soviets reject Western plan for disarmament.

The Western delegates to the United Nations Disarmament Subcommittee meeting in London presented a comprehensive outline for the first stage of an East-West agreement on conventional and nuclear disarmament. The plan, representing a summation of Western proposals made during a 5-month session of disarmament negotiations, called for reduction in armed forces and a system of control to determine reductions; use of nuclear weapons only in self-defense; and among other things, suspension of nuclear tests under certain conditions and establishment of international inspection system. The Soviet delegate rejected the proposal. The subcommittee adjourned on September 6 after failing to reach agreement.

September 18, 1957:

Secretary Dulles expresses views on nuclear deterrence.

In an article written for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Dulles envisaged the creation of an "area defense" system which would be designed to counter local aggression with tactical atomic weapons and thus lessen the danger of worldwide nuclear warfare. Recent advances made in nuclear weapons, he said, made it possible to limit the effects of tactical atomic weapons to "predetermined targets" in the area attacked. According to Mr. Dulles, this proved that limited nuclear war "need not involve vast destruction * * * [and] widespread harm to humanity." Defense of countries by nuclear weapons "so mobile, or so placed, as to make military invasion with conventional forces a hazardous attempt" was now a possibility. An official spokesman said the new strategic policy would be superimposed upon the current "massive retaliation" planning and not replace it entirely.

September 19, 1957: Secretary Dulles, commenting on Syrian-Turkish crisis, warns that Turkey faces "growing military danger" from "major buildup of Soviet arms in Syria."

October 4, 1957: Soviets launch first artificial earth satellite called Sputnik I.

October 7, 1957: Soviets announce successful test of "a mighty hydrogen warhead of a new design."

October 16, 1957: Secretary Dulles warns Soviet Union of attack on Turkey as Turkish-Syrian crisis intensifies.

October 18, 1957: Soviets charge United States and Turkey plan aggression against Syria.

October 25, 1957: Col. Rudolph I. Abel, highest ranking Soviet spy to be caught in United States, is convicted by New York jury on espionage charges and is sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment on November 15.

November 1, 1957: United Nations drops Turkish-Syrian border dispute as crisis subsides.

November 3, 1957: Soviets launch second artificial earth satellite, Sputnik II, carrying dog.

November 14–19, 1957: World Communist leaders confer in Moscow and adopt declarations asserting unity in foreign policy matters, doctrinal purity of Soviet line against "revisionism," and Soviet leadership in Communist world.

November 19, 1957:

Secretary Dulles announces plans to establish missile bases in NATO countries.

Soviet Union negotiates agreement on political, economic, and military questions with Egypt.

December 9, 1957: Foster, American Communist leader, pledges CPUSA to Soviet Union in wake of severe factional struggle in American Communist Party.

December 11, 1957: Soviet Union concludes economic and technical assistance agreement with Syria.

December 16–19, 1957: NATO leaders confer in Paris and agree on establishing nuclear missile force and on closer political coordination between member states.

January 27, 1958: United States and Soviet Union conclude agreement on cultural, technical, and educational exchanges.

January 31, 1958: United States places first artificial earth satellite, Explorer I, into orbit.

February 11, 1958: Mikhail Menshikov presents his credentials to President Eisenhower as Soviet Ambassador to United States succeeding Ambassador Zaroubin.

February 15, 1958: Polish-American economic agreement is concluded in Washington calling for $98 million in agricultural surplus and credit.

February 23–March 23, 1958: Atomic Energy Commission reports series of Soviet nuclear weapons tests.

March 27, 1958:

Bulganin resigns as Soviet Premier and is replaced by Khrushchev who also holds top political post as first secretary of the CPSU.

With the resignation of Bulganin and assumption of the post as Premier, Khrushchev arrogated to himself the two key positions in the Soviet political system: First secretary of the party and Premier of the Government. The so-called collective leadership, originally established after Stalin's death, now came to an end as Khrushchev assumed the principal posts of political power.

March 31, 1958: Soviet Government announces unilateral cessation of all nuclear and thermonuclear weapons testing.

April 28–September 8, 1958: United States holds series of 16 nuclear weapons tests (Operation Hardtack) in Pacific.

April 29, 1958: Llewellyn E. Thompson, Jr., is appointed Ambassador to Soviet Union to succeed Charles E. Bohlen who is transferred to Philippine Islands.

May 15, 1958: Soviets launch sputnik III, 2,925-pound artificial earth satellite.

May 24, 1958:

Warsaw Treaty Organization approves troop cuts.

The Soviet-controlled Political Consultative Council of the Warsaw Treaty Organization approved reductions totaling 119,000 in the armed forces in Eastern Europe, withdrawal of Soviet forces from Rumania and of one division from Hungary, and made an appeal to members of NATO to conclude a nonaggression pact.

June 1, 1958: Gen. Charles de Gaulle becomes head of French Government in acute political crisis; Fifth Republic is proclaimed on October 5.

June 16, 1958:

Execution of former Hungarian Premier Imre Nagy and former Defense Minister General Pal Maleter is revealed.

The execution took place following a secret trial in which nine persons involved in the Hungarian uprising were found guilty of conspiracy against the "people's democratic" order. The report of the execution was followed by much criticism of the Soviet Government throughout the free world.

June 27, 1958:

Soviet fighters shoot down American transport over Soviet Armenia.

Soviet jet fighters fired on an unarmed USAF C–118 transport plane carrying nine men and forced it down in flames 30 miles inside the Soviet frontier near the Armenian capital Erivan. The United States expressed regret for the plane's navigation error and asked the return of the crewmen.

July 14, 1958: Gen. Abdel Karim al-Kassim seizes power in Iraq and proclaims republic after coup that kills King Faisal.

July 15, 1958: United States dispatches Armed Forces to help protect independence of Lebanon at request of President Chamoun; troops are withdrawn on October 25 after inauguration of President Shihab.

July 30, 1958: Soviet Government protests against alleged violations of airspace citing alleged flight of RB–47 jet reconnaissance bomber flying in Caspian Sea area; United States rejects protest as unfounded.

August 8, 1958: U.S. Navy nuclear-powered submarine Nautilus completes voyage under North Pole icecap.

August 22–September 23, 1958: Great Brittain conducts series of four nuclear weapons tests in Pacific.

August 23, 1958:

Chinese Communists begin heavy bombardment of Nationalist-held Quemoy as crisis in Formosa Straits reaches new height.

The crisis was resolved temporarily after ambassadorial talks were undertaken beginning September 15 in Warsaw between representatives of Communist China and the United States.

August 27, 30, and September 6, 1958: United States carries out three small high-altitude atomic explosions over South Atlantic.

September 2, 1958: Unarmed Air Force transport crashes in Soviet Armenia after being shot down by Soviet interceptors.

September 19–October 31, 1958: United States undertakes series of 19 nuclear weapons tests (Operation Deadline) at Nevada proving ground.

September 30–October 25, 1958: Soviets carry out series of 14 nuclear weapons tests north of Arctic Circle.

October 16, 1958: Soviet Government charges United States with flying reconnaissance missions over Soviet territory in Far East; United States denies flights.

October 30, 1958: Soviet Government formally revokes cessation of nuclear weapons tests announced March 31.

October 31–December 19, 1958: United States, Britain, and Soviet Union confer in Geneva on suspension of nuclear weapons test.

November 1 and 3, 1958: Two nuclear weapons tests in southern U.S.S.R., according to Atomic Energy Commission reports.

November 6, 1958: Commerce Department announces reduction in "positive list" of items banned for export to European Soviet bloc.

November 7, 1958: Soviet planes attack American bombers in Baltic and Sea of Japan.

Ten days after the attack the United States protested to the Soviet Government against what it termed attacks and aggressive tactics by Soviet jets against American planes on "routine navigational flights" over the Baltic and Sea of Japan. The Soviets made the countercharge in a note that the United States had been engaged in "hostile" flights in these areas. The U.S. Government renewed its protests on January 2, 1959.

November 10, 1958: Khrushchev declares intention of transferring Soviet controls in East Berlin to East German Government; Western leaders reassert policies in West Berlin in subsequent declarations.

November 27, 1958: Soviet Government proposes termination of Allied authority in Berlin thus precipitating Berlin crisis.

The principal proposal in the Soviet note to the Western governments was that West Berlin should become a demilitarized free city with possibly the United Nations guaranteeing its status. Under a separate agreement, East Germany would guarantee communications between West Berlin and the outside world in return for an undertaking by West Berlin not to tolerate "subversive activity" against East Germany. In the event that no agreement was reached in 6 months, the Soviets note stated, the Soviet Government would carry out its plans in agreement with East Germany which would then claim to exercise full sovereignty by land, sea, and air over the approaches to West Berlin.

November 28, 1958: U.S. Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile is successfully launched and travels distance of 6,325 miles.

December 22, 1958: United States and Yugoslavia conclude agreements amounting to $129.9 million in U.S. economic aid.

December 31, 1958: West rejects Soviet note on Berlin terminating their rights and offers to confer regarding Berlin in wider framework of German problem and European security.

January 4, 1959: Soviet First Deputy Premier Mikoyan arrives in United States for 2-week "holiday" visit.

In the course of his visit Mikoyan made it clear that, (a) the Soviet leaders had no aggressive intentions against the United States but wanted only peaceful competition; (b) the excesses of Stalin's regime were being corrected by reducing police powers and economic decentralization; (c) the Soviet Union regarded itself threatened by oversea American military bases and the proposed nuclear armament of West Germany; and (d) the Soviet Government would withdraw its military forces from Berlin within 6 months and was willing to discuss proposals for a United Nations supervision of a "free Berlin."

January 9, 1959:

Communist troops of North Vietnam are reported to have crossed border and established military posts 12 miles inside Laos.

Border warfare continued intermittently throughout the following months. On August 11, the United States charged that the fighting was fomented by Communist nations and might be part of a new effort to keep "tensions alive in southeast Asia." It further accused North Vietnam with directly aiding the Laotian guerrillas and hinted that the entire military action was begun with Soviet complicity. On August 17, the Soviet Government charged that Laos violated the 1954 Geneva armistice which established Laos as an independent and neutral state by admitting American military personnel.

January 27, 1959:

Khrushchev opens 21st Congress of CPSU in Moscow.

In his opening address to 1,375 Soviet delegates and heads of 70 foreign Communist Parties Khrushchev declared that economic successes would eventually win for communism "a complete" and "final victory" throughout the world. He boasted of Soviet Russia's lead in ICBM's; expressed his willingness to consider a "zone of disengagement" of armed forces in central Europe; declared his intention of pressing for solution to the German question on Soviet terms; criticized Yugoslav "revisionism"; and predicted expansion of Soviet production under the new 7-year plan at a rate of 8.6 percent annually which compared with the American rate of 2 percent would give the Soviets the "decisive edge" over the United States by 1970. Khrushchev reaffirmed the general thesis of "peaceful coexistence" laid down at the 20th Party Congress.

February 5, 1959:

United States publishes "taped" recording proving Soviet pilots destroyed American transport plane.

The State Department released a tape recording of a radio conversation reportedly to have taken place among Soviet fighter pilots as they attacked an unarmed American transport plane over Soviet Armenia on September 2, 1958. The translated transcript of the conversation provided evidence that the transport was fired on until it caught fire, went out of control, and plunged to the ground. The Soviets charged that the recording was a fabrication, a charge the American Government denied.

February 26, 1959: American naval authorities board Soviet trawler in Atlantic and charge on March 23, in response to Soviet protest, that there was "strong presumption" it cut five A.T. & T. trans-Atlantic cables.

March 16, 1959:

President Eisenhower addresses Nation on Berlin crisis.

In a nationwide address to the American people President Eisenhower announced his willingness to attend a conference of heads of government with the Soviet Union, if a preliminary foreign ministers' conference offered prospects of worthwhile results. The President expressed his resolve that the United States would not "try to purchase peace by forsaking 2 million free people of Berlin." Mr. Eisenhower also declared that the United States would not submit to any permanent and compulsory division of Germany or permit any nation "to dishonor its international agreements wherever it chooses." The President made it clear that the United States "would never negotiate under a dictated time limit or agenda, or on other unreasonable terms."

March 30, 1959:

Soviet Government accepts proposals for Foreign Ministers' Conference on Berlin crisis.

Soviet acceptance of the Western proposal to discuss Berlin and related European problems at a foreign ministers' conference was preceded by 3 months of what appears to be acute tensions in Soviet-American relations. Not until after the Soviet acceptance of the proposal did these tensions seem to subside.

April 22, 1959: Christian Herter succeeds John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State.

May 11–August 5, 1959:

Geneva Foreign Ministers' Conference on Berlin crisis ends in "total impasse" after failing to reach agreement on terms for settling German and Berlin problems.

During the weeks of the Conference the Soviet Union refused to negotiate seriously in terms acceptable to the West on the general problems of German reunification, European security, disarmament, and the future of Berlin.

May 24, 1959: Former Secretary of State John Foster Dulles dies.

June 23–24, 1959:

Khrushchev gives "blunt" and "threatening" assessment of Berlin situation in interview with Averell Harriman.

Mr. Harriman reported that Khrushchev was "profoundly ignorant" of conditions outside the Soviet Union particularly in the United States and expressed the fear that he "might well overplay his hand." According to Mr. Harriman, Khrushchev declared that if the United States sent tanks in to relieve Berlin "they will burn" and "make no mistake about it." If the United States wanted war, Khrushchev said, "you can have it, but remember it will be your war. Our rockets will fly automatically." On returning to the United States Mr. Harriman reported to Vice President NIXON and Secretary of State Herter.

June 28, 1959:

Kozlov arrives in United States.

Soviet First Deputy Premier Frol R. Kozlov arrived in New York for a 13-day tour of the United States. While in the United States, Kozlov, who was said to be Khrushchev's heir-apparent, opened the Soviet Exhibition of Science, Technology, and Culture; conferred with President Eisenhower, other administration officials, and leading Members of the Senate; visited industrial sites; and conferred with American business leaders and industrialists.

July 22, 1959:

Vice President NIXON leaves Washington for 11-day visit to Soviet Union.

The purpose of the Vice President's visit was to open the American Exhibition on July 24. In the course of the visit which took Mr. NIXON to distant parts of the Soviet Union the Soviet Premier and the Vice President engaged in extended, and sometimes heated, verbal exchanges in public and in private. Reportedly, Khrushchev was annoyed by the commemoration in the United States of Captive Nations Week, and in public speeches and conversations with Mr. NIXON made several allusions to this subject.

August 3, 1959:

President Eisenhower announces that he and Soviet Premier Khrushchev will exchange visits in fall.

September 3, 1959:

Khrushchev's article on "peaceful coexistence" is published in Foreign Affairs.

According to the Soviet Premier, there were three basic Soviet conditions for coexistence: (a) abandonment by the West of its efforts to "roll back" communism from Eastern Europe, China and other areas where communism existed; (b) acceptance of Soviet proposals for settling the German question and the Berlin crisis; and (c) removal of American restrictions on trade with the Soviet Union to provide a "good basis for improvement of relations between our countries."

September 7, 1959:

Ten-nation disarmament committee is established by Soviet Union, United States, Britain and France to renew East-West disarmament negotiations on formal basis outside United Nations.

East-West disarmament negotiations had been suspended since a five-nation subcommittee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission recessed after a deadlock on September 6, 1957. Other facets of the disarmament question had been considered in diplomatic exchanges and in conferences on preventing surprise attack and banning nuclear tests but the great powers had not conferred on general disarmament since the London conference in 1957. Proposals for establishing the 10-nation committee were discussed at the Geneva Foreign Ministers' Conference in 1959. The conference was sanctioned by a joint Soviet-American resolution voted November 20, 1959, in the General Assembly. The Geneva meeting was subsequently arranged.

September 8, 1959:

United Nations votes for Laos investigation over strong Soviet protest.

The four-nation subcommittee was directed to investigate the charge by the Laotians that North Vietnamese committed "flagrant aggression" against their country. The subcommittee toured the Laos frontier but because of the dense jungle, poor terrain and communications their findings were inconclusive. In a report to the United Nations at the end of October the subcommittee said they found no proof that North Vietnam Communist troops invaded Laos, although it had evidence to prove that Laotian rebel forces received arms and supplies from the Vietnamese. The Russian charge asserted that Laos' charges had "collapsed like a card castle." The United States declared that the subcommittee had had "a tranquilizing effect on the dangerous situation."

September 14, 1959: Soviets are first to hit moon in rocket flight 236,875 miles.

September 15, 1959: Soviet Premier Khrushchev is welcomed by President Eisenhower as he arrives at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., near Washington, for unprecedented 2-week tour of United States.

September 18, 1959:

Khrushchev proposes total world disarmament in plan for "general" and "complete" disarmament within 4 years.

Khrushchev's proposal was made in an address before the General Assembly of the United Nations. The proposal contained the following points: (a) complete disarmament within 4 years abolishing all land armies, navies, air forces, general staffs, war ministries and military educational establishments; (b) abolition of all military bases on foreign territory, destruction of all atomic and hydrogen bombs and their future production terminated, and fissionable materials used exclusively for peaceful, economic and scientific purposes; (c) liquidation of all military rockets of all ranges with rocket facilities remaining only as means of delivery and "harnessing of outer space"; and (d) existence of only "strictly limited" contingents of police and militia with small arms to maintain internal order and protect the personal security of citizens; (e) establishment of "international control body comprising all states" to initiate "a system of control over all disarmament measures." In the event the West was not prepared to accept total disarmament he proposed phased disarmament in a plan calling for what amounted to a synthesis of all Soviet proposals in recent years: (a) creation of a zone of control and inspection with reduction of foreign troops in Western Europe; (b) establishment of "an atom-free zone in central Europe"; (c) withdrawal of "all foreign troops from the territories of European states and the liquidation of military bases from foreign countries territories"; (d) conclusion of a nonaggression pact between NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries; and (e) an "agreement on the question of the prevention of surprise attack of one state upon another."

A report on the Khrushchev speech indicated that Western delegates received the proposal coolly, commenting generally that they contained nothing new or specific by way of suggestions that could aid in breaking the disarmament deadlock. Secretary Herter stated, however, that the Khrushchev plan would be given careful examination even though it seemed to repeat proposals for total disarmament made in 1932 and more specific proposals set forth on May 10, 1955.

September 27, 1959:

Soviet Premier Khrushchev leaves Andrews Air Force Base, Md., for Moscow after 13-day visit to United States.

In a joint communique published on this day, Mr. Khrushchev and President Eisenhower expressed their agreement in reopening negotiations to seek a peaceful settlement of world problems. The communique touched on the following main points of agreement: (1) "All outstanding international questions should be settled not by the application of force but by peaceful means through negotiation"; (2) Berlin negotiations would be reopened with a view to achieving a solution which would be in accordance with the interests of all concerned and in the interest of the maintenance of peace; (3) a pledge to make every effort to achieve a constructive solution of the disarmament problem; (4) Mr. Eisenhower's visit would not take place in the fall but next spring at a time to be decided upon.

September 28, 1959: Senate report entitled "Khrushchev on the Shifting Balance of World Forces," suggests thesis that Khrushchev believes world balance of power has shifted to Communist camp.

September 28, 1959:

President Eisenhower discloses Khrushchev agreed at Camp David talks to lift Soviet ultimatum on Berlin as prelude to possible summit meeting.

The President's disclosure was made at a press conference. On the following day, Khrushchev confirmed the President's statement. In the course of the press conference Mr. Eisenhower indicated that the Berlin situation was abnormal in that it was brought about by a military truce at the end of the war and put a number of free people in a very awkward position. A clarifying statement published after the press conference stated that the President "did not mean that the freedom of the people of West Berlin is going to be abandoned or that allied rights are going to be surrendered by any unilateral action."

November 13, 1959: CIA Director Allen Dulles warns of danger to United States in continued rate of growth of Soviet economy in testimony before Congressional Joint Economic Subcommittee.

November 14, 1959:

State Department study reveals Lao Communist rebels received direction and support from Communist China and Communist North Vietnam.

The report charged specifically that the North Vietnamese Communist forces invaded Laos in 1958 and still held a small sector along the Nam Se River in Laos.

November 21, 1959: Soviet Union and United States conclude protocol extending for 2 years agreement on scientific, cultural, technical, and sports exchanges.

December 25–30, 1959: United States, Britain, and France agree to convening summit conference in Paris on May 16, 1960.

January 16, 1960:

Senate report warns of Soviet challenge.

A report prepared for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by the Harvard University Center for International Affairs warned that "it would be risky to base American policy on the assumption that Soviet totalitarianism was about to erode" under rising living standards. The report urged the United States to adopt wider perspectives than those stimulated by the continuous clash with the U.S.S.R. and to curb efforts to win the allegiance of uncommitted nations. "American policy," it said, "should start from the fact that its primary interest toward the underdeveloped countries is in their continued independence."

January 17, 1960: President Eisenhower schedules visit to Soviet Union for June 10–19.

January 19–29, 1960: Controversy emerges in executive and congressional branches of U.S. Government over strengths, weaknesses, and missile "gap" in Soviet-American military posture.

January 27, 1960: Soviet-American lend-lease debt negotiations begun in Washington on January 11 are broken off by United States after Ambassador Menshikov demands they be broadened to include trade agreement and long-term credits.

January 28, 1960: Soviet Government warns Japan of defense pact with United States threatening refusal to return Habomai and Shikota Islands and warning of increased danger of "catastrophe" in nuclear war; Japan rejects protest note.

January 29, 1960: Delegation of five Soviet republic premiers and seven oblast (provincial) chairmen arrive in United States for 24-day visit in return of visit by American Governors to Soviet Union in 1959.

February 10, 1960: Soviet Union pays United States $1,100,000 to settle World War II maritime claims totaling $8,800,000.

February 10, 1960:

Khrushchev leaves Moscow for tour of India, Burma, Indonesia, and Afghanistan.

In a series of addresses given in these countries Khrushchev stressed such points as: The necessity of "peaceful coexistence"; the "imperialist" character of American economic aid as contrasted with that given by Soviets; the alleged Soviet efforts to terminate the cold war and establish a climate of accord in the world; the shifting balance of world forces now said to be in Soviet Russia's favor.

March 15, 1960:

First full-scale East-West disarmament conference convenes in Geneva after 2½ year suspension.

The conference recessed temporarily before the May summit meeting of heads of governments. The Soviet position in these negotiations was essentially contained in Khrushchev's plan presented to the United Nations in September 1959 calling for total disarmament within 4 years. The central point in this plan was the principle of inspection and control which was to take place after disarmament was effected, that is, disarm now and talk about inspection afterwards. The Western position was set forth in a comprehensive disarmament plan along lines of those previously presented. This plan stressed the principle of inspection along with arms control during phases of disarmament. It proposed negotiating point by point in its approach to disarmament. Negotiations continue in a deadlock.

March 23, 1960:

Khrushchev arrives in Paris for 11-day state visit to France.

In the course of his visit to France, Khrushchev gave repeated warnings of the dangers inherent in the rebirth of German militarism as a threat to France and Europe. He suggested that such a trend could most effectively be halted by a Soviet-French accord based on the principles of "peaceful coexistence."

April 29, 1960: Soviet trawler observes nuclear submarine on missile-firing maneuvers off Long Island coast; Navy Department charges trawler engaged in provocative action.

May 5, 1960:

Khrushchev announces Soviets shoot down American plane over U.S.S.R.

In a speech to the Supreme Soviet, Premier Khrushchev declared that on April 9 an American plane had violated Soviet air space but was not "punished." A second plane repeated the violation on May 1 and was shot down by a Soviet rocket. In Washington, NASA announced that one of its planes, a U–2 single-seater high-altitude reconnaissance plane, had been missing with its pilot Francis G. Powers since May 1. The State Department denied that there was, or ever had been, any deliberate attempt to violate Soviet air space. In a second speech to the Supreme Soviet on May 6, Khrushchev reported that Powers was alive and that he admitted he was on an espionage flight across the Soviet Union. The Soviet Premier declared, on information allegedly furnished by Powers, that the U–2 took off from Incirlik, Turkey, flew to Peshawar, Pakistan, and then across Afghanistan and central U.S.S.R., headed for Norway. The purpose of the flight was to get information on Soviet guided missiles and radar defenses and to photograph military installations at Murmansk, Archangel and other points. According to Khrushchev, the plane was shot down from an altitude approximately 12 miles over Sverdlovsk in the Urals, about 1,300 miles inside the U.S.S.R. The pilot parachuted safely to the earth. The Soviet Premier produced pictures of Soviet airfields said to have been developed from the film aboard the U–2 and called the American version of the flight a "complete lie."

May 9, 1960: Secretary of State Herter admits to U–2 flight and acknowledges program of aerial surveillance is necessary to protect United States and free world against surprise attack and enable them to maintain effective defenses.

May 16, 1960:

Khrushchev wrecks summit conference in bitter attack on President Eisenhower and United States over U–2 incident.

At the opening session of the Paris summit conference Khrushchev immediately asked for the floor and proceeded to deliver an hour-long attack on the United States. He insisted upon three conditions for the continuation of the conference: (a) The United States had to call off overflights over the Soviet Union; (b) it had to apologize for the past acts of aggression; (c) and punish those responsible. Khrushchev accused the President of treachery and with pursuing a bandit policy. Under such circumstances he asserted that he could not participate in negotiations. Khrushchev did suggest, however, that the summit conference be postponed for 6 to 8 months in the hope that another American Government would understand the futility of "pursuing [an] aggressive policy." Khrushchev concluded his face-to-face attack on the President by withdrawing the invitation for his visit to the Soviet Union scheduled for June 10.

During the speech President Eisenhower was said to have sat "tight-lipped and grim." In "measured tones and with an obvious attempt to control his temper," a New York Times report stated, he reminded Khrushchev of his pledge previously made that the overflights were not to be resumed. He stated, however, that the United States would never accept the Soviet ultimatum set forth in the conditions for Soviet participation in the conference.

On this note the conference broke up, never to be resumed.

Fears that Khrushchev might follow through with his much-asserted threat to conclude a peace treaty with East Germany, put all communications to West Berlin under its control, and wipe out unilaterally all Western rights in West Berlin, proved to be unwarranted. In a speech in East Berlin on May 30, Khrushchev declared that the existing situation in Berlin "will apparently have to be preserved till the heads of government meeting, which, it is to be hoped, will take place in 6 or 8 months." He urged the East Germans to wait and the matter will get more mature.

In the weeks following the summit collapse Khrushchev engaged in the most bitter criticism of the President and the United States. Many observers predicted a return of the cold war spirit in Soviet diplomacy, though Khrushchev has insisted that Soviet policy would continue to be carried out along the line of peaceful coexistence.

PART V. CONCLUDING GENERALIZATIONS

Without doubt discord has been the dominant theme in the 27 years of Soviet-American relations. What harmony existed during the wartime grand alliance appears in retrospect to have been only the result of temporary circumstances. Common cause against a common enemy brought both nations together. Mutual interest provided the sole bond of friendship and unity. Contradictory longrun ambitions and ideological incompatability were, however, far too powerful to permit this strange alliance to endure after the successful defeat of the common enemy.

The sources of discord in Soviet-American relations lay at two distinct levels of conflict: one is an ideological conflict; the other is a conflict for political power in world affairs.

Communist theory teaches that all human activity is a massive, continuous struggle for life and power, a struggle to go on until communism triumphs as a universal system. Normal life among nations is not to the Communist a search for rational adjustments of social, economic and political differences; it is rather a sustained, persistent assault on the non-Communist world until it goes down in defeat. The Communist world outlook conceives of the world as an arena of human struggle where force and power play the most prominent role. Thus in Soviet thinking, relations among nations are inherently conflicting, not adjustable; the drive for power a continuing factor in world affairs; and international politics even in times of peace is really a continuation of war by other means. Genuine "peaceful coexistence," as understood in the West, is, therefore, impossible. Lenin described this ineluctable conflict by the formula: "Who Whom?" or "Who Will Conquer Whom?" Communist theory teaches that "peaceful coexistence" is in reality a form of advance; and the "status quo" to them must allow the unimpeded progress of communism.

In contrast, the American outlook on the society of nations is colored by deeprooted humanistic and moral values. Eighteenth century rationalism and idealism and the rich religious heritage of Europe have done much to shape the American character and produce the American outlook on world politics. Thus, the emphasis on a type of pragmatic but tolerant live-and-let-live philosophy of international politics; and the notion that conflicts among nations, as those among individuals, can be rationally resolved and a harmony of interest established. Force, except for its use to achieve moral ends, is inherently repugnant to Americans, and the life of nations, as the life of individuals, has a higher purpose than the aggressively motivated destruction of other societies.

Americans and the Soviets, therefore, view international relations from radically different perspectives.

Conflict on the more mundane level of political power provides an equally fundamental source of discord. The Soviet Union seeks to enlarge the area of its political influence and power. It seeks to destroy what is called the status quo in the world order, transforming it ultimately into the Soviet image. In contrast, the United States, as one of the leaders in the non-Communist world, and as a preserver of the democratic ideal of the orderly transition of political power, has contested the Soviet claim to upset the established world order and confronts the Soviet expansion of power with an accumulation of its own power and that of its allies. This contest for political power has produced a pattern of global confrontation which seems unlikely to change for some time to come. It is vastly complicated by the rise of numerous states to independence in Asia and Africa.

At mid-1960, prospects for an era of genuine tranquillity and peaceful adjustment of interests in Soviet-American relations seem to be no brighter than they had been before. Khrushchev continues to boldly assert that the world balance of power has shifted to the Communist world. The Soviet military establishment, he contends, is the strongest in the world, and he seems confident that within a decade or more the Soviet Union will surpass the United States economically. Whatever the truth of these vaunted claims, it can be assumed that the emergence of the Communist world as a great and powerful bloc in world affairs, striding the Eurasian Continent, will substantially increase rather than reduce the problems in future Soviet-American relations.

CASTRO IS STILL "LIBERATING" AMERICAN PROPERTY

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, Fidel Castro has just liberated some more American property. An American oil refinery at Santiago, valued at $14 million and one of the largest in Cuba, was "intervened" yesterday by Cuban militia. "Intervened" is a nice word by Castro's action for stealing by government edict.

This latest outrage brings to my mind a famous incident in American diplomatic history which occurred just 56 years ago.

The Republican Party was holding its national convention in Chicago in June 1904.

President Theodore Roosevelt was at the convention seeking the nomination of his party. The President received a cablegram from Morocco that a naturalized American citizen named Perdicaris had been seized by a Moroccan bandit and was being held for ransom. The Sultan of Mocorro pleaded inability to do anything.

"Teddy" Roosevelt called his Secretary of State and dictated a five-word cablegram to the Sultan with a copy to the U.S. consul general in Morocco. It electrified America and compelled respect for this country throughout the world. It read:

Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead.

At the same time, President Roosevelt ordered the nearest American warship with marines to proceed to Morocco.

Raisuli quickly released Perdicaris. In those long-forgotten days even a bandit in the hills of Morocco knew that when Uncle Sam spoke he meant business.

We are most sympathetic with the citizens of Cuba, but Mr. Castro is now leading them down the path where he might well be treated as a bandit by his own people.

SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS TAX RETIREMENT ACT OF 1960

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10) to encourage the establishment of voluntary pension plans by self-employed individuals.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I should like to direct the Senate's attention to the pending amendment to H.R. 10, which is not offered as an amendment to the committee substitute, but is offered to the House bill itself. Therefore it will be the first amendment that will be voted on in connection with H.R. 10.

In my judgment this amendment would greatly improve H.R. 10 and might afford some possibility for the passage of H.R. 10 because, in my judgment, if my amendment is not agreed to, H.R. 10 will be dead again for this year. It may be that some of those who are supporting H.R. 10 do not really want it passed. I am inclined to suspect that some of the lobbyists for H.R. 10 fear the consequences of having to seek a new job, and therefore would like to see the bill kicked around year in and year out without any action being taken on it.

As one who would like to resolve some of these issues, I offered an amendment, which would work for tax uniformity, equity, and fairness to reduce the cost of the bill by about one quarter of what the House bill would cost, and less than one-half of what the committee bill that was reported would cost. What this amendment would do would be to offer doctors, lawyers and other self-employed people the same kind of treatment, by way of analogy, that we have under Government retirement. The plan would work this way: A person could deduct one-half of what he set aside for his retirement up to $2,500. That is the same type of plan Congress voted for itself, and other employees. A self-employed person is both employer and employee. We have a Government retirement program by which we contribute 7½ percent of our salary, and the Government matches that amount with 7½ percent. The 7½ percent that we put up is money on which we have paid taxes at the time we made the contribution. The Government, of course, has not paid taxes on that which the Government contributes. Then when we retire and receive the money, we are entitled to get our contribution back without payment of income taxes thereon, or else we can spread it out over a period of years on an annuity basis and deduct, let us say, about one-third to allow for the part that we have already paid on, on the tax-free basis, and pay only on the two-thirds, which represents what the Government contributes, plus the interest which our money and the money of the Government has earned.

The amendment is in effect a method to provide the self-employed the same kind of tax treatment that Congress has given its own Members. It would give beneficiaries the same kind of tax treatment that we have given all Government employees. It would give them tax treatment somewhat in line with what is provided under the Railroad Retirement Act. It would be fair and not discriminate against the 70 million people who are under the provisions of the social security law. It would not discriminate against the many millions of workers for the Government and for railroads. It would move toward tax uniformity. In my judgment, if the amendment which I have offered is adopted, it would make H.R. 10 more attractive, it would make it more uniform, it would make it more fair, and it would give the bill some possibility of passage.

I am frank to say that if this kind of amendment is not adopted, H.R. 10 will continue to be opposed, it will not be passed by this Congress. Furthermore, I predict it will not be passed in the next Congress. I also predict that as the shortcomings of the bill are exposed, it will travel the same road that the millionaires' amendment traveled, which was peddled from one State legislature to another, until the people found out what it would do, namely, give a huge tax reduction to 1 percent of the people, a small reduction to 9 percent, and ignore completely the other 90 percent. The result was that the same State legislatures—as was the case with my own State legislature in Louisiana—unanimously asked us not to pass the millionaires' amendment, after they had unanimously asked us to pass it.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, first I should like to say that I heard previously of the amendment offered by my very able friend the Senator from Louisiana. I must say in all candor that it does have a certain amount of appeal. I should like to hear more about it. First, I should like to know what the estimated cost of the amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 4 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Wisconsin has been waiting patiently for an hour and 10 minutes, having given previous notice to the Senate. I do not think it is quite reasonable.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, are we still in the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. SMATHERS. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes.

Mr. SMATHERS. I should like to ask the Senator this question. The Treasury has estimated that H.R. 10, as amended, will cost between $150 million and $250 million. They do not know exactly the difference in the range. How much would the Senator's amendment reduce the cost of H.R. 10?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The amendment I am advocating would reduce the cost of H.R. 10 to $100 million. It would cost one-quarter of the cost of the present H.R. 10. My amendment is offered to the House text, of course.

Mr. SMATHERS. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. If the Senate should see fit to adopt the Senator's amendment, I wonder if he would agree to support H.R. 10.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. If the amendment were adopted, I would personally vote for H.R. 10 on the question of its passage. I do not care to state what my position would be with respect to other amendments that might be offered. My personal thought is that with the adoption of my amendment H.R. 10 would not be violently in conflict with what I believe would be tax uniformity.

Mr. SMATHERS. I have one other question. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is on the floor. He has spoken in opposition to H.R. 10. I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Illinois do not agree we are approaching the time when we will be able to vote on the bill. I wonder whether we are not approaching the moment when they would be willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement under which we could vote on the amendments which have been offered to H.R. 10. I just throw out the suggestion for what it is worth. I see that the assistant majority leader has stood up. I know he wants to wait to talk about it with the majority leader. I throw out the suggestion as a possibility. Does the able Senator from Louisiana feel that we are approaching the time when we can perhaps limit discussion of the bill and get to a vote on the various amendments, and also see who in fact wishes to vote for the bill and who does not want to vote for it?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I have news for the Senator from Florida. I was willing to have a vote on my amendment last night. The acting minority leader said that if I insisted on a vote it would be necessary to have a quorum call.

Mr. SMATHERS. Is the Senator willing to bring his amendment to a vote, as well as have a vote on the other amendments?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I cannot speak for other Senators. As far as I am personally concerned, I am ready to agree to a reasonable limitation at an appropriate time and to vote on my amendment. I think it is a good amendment. As soon as the Senate has an understanding of the amendment, I am prepared to vote. I cannot speak for other Senators.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The RECORD will show that last night, when the Senator from Louisiana offered his amendment, the acting minority leader, the distinguished junior Senator from New Hampshire, rose and said if that were done he would have to ask for a quorum call. The Senator from Oregon was in the chair at the time. He will bear me out. The result was that the majority leader was forced to adjourn the Senate. I wish to say that there has not been any stalling on our side. We have taken up a little more than 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. I am delighted that these Senators are so anxious to get to a vote. It is a very simple matter. All we have to do is to start voting. The bill is the pending business. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to debate the amendment for a few minutes. However, I should like to find out if we cannot make arrangements with respect to the other amendments.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is extraordinary that only one advocate of the bill has risen on the floor to explain it. The Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] made a very able exposition of the bill. It is said that he has the promises of 70 Senators in his pocket. Nevertheless, no one is ready to get up and defend the bill. This is an important measure. The loss in revenue will not be $150 million or $250 million, but nearer $350 million. That will just be the beginning. Further extensions, I am sure, will lead to a loss of at least $3 billion. It is extraordinary that although the able Senator from Florida has done his best to expound the nature of the bill, no one has risen to help him. I should like to hear some affirmative argument on the bill before we move to any unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question, because I find myself in agreement with him. I wonder if the Senator shares my view that we need a great deal of education on the bill, and that two of the best forums available for education will be the oncoming political conventions. Does not the Senator from Illinois believe that a vote on the bill could well go over until August, after the party conventions have met and we are able to see what position the party conventions take, and what arguments they make on the bill? Then we can come back and for once do something about keeping the promises the parties have made in their platforms?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. MORSE. Therefore, I wish to say I am not at least moved by any desire for speed on the bill. I think we need time—a great deal of it—and I urge that we take the time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I only wish to say that after the long parade of testimony and witnesses and arguments we had in the Committee on Finance, if we carry the matter to the Democratic convention, we will probably not get to the nominations until 3 weeks after it opens.

Mr. MORSE. That would not be a bad idea, either.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield the floor.

Mr. SMATHERS. May I be recognized again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may be recognized on another subject.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, has morning business been concluded?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the amendment offered in the previous Congress by the distinguished Senator from Oregon. He rose to speak when H.R. 10 was before the Senate. Two years ago he offered an amendment to reach toward tax uniformity. He said if H.R. 10 were to pass, the principle should apply to railroad labor, social security, to those on the Government retirement rolls, and to those in privately contributed pension plans.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I do not yield for that purpose. I recall that the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia inquired about the cost, and he was informed that the cost of making this principle applicable to everyone would be $3 billion. The Senator from Virginia said, "I am in favor of tax uniformity, but I am not in favor of losing $3 billion."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that the Senator from Louisiana is not discussing morning business.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, has the Senate agreed to a rule of germaneness?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is for the consideration of morning business; and this debate has not concerned itself with morning business.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I have stood here and heard other Senators make speeches lasting 15 or 20 minutes, and I have never objected. Yet the first time I want to take more than 3 minutes, some Senator raises the issue with me.

If the Senate wishes to proceed in that way, all right. We can have a quorum call at the end of the morning hour, get a nice crowd of Senators here, take our happy time, and get ready to hear another speaker.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may talk for another minute.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Louisiana may proceed for 3 minutes, and that then the morning business be concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, a moment ago, when I asked that I be recognized in the morning hour twice on the same subject, the Chair told me that it was impossible for me so to do. Now I find the able Senator from Louisiana being recognized for a second time to speak on the same subject. I am sure he would not want to deprive me of the same privilege he has.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I did not object to the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] stood on the floor 2 years ago when a majority of the Senate was pledged to a bill similar to H.R. 10. He offered an amendment which sought to reach toward tax uniformity. His amendment would have cost the Treasury $3 billion in revenue because it sought to have civil service employees treated the same as doctors and lawyers.

The Senator from Oregon was informed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that the Senator could not accept such an amendment; that while he favored tax uniformity, he was opposed to having the Treasury lose $3 billion.

The Senator from Oregon said that tax uniformity could not be sacrificed for money, so he said, "It is my amendment or nothing." That is exactly what it was—nothing.

I tell Senators who have agreed to vote for H.R. 10 that unless they agree to modify the bill in the direction of tax uniformity, the situation will be the same as when the Senator from Oregon made his prediction 2 years ago: "It will be this amendment or nothing."

Mr. MORSE. I will help the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS' TAX RETIREMENT ACT OF 1960

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10) to encourage the establishment of voluntary pension plans by self-employed individuals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield, without losing his right to the floor, so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE U–2 AND U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, when I became a Member of the Senate, one of its Members was a very distinguished Senator from Michigan, Arthur Vandenberg. When he had a message to deliver, he would ask unanimous-consent that he not be interrupted until he had concluded his address. I now make such a request.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate, so that the request of the Senator from Wisconsin may be understood by all Senators? I understand the Senator's request is that he not be interrupted during his speech.

Mr. WILEY. That is correct. I once asked Senator Vandenberg why he made such a request. He said, "If you were in the gallery and saw the performance as it went on, with interruption after interruption, you would understand why there is difficulty in maintaining continuity of thinking. It is impossible to shed light on the subject which is under discussion. So I have found it advisable to make the request that I not be interrupted."

I thought that was the remark of a wise man; and, as we all know, Senator Vandenberg became one of the great statesmen of our Nation.

On Tuesday, June 28, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], submitted to the Senate a committee report entitled "Events Relating to the Summit Conference." I may say, parenthetically, that this morning I sent a copy of my remarks to the chairman. I sent word that I intended to speak on the subject, and I had one of the attachés on the floor deliver the message. So, while the Senator from Arkansas is not present, I want it to be clearly understood that I made every effort to make certain that he would be here. I shall comment rather critically on his remarks, which were very critical of the President and of the Senator's own Government in many respects.

In the report, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas presented a statement of his views on the report and also of the circumstances surrounding the proposed summit conference and the U–2 flight program.

At that time, on the floor of the Senate, I stated that, despite the Senator's scholarly presentation, I found myself with a different assessment of the events and the facts and of their significance in the public interest. I felt, and I now feel, that a different evaluation is essential.

I am one who believes in the American system of government. I do not believe that the English system, where the Parliament is the government, would be appropriate for this country. In that respect also the chairman and I disagree. I believe in the separation of powers. The wisdom of our Founding Fathers has been proved time and time again, because they provided for a system of checks and balances under the Constitution.

Under our system, each branch of the Government—executive, legislative, and judicial—has specific responsibilities and powers. Within that framework, which I believe is a good one, efforts toward usurpation of authority by one branch or another is very dangerous in these times of Hitlers, Stalins, and Khrushchevs. All too often, this is forgotten, and unfortunately so, by some Members of Congress.

Since the U–2 flight and the ill-fated Paris conference, there have been widely diversified opinions of the significance of those events. Unfortunately, there have been efforts, sometimes, seemingly for political purposes, to blame somebody in this country for the U–2 incident. Actually, there was an incident. It was an accident in a highly successful 4-year program—4 years of gathering information essential to the defense and security of this country.

The Paris conference was torpedoed by Khrushchev. I may say that the New York Herald today has published an article entitled "Red Ruse at Geneva—U–2 Did Not End Conference," written by David Lawrence. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit I.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am particularly upset by the chairman's statement accompanying the submission of the report, which report came from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Prior to the first hearings, I joined my colleagues in supporting such an inquiry into the events and subsequent developments in world affairs. However, I felt then, as I now feel, that it would be unwise, if not dangerous, to utilize such an inquiry for partisan politics or for undermining confidence in U.S. policy.

However, there now seems to be a determined effort in this direction. Strangely—and contradictory as it may seem—the biggest noise and greatest effort to pin blame on U.S. policy appears to be coming—second only to Moscow—from the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Almost exclusively critical newspaper reactions of the report and remarks upon introduction do not reflect the truth about the U–2 flight. Let me quote some of the banner headlines from newspapers across the country:

U–2 Incident Mishandled Senators Say—(Washington Star).

U–2 Incident Was Bungled, Senators Report Charges—(Milwaukee Journal).

Senate Unit Condemns U–2 Flight; Blames It for Summit Failure—(New York Herald Tribune).

Administration Rebuked in Mild Senate Report on Handling of U–2 Incident—(St. Louis Post-Dispatch).

Senate Probers Find U–2 Handling Unwise—(Cleveland Plain Dealer).

U–2 Bungling Gave Nikita Summit Ax, 14 Senators Charge—(The Philadelphia Inquirer).

Mr. President, I sincerely ask: Is this the kind of conclusion, creating an impact upon the public and the world, emerging from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which is likely to improve our policies and prestige; or will it, rather, give aid and comfort to Mr. K and company, criticizing us on the world scene? Unfortunately, I believe, it is the latter.

Have the American people, however, really been fooled? Happily, no. I am going to quote from letters that I have received from very prominent people, which indicate that the common folks of America are "way ahead of some of their political leaders in thinking this problem through."

Here are some of the quotations:

First:

Senator, if, as you say the Congress of the United States authorized the CIA and gave the money to institute some 4 years ago the U–2 program, what are some of these "dumbbells" talking about?

Second:

If the President of the United States—as he must have known—lived with the U–2 activities for 4 years and saw the benefit thereof—the benefit to our national defense—whose business is it to criticize him for carrying it on?

Third:

I thank God that the President of the United States in Paris, after it was fully established that the Russians had the U–2 and Powers, acknowledged the responsibility (and it was his responsibility) for the flight.

Fourth:

We are not bamboozled by all the arguments agreeing with Khrushchev; we are not blind; we can see through the smokescreen. We know that before Khrushchev went to Paris, he knew all the facts—including his inability to penetrate the unity of the West—and that he was going to blow up the conference.

Fifth:

I am a Democrat and I am fed up with all this legalistic argument about violation of sovereignty. Seventy thousand or eighty thousand feet up doesn't violate anybody's sovereignty. And the bunkum that has gone out doesn't help us Democrats any.

Let me repeat what I said on the Senate floor, in reply to the chairman's statement the other day:

The first law of human nature is the law of self-defense.

This law applies to national defense. We applied that law when we, in the Congress, provided funds for the U–2. If there is any responsibility, it is ours; and I am glad to accept the responsibility. I am glad to say that, in my humble opinion, and I have seen the evidence, the U–2 was justified.

During the 4 years of overflying the Soviet Union, the U–2 flight program established a record uniquely successful in history. To now find fault—because of a single accident—with a program that has almost 4 years of unbroken success in our national interest, seems almost unbelievable.

RED RUSE AT GENEVA SHOWS U–2 DIDN'T END SUMMIT

(By David Lawrence)

WASHINGTON, June 30.—So it wasn't the U–2 incident, after all, that really broke up the summit conference at Paris. The action of the Soviets now in torpedoing also the Geneva conference on disarmament reveals the Kremlin's game of provoking crisis after crisis. The Soviets knew they couldn't get the Berlin problem solved their way at the Paris conference, so they wriggled out. They have never really wanted to reach an agreement on disarmament except on their own terms—unconditional surrender by the West. When this prospect failed, Moscow devised a scheme to confuse the issue before the people of the world.

As long as the Soviets thought the West was soft and flabby and that the peoples of the alliance could easily be frightened by nuclear-test propaganda and threats of attack by missiles and rockets, the tactics used by the Communists were to encourage "negotiation" at summit conferences or at any other meeting.

But now, as the West turns a deaf ear to the appeasers in its own ranks who have called for "disengagement"—and as even the British Labor Party turns away from its left-wing to put Britain's defense policies squarely behind the United States—the chances of a Moscow victory through deceptive promises and "negotiations" have vanished.

There may be still some misguided hope in Moscow that the American political campaign will find the Democrats indicating a course more favorable to the Soviet cause than the Republican administration has followed, but this fantasy, too, will soon be dispelled. For Americans of all political faiths stand together as they perceive how untrustworthy are the professions of the Soviet Government. It is too bad that the Communists have so far misjudged the temper of the Western peoples as to walk out this week from a conference at Geneva which only a few months ago was insisted upon by Khrushchev as a means of achieving peace by disarmament.

To leave a negotiation summarily just as the West was about to submit new proposals is to display very bad manners. In fact, the actions of the Soviet Government give the impression that its leaders are boorish persons. Maybe they haven't emerged as yet from the era of Mongolian savagery in which their ancestors lived. It is astonishing that the Prime Minister of Great Britain should find it necessary to write to Premier Khrushchev:

I must tell you frankly that I am deeply disappointed, as well as surprised, at your decision to withdraw from the negotiations. The Geneva conference was set up as a result of an agreement between the four foreign ministers last August; it cannot be properly broken off by any one group.

TO KEEP DEFENSE UNITY

Until agreement on disarmament is reached, we intend to maintain our collective defense arrangements. There is nothing provocative in this. You do the same.

The plan of the Soviets to transfer negotiations to the General Assembly of the United Nations will not deceive anyone. It means abandoning a conference where technical experts on both sides have participated, and throwing the whole thing into a political area, with no chance of agreement or direct negotiations. Here is how Mr. Macmillan has just replied to the Soviet Premier:

"It seemed to us that some progress was being made * * * we for our part do not agree with many of the points which your delegate has put forward at Geneva, as you do not agree with ours. But the whole purpose of negotiations is to try to eliminate points of difference and find common ground."

U.S. DELEGATE'S STATEMENT

The U.S. delegate to Geneva, Frederick M. Eaton, who has maintained throughout a dignified and serious attitude toward the negotiations made the following statement at the final session of the Geneva conference:

"What is the Soviet purpose in torpedoing this conference? The purpose is now clear. The Soviets sent their delegation back to Geneva, as the Soviets went to Paris, determined not to negotiate, but to forestall negotiations—not to reach agreements, but to prevent agreements. Just as Mr. Khrushchev torpedoed the summit conference, the Soviets have torpedoed the 10-nation conference. Clearly they seem determined to frustrate any serious discussion in which differences might be resolved."

REDS ACCUSE WEST

Within a few hours after the Geneva conference broke up, the Moscow radio was accusing the West of dissolving the negotiations.

Meanwhile, the U.S. naval commander in Europe, Adm. H. P. Smith, issued this warning at a London press conference:

"This is not a period of holiday from history. We are still in it. The moment the Soviet Union believes they can blunt our retaliatory forces, you are in for it."

Thus does the Soviet Government stir up crisis after crisis and, if history is a guide, sometimes this can lead to miscalculation and finally a big war. How long do the Communist leaders think the people of the Soviet Union can be kept in the dark as to who really is bringing the world closer and closer to a third world war?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 285. An act for the relief of John A. Skenandore; and

S. 2585. An act for the relief of Josephine Lue Fan (also known as Josephine Fook-Lau), Joseph Lue Fan (also known as Joseph Lew-Fan), and Aura Joan Lue Fan.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 108) favoring the suspension of deportation in the cases of certain aliens, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H.R. 9883) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was—

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12231) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1 and 5 to the bill, and concurred therein.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 2074. An act for the relief of Eric and Ida Mae Hjerpe;

H.R. 11354. An act for the relief of James Delbert Hodges;

H.R. 12311. An act to extend for 1 year the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended;

H.R. 12677. An act to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, to provide coverage for employees of interstate retail enterprises, to increase the minimum wage under the act to $1.15 an hour, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 778. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 706) authorizing corrections in the engrossment of the bill H.R. 11602, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated:

H.R. 2074. An act for the relief of Eric and Ida Mae Hjerpe; and

H.R. 11354. An act for the relief of James Delbert Hodges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.J. Res. 778. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE U–2 AND U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I make a comment at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has declared that he will not yield until he concludes his statement.

Mr. WILEY. I asked that I not be interrupted—because I am sure I will finish my remarks very quickly.

Briefly, now, let us turn to the specific arguments which the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee raised against U.S. policy in presenting the report on the U–2 incident to the Senate.

The chairman, in submitting the committee report, entitled "Events Relating to the Summit Conference," last Tuesday made certain points for the purpose, he said, of emphasizing the findings of the committee. Although in speaking of the report, he said "it is generally satisfactory to most members of the committee," his remarks indicate that the report was hardly satisfactory to him. In fact, there is little relationship between the report and the chairman's version of it. Two samples may indicate the draft of the chairman's interpretation.

On the question of the wisdom of sending off the May 1 flight, a committee conclusion was:

> The committee cannot, therefore, come to any conclusion as to whether the importance of the information sought justified the risks which were taken.

The chairman's version was:

> It was a serious error of judgment to order the U–2 flight of May 1.

On the effect of the U–2 incident, the committee stated:

> The committee is inclined to agree with Secretary Herter that the basic realities of the world situation have not greatly changed.

The chairman stated:

> I believe the prestige and influence of our country on the affairs of nations has reached a new low.

In addition, it was alleged that the administration failed to reveal the details of the story, perhaps to "cover its own costly mistakes."

Mr. President, this conclusion is absolutely unjustified—and, I believe, to a degree, irresponsible.

The distinguished chairman pointed out that, as a principle, we, as Members of the Senate, do not question the motives of other Senators.

I believe it reflects a violation of the same principle for Members of Congress to flagrantly and blatantly question the motives of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I recall what, I believe, Al Smith said on one occasion to Harold Ickes:

> DEAR HAROLD:
> Whenever abused,
> I stop to think;
> I think I smell
> A politink.

Now, the question has arisen: Should President Eisenhower have assumed responsibility for the flight?

In the long view of history, I think it will be seen that President Eisenhower had no other choice but to acknowledge that it had been U.S. Government policy to seek information about Soviet military capabilities by airplane photography. This was no standard spying exercise. It involved a large-scale logistical operation that only a major power could mount.

This is a new day in a changing world that calls for honesty and integrity in world diplomacy. Thank God, the President of the United States demonstrated it. If such an assumption is unprecedented, then I say again, it is time to break precedent; it is time for nations to be honest with one another; it is time that all the spying of the Kremlin be brought to light throughout the world.

The argument put forth by the chairman of the committee in his recent explosive remarks, setting forth the reason for the precedence, neglects the fact that in a changing world there is a need for representatives of nations to deal, not under the table, but on top of the table, and call a spade a spade.

So the President violated one of the dying, outmoded theories of diplomacy. And this gives another opportunity to the prejudiced ones in this political day to seek to upset the thinking of the American people. In my humble opinion, it will not work.

The uproar over the failure of this mission would have been substantially greater if the administration had persisted in denying knowledge or responsibility. If this course had been chosen, then truly a persuasive case would have been proven that our Government was poorly run. Imagine the political torment which would have been heaped on the President if he had chosen this horn of the dilemma.

Imagine the case the Soviet Union would have had in world forums if the United States in effect admitted that unauthorized American planes continuously overflew the U.S.S.R. On the question of justification, Senator FULBRIGHT thought it relevant to say:

> Hitler used to argue that Germany's need for Lebensraum gave him the moral right to commit aggression. The same kind of argument was heard from Mussolini and from the Japanese war lords of the thirties. It has even been heard from the Soviet Union. I hope it will not be heard, even by implication, in the United States.

The final sentence of this quote is a well-known device of those who resort to innuendo. The entire quotation is either entirely irrelevant or entirely unworthy of a U.S. Senator.

Then, was the President to blame, first, either for authorizing the flights originally; or second, for publicly assuming responsibility for the decision to permit such overflying?

In acknowledging his responsibility, President Eisenhower, in my humble opinion, took a courageous step, establishing a new candidness, on a previously hush-hush topic in international affairs.

Personally, however, I believe it is high time the nations of the world quit playing nuclear-missile hide-and-seek. Why? The stakes are too high. The fate of nearly 3 billion people around the globe hangs in the balance.

As a world seeking to avoid a devastating nuclear-missile war, we can no longer afford to fake about, or sweep under the rug, the necessity of protecting nonaggressive nations against surprise attack, as long as war-oriented, domination-bent countries, like the Communist-dominated ones, exist on earth.

Obsolete, also, are the so-called rules of the game for carrying on such information-gathering activities; these require that a nation, if detected in information-gathering activities, deny them at high levels or shunt responsibility to lower echelons.

Historically, almost all nations—in the spirit of self-preservation, particularly in the face of threats—have found it necessary to collect data essential to their security.

At the United Nations, Ambassador Lodge reviewed only a few of the many ways in which the Communists are engaged in sabotage, espionage, subversion, and other activities.

Overall, however, I believe it is high time to stop playing this dangerous game that could spell disaster in the world.

Was the Congress of the United States—which created the CIA—to blame? Remember that in 1955 Khrushchev would not agree to the President's proposition of overflights. It was after that that the CIA brought into being the U–2. For what purpose? To get the facts. What facts? The facts behind the Iron Curtain. We had had the challenging statements of Khrushchev and others that they were going to bury us. We created the instrumentality to find out whether they were capable of doing that. As a result, the U–2 came into being. And it has been operating ever since July 1956.

How many flights? That is a secret. But the information, generally, is not a secret. It has given us facts that have provided added security for this Nation and the West. Who got that information for us? The Central Intelligence. Under whose authority? The authority of the Congress. Who handled the executive end of it? The executive branch of the Government. What was the officiating head of the CIA? Dulles. Whom did he consult with? Well, the plan was evolved some years back—in 1956. At that time, the State Department and the executive branch knew about it, participated in it and this U–2 has, so far, been the only plane that was lost. The evidence shows it is not the only time the plane was attacked.

Was NASA to blame for providing a "cover story" when it was known that the U–2 was off schedule, but there was no definite knowledge as to its whereabouts, or that it had come down in Soviet territory? No. Under such circumstances, the providing of a cover story is standard procedure.

Was the CIA to blame for conducting such flights? Definitely not. The Central Intelligence Agency, created by Congress after World War II, to provide intelligence essential to our security, would indeed be derelict in its duty if it failed to provide us with the necessary information for our security.

The chairman was in Paris about the time of the summit meeting and had a better opportunity than most of us to gage the atmosphere and circumstances of that tragic episode. He also must be aware of the general condemnation in free world opinion of the act of Soviet abortion openly committed on the eve of the summit conference. Yet he felt constrained to advise the Senate "one might even go further and say that we forced Khrushchev to wreck the conference by our own ineptness." I find it hard to believe that this apology for Soviet policy will sit well with any responsible body of opinion in the United States.

To the contrary, the American public may well ask, "Who is doing the bumbling and fumbling?"

Recently, the Christian Science Monitor had a splendid editorial containing some sound recommendations and reflections upon such thinking.

> The disposition of too many Americans to consider the President and the Nation humiliated by Khrushchev's rudeness at Paris or Mr. Kishi's weakness in Tokyo is itself a danger signal. * * * But appearing upset and indulging in excess self-condemnation over any failure is the mark of shortsighted and unsure inexperience, not of the mature perspective and settled purpose expected of any nation charged with world leadership.

Mr. President, there was brought to my attention, confirming that conclusion, an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune of June 30, 1960, entitled "It's Not as Bad as That, Mr. FULBRIGHT."

The editorial writer states:

> "The prestige and influence of our country on the affairs of nations," Mr. FULBRIGHT told the Senate, "has reached a new low." On what basis does he make this judgment? For, as the black clouds of embarrassment and humiliation clear away, we see that the facts remain largely what they were.
> It would have been one thing if Pakistan or Norway, which were involved in the U–2 flight, had broken their alliances with us or publicly accused us of compromising them.
> It would have been one thing if the Soviets had immediately signed a peace treaty with East Germany and the screws on the Western garrisons in Berlin had been sharply tightened.
> It would have been one thing if our NATO partners, and particularly Britain and France, had indulged in recriminations—which they reasonably could have.
> It would have been one thing if the Kishi government in Japan had been overthrown and a new government dedicated to neutralism and cooperation with the Communist bloc had seized power.
> But none of these things has happened. There is therefore little indication that our influence in the affairs of nations has suffered a dramatic decline. As for our prestige, its level is difficult to determine. It is assumed to be lower, but is the United States held in less esteem than at any other time, as Mr. FULBRIGHT maintains? On what soundings of foreign opinion does he base this claim?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire editorial be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I continue with my statement.

COORDINATION OF INFORMATION ON U–2 FLIGHT

Much has been made of the alleged lack of full coordination in the handling of the public releases concerning this intelligence operation. And we are told that there is need for firm direction of foreign affairs. Here I wonder if we should not take the sage advice, 'Physician, heal thyself."

There is a higher coordination needed in foreign affairs—that between the Congress and the executive branch. For example, in the revolutionary age which everyone recognizes we are passing through, it should not be necessary for the United States to carry such unnecessary burdens as the encouragement to anti-Americanism around the world contained in the language "And I fear that we may see other manifestations of the same loss of confidence in other countries where we have military bases."

No one will deny that the failure of this one intelligence mission has had serious repercussions, but let us recognize that the repercussions can be made more serious by inept handling of this episode for domestic political ends.

Frankly, I believe it is high time for all of us to remove our dark glasses and get rid of self-delusion—and particularly the faculty to attribute blunders to others.

I refer to much of what has been called the lack of coordination in handling the U–2 incident. An analysis clearly indicates that this is a "slop-over" statement. The flights for 4 years have been coordinated and successful.

When nothing was heard of the Powers flight, a cover story was put out. Under such circumstances, this is a standard procedure.

I think that the American people are proud of our national accomplishment in keeping track of the attack capabilities of a heavily armed political system which has threatened to bury us.

In the perspective of this solid accomplishment, I think the great majority of the American people consider the question of how certain public releases were handled and how the matter of authority for the flights was disclosed to be of relatively secondary importance. If the choice were put up to the American people to run great political risks to obtain vital security information or to forego the opportunity because of political fears the answer would be clear cut and affirmative.

The intelligence systems developed under the Eisenhower administration have been one of the great security accomplishments of the history of the United States. The merit of charges that press releases were not handled properly should be judged in the light of this unique accomplishment.

EFFECT OF U-2 FLIGHT AND PARIS CONFERENCE ON U.S. POLICY

Now, the claim is made that as a result of this episode there has been a worldwide loss of confidence in the United States. With what evidence does Senator FULBRIGHT support this claim? First, he adduces as evidence a speculative personal opinion in the following terms:

> Lack of confidence leads to neutralism and I daresay this was a contributing factor to the riots in Japan protesting our new treaty.

I think we all know that symptoms of neutralism have been a fact of life in Japan for years. In spite of this, the majority of the Japanese people have fully supported collective security cooperation with the United States. Traces of Japanese neutralism did not prevent efficient operation under the former security treaty and did not prevent Japanese ratification of the new security treaty.

The only other piece of evidence is an excerpt from a New York Times report of May 22 referring to alleged anti-American sentiment in Mexico, a nation with whom our relations are better now than ever in this generation.

It seems somewhat curious that the chairman of our Foreign Relations Committee, which has access to information available to the Department of State from all over the world, should support a claim of worldwide loss of confidence in the United States with two such flimsy bits of evidence.

It is true that the Communist propaganda machine has made a great effort to capitalize on the U–2 incident. It is true that Communist Parties in various parts of the world have seized upon this episode to stir up anti-Americanism.

In spite of this, the state of our alliances remains sound. If anything, there has been a closing of ranks with our allies as a result of the Paris demonstration that the Soviet Union considers its intercourse with foreign nations as but one front in its drive for world imperialism.

POLICY NOT CREATED BY HINDSIGHT

It is claimed by Senator FULBRIGHT that our policies have been lacking in wisdom and in foresight. However, his remarks are for the most part addressed to questions of press releases, Presidential responsibility, and coordination. On the grave matters of foreign policy,

I think we are entitled to ask the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee what changes he would propose.

Would he change our policies in support of collective security and a forward defense of our allies the world round—as a leading journalist quoted by the Senator has recently hinted at?

Would he change our policy toward the Soviet Union which while resisting its expansionist tendencies by all means, at the same time continues ready to negotiate seriously for solutions of political problems and for arms control?

I do not think that in view of his past record the Senator would change our great foreign policy of assisting newly developing nations to make economic and social progress.

These are the great foreign policy issues of our times and some of them find reflection in bills presently before the Congress.

It strikes me that we would serve the Nation's purpose better if we addressed ourselves to some of these problems rather than exercising a self-righteous, 20–20 hindsight as to the handling by the executive branch of press releases and the election by the President to take responsibility for a large-scale and most successful security operation.

There is serious question, also, as to whether Members of Congress should attempt to arrogate to themselves the "pedestal-type" position of attempting to dictate internal policy for the executive branch. Particularly, it does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Foreign Relations Committee.

U–2 FLIGHT DID NOT CAUSE PARIS DEBACLE

Now, to another point: Was the U–2 flight—as alleged, and falsely, I believe—the reason for Khrushchev's blowing up the Conference?

The allegation has been that it was; however, all reasonable evidence points to the contrary.

Mr. Khrushchev knew about the flights long before the Paris Conference—as illustrated by a post-summit statement in Berlin. To say that the U–2 flight downing of May 1—or the subsequent events—was the cause of his ditching the conference is pure—or perhaps, because of its unfavorable reflection on U.S. policy, I should say impure conjecture. I do not know what crystal ball is being read to reach such deductions. However, there appears to be—in my own humble judgment—far more valid factors to be considered.

Why, then, did the Soviet Premier torpedo the meeting?

In the face of the Western Powers' shoulder-to-shoulder stand against making one-sided concessions favoring the Communists in Berlin or anywhere else, the outlook for attaining Soviet goals was dim—as illustrated by Khrushchev's speech at Baku.

Behind the Iron Curtain, Mr. Khrushchev has his own troubles which include economic problems and unrest among the intellectuals, creating pressure and a diversionary tactic.

Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai have been prodding Khrushchev for a tougher line against the West.

The Soviet Premier, too, may have been afraid of the favorable impact which President Eisenhower would have on the people of the Soviet Union if he visited them, as he had been invited to do. Consequently, Mr. Khrushchev "drummed up" an excuse to create an international "street brawl" type scene and withdraw the invitation.

And, finally, after all his bragging about the rocket-missile power of the Soviet armed services, Mr. Khrushchev found it difficult to explain away the freedom with which the United States—for 4 years—has been overflying the country. Even though he was aware of the flights, he had not so informed the Soviet people.

A further allegation: That the flight of the U–2—in relation to the summit conference—was ill timed.

As pointed out in published testimony by Secretary Gates, one could find events all year round upon which to decide against such flights or other intelligence operations—thus leaving us immobile and uninformed of developments affecting—and possibly threatening—our security.

QUESTIONS ON FUMBLING AND BUMBLING

In view of the fussing and fuming by know-it-alls at home—greater than anywhere abroad except perhaps in Communist capitals—the American people may well ask:

Who is really doing the fumbling and bumbling?

Why has the stock of Vice President NIXON—playing a significant role in the administration—gone up?

Are some individuals—for political purposes—willing to risk casting unfavorable shadows on the prestige of our Nation?

These are serious questions which, I believe, the people may—and will—ask in the days ahead.

CONCLUSIONS

My conclusions, then, are:

First. There had been no loss of prestige for the United States. As reported in the U.S. News & World Report of June 27, 1960, for example, and I quote:

> A high official of the United Nations * * * said: "Surprisingly the U–2 incident resulted, among many U.N. nations, in a wave of admiration for American ingenuity."

As Prime Minister Macmillan said:

> Mr. Khrushchev has done some service by dispelling some of the illusions of our defeatists and pacifists at home.

In addition, the tidal waves of enthusiasm, friendship, homage paid to President Eisenhower in countries of the Far East—similar to those expressed prior to the incident—reflect, I believe, that the U–2 accident—only one aspect of complex international relations—certainly did not—as has been charged—lower prestige of the United States.

Also, NATO is stronger and the allies are closer together than before.

Overall, the free world—instead of being lulled to sleep by Khrushchev's sweet words of peace—has had an eye-opening Moscow-style cocktail.

This action awakened the nations of NATO. As a result, our allies of the West are closer together now. They are recognizing the real significance of Khrushchev. While they know that he is a great stage actor, they know very well also that he is still pressing on and on with his philosophy, and, consequently, the defeatists and pacifists in England are alerted.

Second. Did the chairman's statement accompanying the report shed new light on the situation for development of policy? The answer, in my humble judgment, again is "No."

However, it may have accomplished a more evident purpose, although I doubt its value to policymaking, that is, to have created some "poor cannon fodder" for campaigning in the upcoming elections.

Third. Is the free-world alliance stronger? Yes. The nations, including NATO, have moved closer together.

Fourth. Have the American people been alerted? Again the answer is "Yes."

Fifth. Has Congress grasped the real significance of the Paris and U–2 events? Yes. Fortunately, the majority of members have seen through the "fog and haze"—much of it deliberately stirred up, possibly for political purposes. Recognizing the threat to our security, Congress has appropriated additional funds to strengthen our defense.

Sixth. Are the allegations of mishandling the U–2 accident true? Definitely not. By any realistic yardstick, the overall U–2 program up to and including the flight of May 1 has one of our most important information-securing programs for U.S. security and of our allies.

ROLE OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

Now, what about the President? When the President assumed the authority and accepted the responsibility, he was in Paris, available for the summit. By his noble, statesmanlike actions, he made us all proud of him. He did not duck or hedge.

He is not an adherent to the Machiavellian theory of politics, as some would recommend. The President told the truth.

He let the vituperative spew of Khrushchev pass over him. He did not reply in kind. He came home and the reception he received, at which were prominent Democrats as well as Republicans and hundreds of thousands of patriotic citizens, showed that the American people loved and respected him.

There was no loss of prestige there to the individual or to the Nation.

At no time in history has a leader of a Nation elicited the homage shown Mr. Eisenhower—and our country—as reflected in his trips to Asia, the Middle East, Europe, South America—and yes, the Far East.

Upon his return the President again received the high respect and gratitude of the Nation, and he warrants that high respect and deep gratitude of the American people. The consensus of the American people, I believe, is: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. President, I wish to thank my associates on the floor for letting me carry through with a policy which I said was outlined by Senator Vandenberg, and it makes consistent and logical, I trust, the statement I have made. I am grateful for their attention.

EXHIBIT 1

IT'S NOT AS BAD AS THAT, MR. FULBRIGHT

There is no doubt that the mistakes made in the handling of the U–2 incident and President Eisenhower's rebuff in Japan have hurt the reputation of American policy.

But the picture painted of the United States by Senator FULBRIGHT on Tuesday is grossly exaggerated.

* * * * *

"The prestige and influence of our country on the affairs of nations," Mr. FULBRIGHT told the Senate, "has reached a new low." On what basis does he make this judgment? For, as the black clouds of embarrassment and humiliation clear away, we see that the facts remain largely what they were.

It would have been one thing if Pakistan or Norway, which were involved in the U–2 flight, had broken their alliances with us or publicly accused us of compromising them.

It would have been one thing if the Soviets had immediately signed a peace treaty with East Germany and the screws on the Western garrisons in Berlin had been sharply tightened.

It would have been one thing if our NATO partners and particularly Britain and France, had indulged in recriminations—which they reasonably could have.

It would have been one thing if the Kishi Government in Japan had been overthrown and a new government dedicated to neutralism and cooperation with the Communist bloc had seized power.

* * * * *

But none of these things has happened. There is therefore little indication that our influence in the affairs of nations has suffered a dramatic decline. As for our prestige, its level is difficult to determine. It is assumed to be lower, but is the United States held in less esteem than at any other time, as Mr. FULBRIGHT maintains? On what soundings of foreign opinion does he base this claim?

The Senator from Arkansas was at pains to lecture his colleagues on the importance of the forms of international intercourse which have developed over the centuries. The study of history has not, however, given him that sense of perspective which can place blunders and disagreeable signs of unpopularity—and these come to all powerful countries—in their proper light.

This is not to recommend complacency. We have suffered some unpleasant and humiliating reverses in the last 2 months, and it has been hard going for our propagandists. We must earnestly hope that our mistakes will not be repeated. But the world is still here, and very much as it was before May 1. This is above all a time when we need to keep our nerve and our balance. It is also, as Mr. FULBRIGHT suggests a time for self-examination. But neither panic nor guilt has any part to play in the procedure.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I wish to compliment the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin for his remarks this morning. A statement like his is long overdue, in defense of the United States and its policies, particularly in defense of our President. The Senator from Wisconsin has ably answered the charges made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I believe also that Americans across the country will feel a great debt to the Senator for having made his remarks.

I should like to ask one question of the Senator. Does not the Senator feel that Khrushchev's announcement to the world on the downing of the U–2, and his further statement that we had been at this practice for some time, is an admission on his part that Russia does not have the ability at the present time to defend herself from air attack?

Mr. WILEY. Of course I am not a military man. I heard the statement of the Senator yesterday. It was a wonderful statement. There is no question that there is something to that. However let me say this. We have evidence to indicate that the Russians have been shooting at the planes through the years. I believe the last evidence showed that some months ago they did not succeed. It would appear that what they are really trying to do now is to improve their ability to bring down such planes flying at 60 or 70 thousand feet. Of course we can, on the floor of the Senate, disagree. I am not a member of the Armed Services Committee, but I agree with the conclusion of the Senator. It is undoubtedly so.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The reason why I asked the question is that I believe this is one of the great victories we have had over the Communists, the fact that we have pointed them out to be liars, they are in their constant reiterations of their abilities in the air, by showing that they do not have the capabilities that we possessed 6 years ago. If a U–2 type plane were to fly over this country, we would shoot it down. It may be possible that we would not be able to shoot it down on the first or second attempt, but our Air Force would be able to shoot it down.

It is important to point out that we have shown the Russians to be the liars that they are, when they claim this great superiority of theirs in missile power, when they do not have a ground-to-air missile that will reach to 60,000 or 70,000 feet. If they have such a missile, they did not use it. In spite of their constant reiteration of their manned aircraft power, they have not yet developed an interceptor plane that can get to 60,000 or 70,000 feet. We have shown their obvious lack of an air-to-air rocket that can shoot down a U–2 plane from an interceptor plane.

That is one of the greatest victories that we have scored over them. Rather than constantly tearing down the United States, I believe we should be proud of this fact and speak of it in a prideful way.

Mr. WILEY. Here again, this is only my opinion. However I arrive at the conclusion that the Senator has just stated, that as a result of the whole episode the prestige of America or of the President has not suffered. I heard the King of Thailand speak yesterday about the respect he has for the President and for this country. All of this clearly indicates that out of this whole matter a great good has come. There has been an awakening, not only in America, as indicated by the action of Congress, but also throughout the world on the real threat of communism.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from Arizona. He implied that the Soviet defenses could not stop an attack by us at 70,000 feet. If we had bombers that could reach 70,000 feet, we might conclude that they would not be able to get at one of those bombers.

However, I do not know of an American bomber that can go to 70,000 feet. To say that the U–2 incident indicates that we can penetrate Soviet defenses does not hold water, unless we have a bomber that can go up to 70,000 feet. I am sure the Senator from Arizona, who is an expert in this field, would not contend that we have bombers that can reach that altitude.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I probably should have qualified my statement. I recognize that we do not have bombers that can fly at 70,000 feet, but we do have bombers that can fly above 50,000 feet. If they do not have the ability to get a fighter plane to 50,000 feet or 55,000 feet, I would say our chances of success over Russia would be immeasurably better than I have been led to believe they would be. I have never contended that any attack we might launch against Russia would be 100 percent successful and that we would not lose any aircraft.

However, if they do not have the ability to rise to a plateau where they can attack an aircraft at 60,000 or 70,000 feet, then their abilities are also limited to 50,000 or 55,000 feet. I do not contend that an attack would be successful to the point that we would not lose bombers. However, I think the Russians are far more vulnerable to air attack than we had ever known before.

Mr. ENGLE. I am sure the Soviets can get their interceptors—their Migs—up to 50,000 or 55,000 feet. They may get a little wobbly up there, but they can still shoot. The conclusion ought not to be drawn from the U–2 incident that the Soviet defenses are vulnerable; as a matter of fact, they are tougher than ever.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I was hoping to get the floor to add something to the views which the Senator from Wisconsin has so very eloquently put before us. However, I should like to offer a brief tribute to the Senator from Wisconsin for the spirit and the dedication to service which led him to undertake this rebuttal today. It is so much in the whole temper of our society simply to let a great, portentous, historic, pronouncement on American foreign policy stand alone, without making the case on the other side, and there always is a case, as the Senator from Wisconsin saw it.

As I said, I shall discuss the subject, I hope, in my own time shortly. However, I did not want to fail to pay this tribute to the spirit of the young man from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from New York is very kind.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I think it is very important in this year of an election in the United States that we do not let our emotions carry any of us to the point of downgrading the United States and its position in the world. We have heard too much lately about how U.S. prestige has gone to pieces; how we were losing Japan; how we were losing Latin America; how we were losing Europe and every other part of the world. That simply is not so. I am glad the Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out that it is not so.

It was only 2 weeks ago that we heard that Japan had gone, or that it was on the way out. Some of us questioned that view.

A few minutes ago, the following dispatch was carried on the Associated Press news ticker:

TOKYO.—Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi's Conservative Party won today a provincial election which the Socialists had attempted to turn into a demonstration of opposition to the military alliance with the United States.

Iwao Yamazaki, 59, of Kishi's Liberal-Democratic Party, easily won reelection as governor of Aomori Prefecture over an opposition Socialist leader who claimed a vote for Yamazaki was a vote for the newly ratified security treaty.

Nearly complete returns from the conservative, rural prefecture at the northern tip of Honshu gave Yamazaki 273,983 votes to 174,051 for Socialist Yuzo Awaya.

Mr. President, that is what we hoped for when we supported the Japanese Treaty. It is what we believed in. We felt that the demonstrations in Japan were not anti-American; that they did not indicate a weakening of American friendship in that area.

This is the first by-election which has been held in which the position and attitude of Japan toward America was an issue, and the pro-American forces—those in favor of working with the United States—won an overwhelming victory.

Let us be careful. Let us say what we want to say about our respective abilities to run the U.S. Government. But let us not downgrade the United States in the field of foreign affairs, because I do not believe we should be downgraded. I think we are holding our own very well, not only among our allies, but also we are holding the respect of those who are not so close to us.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Vermont. I think he made a very good comment. It confirms the position I have felt was the right position all along. Our prestige has not gone. Our prestige has been built up by the first revelation to the world of the U–2, showing definitely its capability. It has confirmed to the common citizens of the foreign countries concerned what the leaders have known all along.

Second, Japan now comes through in a wonderful way, showing, as the distinguished Senator from Vermont has said, that the Japanese people are our friends.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I must yield first to the distinguished acting majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator. I am delighted to have him yield to me. I was awaiting my turn.

I should like to ask the Senator if he will allow me the privilege of making a few suggestions and answering a few questions.

Mr. WILEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANSFIELD. First, I wish to join with the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], and other Senators who have praised the Senator from Wisconsin for the spirit he has shown and the directness which he has exhibited. However, I point out that those are traits of long standing with the Senator from Wisconsin. When he has something to say, he speaks his mind and lets the chips fall where they may. I know he would accord to anyone else the same privileges and rights he would claim for himself—and the Members of this body do have privileges and rights.

I point out that it has come to be the habit in this country for a speech by a Democrat in the field of foreign policy, no matter how constructive it is or how constructively critical, in many instances, to be labeled as "partisan"; it is referred to by some as "unpatriotic"; it is considered as a "new low"; "politically motivated" or a "blow at national unity." In the press, Democratic speeches are referred to as "slashing attacks on the administration"; "bitter attacks on the administration"; "harsh attacks on the administration."

I think the press, by and large, is losing much of the responsibility which it should have, because, along with Congress, the executive branch, and the people, the fourth estate likewise has a constructive responsibility which it ought to assume. It ought to forget the headlines; it ought to study the spirit and the intent behind a speech, because what the press says is carried throughout the Nation and throughout the world. In all too many instances, a disservice is done to the cause of unity and patriotism in this country because a headline has primacy over content.

Are we to remain silent as our prestige and standing decline? I do not agree with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] that the United States has scored a victory. If we have, it is a pyrrhic victory.

Neither do I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that our prestige has been built up. It has not been built up. When I listened to the speech by the President on last Monday, I was disturbed and disappointed. I do not agree with his thesis that our standing had been increased in the Far East. I do not agree that this result has brought us much in the way of good. What I say is nothing new; it is what I have said in the State of Montana. There I indicated that I disagreed with the President's statement that our foreign policy should not be changed. I think it must be changed with the times because just as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated, on another matter, "new days require new methods."

I said also that in addition to the fact that our thinking must change with the times, we should veer away from the outmoded concepts and the idea that American dollars spent abroad are the answers to our problems overseas.

The President, in his speech to the Nation, said we should not become frightened. No one is frightened in this country, but the people are concerned over the events of the past 7 or 8 weeks. They have a right to be concerned. The question which concerns us is not a political question. In my opinion, it is a question of national survival.

The results of good will trips made by the President have all too often been an effort to seek an increase in funds by the countries visited—and this applies to the President's most recent trip to the Far East—rather than a change in policy to bring about a greater degree of self-reliance and a loosening degree of dependence on the United States.

I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin, who is direct and honest in all his dealings, would not want us to remain silent in this Chamber. He would not want us to be ostriches. He would like to have us express our honest views. I am sure that by and large he recognizes that what we should try to do is to express our views in constructive fashion. We cannot, as Senators, disown or disavow our responsibilities by not stating our views as we see conditions. We are responsible to our people; and, as such, we have to express our opinions. We are not robots. We are Senators. We are sent here to do our own thinking, not to be dictated to. I think we can do without Pyrrhic victories and prestige buildups of the kind we have enjoyed—and I use the word "enjoyed" advisedly—over the past 7 or 8 weeks.

The Senator from Wisconsin says he believes in the American system. Mr. President, Democrats believe in the American system too.

There has been no attempt by anyone in the Congress—Democrat or Republican—to usurp the prerogatives of the executive branch. All of us have read the Constitution, and all of us know what is in the Constitution. All of us know that the Constitution vests all the executive power in the President of the United States, and that under the Constitution the President is the Chief of State and Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the Nation. All of us know that he has that authority. But certainly, with that ever present in our minds, we can express our views as we see them.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked why should Congress escape blame for the U–2 incident, inasmuch as the U–2 flights had been conducted successfully during a 4-year program. Mr. President, what I am concerned about is the law of averages. And most important—I am concerned about the question of timing, because at the time of the flight in question, it was generally known that within 3 weeks the President was to go to a summit meeting which he had agreed to attend. I believe that someone with the political responsibility and authority should have been able to take action in that matter, so the flight at that particular time would not have taken place.

No one that I know of has found fault with the U–2 flights or with their success. But, after all, the President of the United States is an important person. He holds the highest office in this land; and we ought to consider him and his position, in relation to this particular incident.

The U–2 inquiry was just about as nonpartisan as any inquiry could ever be. I think the chairman of the committee leaned over backward in his efforts to be fair; and certainly he worked in accord with the administration, so that no secret information or information highly executive in nature would be given to the public.

I resent the implication that the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has been furnishing help to Moscow and is second only to Mr. Khrushchev in criticizing the United States.

Senator FULBRIGHT is a Senator of the United States. He is the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He has responsibilities, just as all other Senators do; and I hope he will continue to exercise them.

Mr. President, have the people been fooled? The Senator from Wisconsin said, "Happily, no." I hope the people have not been fooled, because they are entitled to the truth. After all, the Bible says something to the effect that those who know the truth will remain free.

To my knowledge, no one has ever questioned the motives of the President of the United States. All of us respect him. We think he is a great man, a kind man, and a decent man. I repeat that no one, on either side of the aisle, has ever questioned the motives of President Eisenhower.

The uproar over the failure to acknowledge would not have increased, as has been stated, because the President had overall responsibility. What he did was to take personal responsibility. But neither the President nor any member of the Cabinet had any direct personal knowledge of that particular flight.

I also wish to say that the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] was not "an apology for Soviet policy." His statement was anything but that.

We are not exercising hindsight. If the record is examined, I believe it will be found that many of the arguments which are raised today were raised before this matter came to the attention of the country and the world.

Suggestions have been made from time to time. There has been no "self-righteous hindsight"; but I do know of instances where foresight has been used in this body.

No Member of the Congress, to my knowledge, has sought to arrogate to himself the "dictation" of changes in the administration; but suggestions and proposals have been made from time to time. A Senator is not an ostrich, to bury his head in the sand, and let the rest of the world go by, and hope for the best. Neither is a Senator a parrot who must mimic what someone else says. If a Senator cannot think for himself and if a Senator cannot arrive at his own decisions, I do not think he has any business being in this body.

In answer to some of the statements made by the Senator from Wisconsin, there was in my opinion no "tidal wave" of welcome of Mr. Eisenhower in the Far East. NATO is not "stronger" today. NATO is more of a symbol than a shield. Our allies are not "closer" to us. For instance, we find that we cannot now use the airfields in Norway as before, and Denmark has said we cannot use the airfields there; and Pakistan will, I believe be very careful in the future. And despite the statements made in the last few days in Japan, I note that all our U–2's which used to be based at Atsugi have now been transferred to Okinawa. If these flights are necessary and if they will prevent another Pearl Harbor, why have not they been continued?

I wish to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that all of us agree with him in our respect and our admiration for the President of the United States, no matter who he may be. It is an office which we must respect and to which we must, in a sense, pay veneration. But certainly in these difficult times, in which all of us are involved, there is no room for a Democratic viewpoint or for a Republican viewpoint. There is room only for an American viewpoint.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement entitled "The President's June 27 Report to the Nation."

I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S JUNE 27 REPORT TO THE NATION

President Eisenhower, in his address, said nothing that we did not already know. He spoke of the need to preserve good relations with Japan in spite of the recent unfortunate developments. That was a sound observation because Japan is the hinge on which peace hangs in the Far East.

I would not agree with him that our relations with Okinawa have been strengthened nor that in general our standing has been increased in the Far East.

I think he showed wisdom in saying that he has no plans for future trips except of an emergency nature. I believe that good-will trips and personal diplomacy by heads of state should be curtailed drastically and done only on an emergency basis. They accomplish too little in too limited time and involve too much pageantry and too much publicity.

The Secretary of State should likewise curtail his voyages overseas. The long, hard, and dull but necessary work of diplomacy should be conducted by ambassadors who should be given authority to operate in private on a give-and-take basis and away from the glare of publicity.

I disagree with the President that our foreign policy should not be changed. I think it must be changed with the times and that we should veer away from outmoded concepts and the idea that American dollars sent abroad are the answers to our problems overseas. Nobody is "frightened" but people are concerned over the events of the past 6 weeks and they have a right to be. The results of these good will trips have all too often been to seek an increase in funds by the countries visited rather than a change in policy to bring about a greater degree of self-reliance and a lessening degree of dependence on the United States.

I agree with the President that "we must act with mature judgment."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JORDAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

ADJUSTMENT OF RATES OF BASIC COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the President's veto message be laid before the Senate and be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DODD in the Chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

That the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H.R. 9883) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Finance Committee be permitted to sit during the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Wisconsin desire? Ten minutes?

Mr. WILEY. Personally, yes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I wish to have a few minutes in which to speak.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I, too, would like to follow the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin. It will take me about 15 minutes, and I have arranged for that with the minority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, earlier in the day we agreed that when the veto message reached the Senate, we would try to proceed with the debate on it, and then vote on it, so that Senators who might have dinner engagements would not have to ask—as has happened before—that the vote on a vital measure such as this one be postponed.

We have sufficient time to yield to Senators who desire to address themselves to this matter—so far as I am informed by Senators on my side of the aisle.

The Senator from Ohio plans to make a somewhat lengthy statement on tomorrow; but he has indicated that he wishes to ask a question or two today, and I have planned to yield to him enough time for that purpose.

I have planned to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]; and I shall yield to any other Senator who needs time.

We have 4 hours for the debate on the veto message.

When we proceed with the debate on this very important measure, on which all Senators wish to be recorded, the earliest time, probably, at which we could reach a vote on it would be 5:30. I hope we can do so. After the vote is taken, Senators will be able to talk on any subjects on which they may desire to talk; and we shall remain in session until midnight, if Senators wish us to do so, or we shall convene early in the morning.

We have already been charged with not sufficiently expediting the handling of legislation. We have just now reported the important international development administration bill which we discussed last night. We shall be in session late in the evening or early tomorrow morning, and we shall have before us various appropriation measures.

I should like to have the Senate proceed with the debate on the vetoed measure, and I think we can do so, if Senators will be reasonable in regard to the amount of time they require.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has the floor, does he not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He does.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Texas made a unanimous-consent request, as yet?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes, early in the day it was agreed that when the veto message was received, 2 hours would be available to each side, for the debate.

Mr. JAVITS. That has been agreed to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

The veto message was received at a time when the Senator from Wisconsin was discussing another matter. Consequently, we delayed beginning the debate on the vetoed bill. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was then at lunch. I called him, and discussed with him what we should do about the matter; and he came to the Chamber for the purpose of exploring the matter with Senators on his side.

As the Senator knows, we talked about his time requirements. As nearly as we can make out, we will not have very much of the 4 hours taken on the veto message. The Senator from Illinois does not think he will use 1 hour of his 2 hours. On our side, we have requests for 20 minutes of the 2 hours. So we could be yielding our time——

Mr. JAVITS. I am ready whenever the Senator wishes to yield to me, and whenever the Senator from Wisconsin has concluded.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Could we have an additional understanding that if additional time were requested, it would be granted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the Senator from Wisconsin said he would use another 10 minutes.

Mr. WILEY. Personally.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And the Senator from New York 15 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I do not ask for the floor on my own time. I should like to say some nice things about the Senator from Wisconsin. I could do it in 5 minutes, but it would be inadequate.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York 10 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILEY. I yield; yes.

COMMENDATION OF SENATOR WILEY'S STATEMENT ON THE U–2 INCIDENT

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I desire to express in the strongest terms possible my gratitude to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin for the very forceful manner in which he has put this problem before us. Unfortunately, I was not able to be here during all of his address, but I have had the privilege of reading it. It is cogent, it is factual, and it is timely. I associate myself entirely with the remarks which our distinguished friend has made.

He has wisely brought forth the fact of the widespread popular support the President has received. The headlines growing out of the remarks made by some of our friends on the other side of the aisle are distinctly not a reflection of the assessment which the great body of the American people have made of the U–2 incident.

I know from the mail I have received on this question that our constituents, as has so often happened in the past, are ahead of a certain body of opinion in the Congress in their realistic appraisal of the true significance of the U–2 case. It is, therefore, most unfortunate that the incident has been thrown completely out of focus by an attack that smacks more of a search for political advantage than for national interest, or at least is so interpreted by the press, as has been brought out by the Senator from Wisconsin.

There is nothing easier than to look into the rearview mirror of history, and proclaim what should have happened in a specific situation. The wisdom of hindsight is the most available and least esteemed intellectual commodity in the world of thought and judgment.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], in his eloquent address in the Senate today, has very wisely stressed the fact of the unique record of the U–2 flights over a period of 4 years, and their supreme significance in terms of the great and overriding consideration that inspired such flights—the real and constant danger of Communist aggression. In this grave venture, the element of risk was freely accepted. That was natural. That was inevitable. Why, then, one must ask, are the consequences of risk assailed with almost as much fervor as though they had involved enemy action against us rather than action in behalf of our own security as a nation?

It is an incredible paradox that any Member of Congress should in all too real a sense, even if innocently and unwittingly, as I must assume, become an apologist for the Soviet point of view by joining his voice in a critique that pins blame exactly where the Kremlin pins it—on the leadership of this Nation.

The greatest spy master the world has ever known—with a million agents working day and night shifts in an effort to collect intelligence that will better enable him to weaken and destroy the free world—that spy master must be no little amused, and no little gratified, to find that his attack against the President of the United States finds echoes in the Halls of Congress.

In the present state of the world, our intelligence operation is not a game with precise and gentlemanly rules of conduct. Spying cannot be analyzed as one would analyze a game of tennis. Freedom is in a raw life-and-death struggle. It is a game of survival we are playing, and the sooner we act as though we were in such a game, the better off we shall be.

Again, and in the most emphatic terms of which I am capable, I commend our distinguished, brave, and forceful colleague from Wisconsin for the fine message which he has given us today, setting the record straight. I hope the press of this country will give it attention equal to that which was given to the attacks upon this administration and upon the President of the United States.

ADJUSTMENT OF RATES OF BASIC COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The business before the Senate is the President's veto of H.R. 9883, to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, as I understand, control of the time is under the majority and minority leaders, 2 hours each. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to state, from the requests made of us, that we have more than ample time, but if we do not, I will make a request for any reasonable extension of the time so that Senators who desire to discuss this or any matter may have that opportunity.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] desires to speak for 4 or 5 minutes, so that he may keep another engagement. I would like to yield him

4 or 5 minutes, and then yield to the Senator from New York, in accordance with our understanding, if that is agreeable.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator from Texas does not have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Very well. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the agreement, the time is under the control of the majority and minority leaders.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There has been no agreement.

Mr. GOLDWATER. How can the Senator from Texas take the floor away from the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. By unanimous consent agreement entered into that when the veto came to the Senate, the time on it would be controlled.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No, Mr. President. It was stated that an informal suggestion was to be made, and it was informally agreed to. There was no agreement entered into. I do not want to see the Senator from Wisconsin taken off the floor. I think he has a right to be heard.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I agree with that.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, do I have the floor? I want to yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], who has been trying to get the floor for some time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will clarify the parliamentary situation. The Chair requests that the clerk read the agreement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, may I make this suggestion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to have the agreement read first, if we may.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A transcription of the RECORD reads:

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that following the morning hour there will be some statements, and we expect to have the conference report of the military construction bill before the Senate. We anticipate that there will be some further discussion of H.R. 10. However, perhaps shortly after we act on the conference report, depending on how long the speeches may be, we will have a vote on overriding the President's veto of the Federal employees pay raise bill, in the event the House should override the veto.

Then we may proceed, after consultation with Senators interested in the matter, particularly committee chairmen, to proceed to the consideration of the extension of the Sugar Act.

The minority leader suggests that those in opposition to the Federal pay bill, and who favor sustaining the veto, would be agreeable to a 2-hour limitation, in connection with that discussion. I ask unanimous consent, in the event we do proceed to the motion to override the veto, that there be 2 hours of debate on each side.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is just an informal suggestion for the moment, as I take it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the suggestion is agreed to.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. GOLDWATER. I asked the Presiding Officer, Who has the floor? I have not had an answer.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate under the agreement is under the control of the majority leader and of the minority leader.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. There was nothing in the colloquy read by the clerk which would indicate there was any agreement at all, not even informal. I protest the taking of the Senator from Wisconsin off the floor.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I make a point of order. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think it is perfectly clear that the unanimous-consent agreement does not take the Senator from Wisconsin off the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The present occupant of the Chair has not laid down a ruling, so far as I know. So far as I know, the Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ruled. The Chair has asked the Parliamentarian for advice.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not correct to say that when the unanimous-consent request was made, it was phrased in this form:

I ask unanimous consent, in the event we do proceed to the motion to overide the veto, that there be 2 hours of debate on each side.

The question I ask is, Has the motion to proceed to overide the veto been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. It is before the Senate now.

Mr. KEATING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEATING. The Presiding Officer has ruled that the Senator from Wisconsin has the floor. Does the Presiding Officer further rule that the Senator's time is not limited?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ruled that the Senator from Wisconsin has the floor. The Chair has asked for advice from the Parliamentarian to clear up the parliamentary situation.

Mr. KEATING. I ask, Mr. President, Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The business before the Senate is the question of the veto of the Federal pay bill. Under the agreement the Chair rules that the majority leader and the minority leader have control of the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, there is no desire to take the Senator from Wisconsin off the floor. The minority leader asked what time he wanted. Whatever time the Senator desires, he can be yielded. If he wishes to have an additional hour, we shall ask for that. If the Senator wishes to hold the floor and yield for questions, well and good. We understand the Senator wished to let other Senators speak, and then conclude with a statement. If the Senator will make known his wishes, we will comply with them.

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to proceed?

Mr. WILEY. Yes. I wish to make a statement, so that there will be no more confusion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 15 minutes.

Mr. WILEY. I do not think the Senator has the time to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes, I have.

Mr. WILEY. I have the floor. The time has not started running; has it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that the business before the Senate is the question on the veto of the Federal pay bill. Under the agreement time is divided between the majority leader and the minority leader. The majority leader can yield to the Senator from Wisconsin such time as he desires, if he has that much time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, that is the ruling of the Chair from which the Senator from Oregon appeals. I think we had better discuss the rules of the Senate with respect to this unanimous-consent agreement which seeks to take a Senator off the floor of the Senate while he has the floor. This is a pretty precious principle in the Senate, Mr. President.

I disagree with practically everything the Senator from Wisconsin has said this morning, but the Senator from Wisconsin, in my judgment, had the floor, and in my judgment he cannot be taken off the floor by any such procedure as the Presiding Officer is trying to use to take him off the floor at the present time.

I think the unanimous-consent agreement itself bespeaks that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I should like to expedite the business of the Senate as much as possible. I consulted with the minority leader. I thought the Senator had ascertained the wishes of all Senators on his side. The Senator told me the Senator from Wisconsin desired 10 minutes to conclude the debate. The Parliamentarian informed me that when we laid the veto message before the Senate the time limitation would begin to run.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time limitation not go into effect for another hour, so that we can be sure the Senator from Wisconsin has had such time as he may desire to yield for any questions to any Senator to whom he desires to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11776) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 18, 23, 44, and 52 to the bill, and concurred therein; and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 47 to the bill, and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE U–2 AND U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I think we have the matter adjusted, in one way.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the question of forming judgments on the basis of hindsight.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] and I issued a separate statement dealing with the U–2 incident. In that statement it was declared:

> Of course, if the failure of the May 1 flight could have been expected and foreseen, then the flight should not have been dispatched. This would hold true too for all the previous flights. But the fact is that when the May 1 flight started on its journey, every past experience justified the conclusion that it would not fail.

We further stated:

> With the benefit of hindsight, no criticisms have been made against the flights which did not fail, but only against the May 1 flight.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the statement made by the chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations in his presentation of the report to the Senate last Tuesday. The Senator stated that the May 1 flight should not have been made. Then he made the following statement to the Senate:

> We are told that this particular flight was in a special category; that it was seeking information of extraordinary importance which might not be available later. However, we are not told, even under conditions of the utmost secrecy, what that information was.

He said further:

> It might be argued that if we come now to the judgment that the May 1 flight should not have taken place, it is incumbent upon us to come also to a judgment as to what date prior to May 1 should have been fixed as a cutoff.

He stated further:

> I should say that sometime around the middle of April, or perhaps after the flight of April 9.

In his statement he specifically declares that May 1 was wrong. Obviously it was wrong because the May 1 flight failed. But he states:

> It should have been held on April 9 or around the middle of April.

If it were held around the middle of April, we would have had time to rebuild our relationship with the Soviet.

My question is, What would have been the position of the committee if the April 9 flight had failed? What would have been the position of the committee and its chairman if any of the flights prior to April 15 had failed? The Committee Chairman suggested that cutoff date.

I shall first try to answer those questions myself. On the basis of hindsight, the judgment would have been formed that the April 15 date was improper. If the flight of April 9 had failed, it would have been declared that that flight should not have been conducted.

The Senator from Wisconsin discussed the subject of the simplicity of forming judgments on the basis of past facts compared with the difficulty of forming them by looking into the future. I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin as to what he believes the situation would have been if the last flight had been conducted on April 9 or April 15 rather than on May 1.

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator from Ohio is asking with respect to the reaction of the chairman of the committee, I suspect that if the flight had failed on any of the dates he mentioned, the same conclusions would have been drawn. But I personally feel that since the President and those who had charge of this entire procedure for 4 years knew that May 1 was the only day in that month that was available because of weather conditions, the right thing was done. We have not yet received the facts as to how Powers was shot down or came down in some other way. Those facts will have to be developed. One of the columnists lately gave the impression that Powers probably fainted and had to come down lower, or that his instruments were damaged and he had to come down. I do not know.

However, looking at the episode now, all I can say is that in my humble opinion, those who had the responsibility of making the decision made the right decision, and since they made it, it is not for me to question their right to do so.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I point out that not one of the many, many flights made since July 12, 1956, was wrong—not a single one. The only one that should not have been flown was the May 1 flight, according to the committee chairman.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Ohio is correct. That is what would be contended, though I do not agree with that conclusion.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me, provided he does not lose his right to the floor.

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Wisconsin may first yield to me for a statement, and following my remarks, that he be permitted to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] without losing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] is present. I know he is obliged to leave the Chamber shortly. He has been seeking an opportunity to address the Senate for 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas may address the Senate for 5 minutes, and then when he concludes, I may have the floor to make a statement; and then that I may yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has charge of the time.

Mr. WILEY. I had promised the Senator from Arkansas that I would yield to him. However, he had left the Chamber and I, therefore, had yielded to the Senator from New York.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, I shall be very brief.

I wish to comment only briefly on the speech of the senior Senator from Wisconsin. I do not want my silence to be interpreted in any way as approval of the personal statements about me made by the distinguished and able senior Senator from Wisconsin.

His statement that I believe the English parliamentary system would be appropriate for this country is not only quite untrue and unfounded, but is wholly irrelevant to the issues raised by my statement on Tuesday concerning the U–2 incident.

His repeated insinuations that I was partisan in my observations are without any foundation, I believe.

On page 4 he stated that Members of Congress—and I suppose he means me—have questioned the motives of the President. This is entirely untrue and false. I do not question the President's motives. I have questioned only his judgment, just as I questioned the judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and not his motives.

As for the substantive arguments of the Senator from Wisconsin, they primarily consist of self-righteous statements which bear the hallmark of Republican foreign policy. He blames everything on the Communists, and that makes the whole matter very simple.

Our Government does not make mistakes, in his opinion, and it interprets every setback as a victory, whether it be the failure of the Paris summit conference or the withdrawal of the invitation by the Japanese Government of its invitation to the President to visit that country. I assume from that that he also feels the same way about the reception the Vice President received in Peru and Venezuela a short time ago on his last visit to that area.

Much of the substantive material in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin is irrelevant to the U–2 incident and its aftermath, and, therefore, to discuss it would add nothing to our understanding of that event or to an understanding of our present circumstances in the world.

I can only add that I based my conclusions upon the report of the committee approved by 14 of the 17 members, including 4 of the 6 Republican members of that committee. The four members who signed the report were faithful in their attendance and were cooperative in every respect.

Finally, of course, everyone will interpret that report according to his own experience and sensitiveness to the facts which were found by the committee. It is quite natural and normal that the various members of that committee should interpret the meaning of the facts which were developed. There was very little difference of opinion in the committee as to the factual statement itself. There was no trouble in arriving at the statement of facts. The difficulty arises from the meaning of the facts, which is quite natural and normal. However, I think the members during this period exercised a great deal of control, and they succeeded in preventing partisanship from entering into the consideration of the report. I believe we succeeded under these circumstances to an unusual degree, and I think the report itself is a sound and worthwhile document. Any reasonable person, by a careful reading of the report, can gain an understanding of the major aspects of this sad and unfortunate affair which we have referred to as the U–2 affair.

I close by expressing the hope that we can keep partisanship to a minimum in discussing our foreign relations. By that I do not mean we should not discuss them. I think it is one of the most legitimate and important subjects to discuss.

I do not mean that there should not be differences of opinion about it. Of course, there should be. But these continual insinuations that anyone who might disagree with another's interpretation as being pro-Communist or an advocate of Mr. Khrushchev's position, it seems to me, is evidence of extreme partisanship.

I hope the Democrats will never be guilty of anything approaching the action of the Republicans in Congress in December 1950, when they passed a formal resolution demanding the resignation of the then Democratic Secretary of State on the eve of his departure to an important conference with our Western European allies.

I believe that is one of the classic examples of partisanship. I am glad to recite that the senior Senator from Wisconsin, according to press reports I have, was not present and did not participate in that vote. However, it was overwhelmingly adopted by the membership of both Houses. I do not believe there has been the slightest indication of any attempt on the part of the Democratic members of the committee or of the Senate to take partisan advantage out of the U–2 incident. The report itself, as anyone can see who reads it, is very factual and, as I said, has been accepted by four of the members on the Republican side of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I submitted my own observations as being a proper and logical deduction from the facts found in that report. If those who disagree with it—and they are at liberty to disagree—and argue as to the merits of it, I have no objection. However, merely to denounce it as being in the interest of Mr. Khrushchev, it seems to me, is the height of partisanship. I do not believe that adds anything to our understanding or to the formulating of what our policy is to be in the future. I would say that the whole report is intended to give, first, understanding and, second, some guidance as to how we shall conduct our relations with the Communist empire, largely because we have no alternative but to conduct relations with them, unless we wish to resort to war. I do not believe that those who disagree with the report find that that is a tenable policy.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I wish to congratulate the junior Senator from Arkansas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, upon his conduct of the hearings on the failure of the Paris conference and incidents related thereto, and to congratulate him also upon his successful conduct of the deliberations and the eventual issuance of the report by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

As the Senator knows, the prediction was made, at the close of the hearing, that the committee would not be able to reach agreement on a report. The committee did finally, after many long and arduous sessions, examination and drafting, line by line, issue a report, and not one vote was cast against the contents of the report.

I believe it is fair to say—and I am sure if I am incorrect the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana will say so—that his opposition to the report was not based upon its contents, but upon the advisability of issuing a report. That is a point of view which, it seems to me, is a tenable one.

On the other hand, I thought that in the exercise of democracy we could not sweep under the rug a matter so important as the failure of the Paris conference.

It was necessary to have an investigation. Once we had an investigation, it seems to me, it was incumbent upon the membership of the committee, if it could possibly do so, within the bounds of accommodation, reason, and compromise, to issue a report. I am happy that it did so and that the report was approved by a vote of 14 to 1. This accomplishment was in large measure due to the impartial, nonpartisan way in which the distinguished chairman of the committee presided over the deliberations of the committee. I wish to express to him my appreciation for his efforts and my esteem for his ability, and my congratulations upon his accomplishment.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator very much. He has contributed greatly to the accomplishment.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the Senator from Hawaii.

CORRECTIONS IN H.R. 11602, THE HAWAII OMNIBUS BILL

Mr. LONG of Hawaii. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of House Concurrent Resolution 706. The resolution authorizes and directs the clerk of the House to make technical corrections in H.R. 11602, the Hawaii omnibus bill, as engrossed by the House. These corrections are completely of a technical nature. The leadership on both sides of the aisle has been consulted on the matter. There is no objection.

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate, House Concurrent Resolution 706, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 11602) entitled "An Act to amend certain laws of the United States in light of the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make the following corrections in the House engrossed bill: On page 9, line 7, strike out "1960," and insert "1950,"; on page 15, line 15, strike "1960" and insert "1950"; on page 31, line 2, strike out "15(a)" and insert "14(a)"; on page 31, line 3, strike out "24(a)," and insert "23(a),"; on page 31, line 4, strike out "3 of section 30(d)," and insert "(3) of section 29(d),"; on page 31, line 5, strike out "section 31," and insert "section 30,"; on page 31, line 6, strike out "section 21(b)" and insert "section 20(b)"; on page 31, line 12, strike out "31(a)" and insert "30(a)"; on page 31, line 24, strike out "section 15" and insert "section 14"; on page 32, line 2, strike out "section 15(a)" and insert "section 14(a)"; on page 32, line 8, strike out "section 15(a)" and insert "section 14(a)"; on page 32, line 10, strike out "section 31(c)(1)" and insert "section 30(c)(1)"; on page 32, line 15, strike out "section 15, by section 21(a)," and insert "section 14, by section 20(a),"; on page 32, line 16, strike out "24(b)," and insert "23(b),"; on page 32, line 17, strike out "section 30," and insert "section 29,"; and on page 32, line 18, strike out "section 31" and insert "section 30".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

THE U–2 INCIDENT AND FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I now yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Missouri, and then I shall yield briefly to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that I may do so without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I too should like to join with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee in congratulating the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations for the very able and constructive talk he made with respect to the U–2 incident on the floor of the Senate recently. I put in the RECORD, not long ago, a statement by Mr. Albert Wohlstetter, which he made in an article on "National Purpose," published in the New York Times and Life magazine. The statement reads:

> I doubt that the public of this country was ever less informed on matters directly affecting its life and death. On the contrary at each great crisis the public has been reassured that no further effort is required.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas is doing his best to keep the American people informed about matters on which they have every right to be informed. I again congratulate him on his constructive statesmanship.

Mr. JAVITS. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

UNITED STATES-JAPAN TREATY IS VALUABLE TO BOTH NATIONS

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, now that the United States-Japan Security Treaty has been ratified by both nations, and is in force, it is worth considering the significance of this alliance which some of the accompanying developments have tended to obscure.

I am particularly concerned about the public reaction in our own country to the disturbances which occurred in Japan, and especially about the false conclusion—drawn by some people who should know better—that this treaty has brought about some sort of catastrophe in the free world.

Let me remind my colleagues that another significant alliance to which we are a party was born in strife. Who can forget the opposition that was expressed to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1949?

No signatory joined without some domestic voices raised in protest. One parliament was stoned as it voted for ratification. Indeed, some of the most heated debate on NATO occurred right here in the U.S. Senate because many Americans questioned the advisability of committing ourselves to a provision which could mean fighting on foreign shores to defend oversea allies.

So if both our allies and we had reservations about NATO, is it so surprising to see protests raised about the important alliance which we just signed with Japan?

Neither can we consider Communist screams of protest as evidence that there is a flaw in a treaty of free world nations. To this day the 11-year-old NATO alliance sticks in the throat of the men in the Kremlin and their fanatic associates in Peiping. They have used every device short of war to break, weaken, or discredit NATO, but this has not convinced the free world that it can afford to hang together any less passionately.

But how do we explain the fact that the disturbances and street fighting in Japan were not confined to Communists?

The answer lies largely in the fact that the people of Japan have a thoroughgoing hatred and deep-seated fear of war. Their constitution, drafted in the antiwar atmosphere during the U.S. military occupation, does not permit Japanese self-defense forces to be used outside of Japan.

As the only nation which has suffered the disaster of atomic bombing, the Japanese people as a whole fear involvement in war and therefore tend to resist any form of military alliance. Sentiment in Japan is nevertheless heavily pro-Western and pro-United States, despite the fact that the Kishi government was forced to withdraw the invitation for President Eisenhower to visit Japan earlier this month. Although the vast majority of the people in Japan are pro-United States, they were fired up to a hysteria point. Communist agitators played on the feelings of pacifism which exists among the Japanese and is especially true of Japanese students and turned this into what has been falsely interpreted as simply an anti-American demonstration.

Moreover, Prime Minister Kishi is having his own domestic political troubles, is considered by some Japanese to be promilitary and is involved in a four-way struggle for power in his own party. Under these circumstances, Mr. Kishi did not make use of the power he had to arm the police and call out the military. Had he done so, there would have been even greater violence and the Japanese fear of the old police-state method would have been revived.

Prime Minister Kishi has announced he will resign. New elections will be held. It is quite likely that his Liberal-Democratic Party will win again under a new leader and the Japanese people will reaffirm their desire for a moderate, conservative government.

But until that time, it is unfortunate that noisy public demonstrations in Japan can blind the world—and people in our own country, as well—to the substantial gains made by the Security Treaty itself.

This is the first time since the end of World War II that Japan has acted as a completely free agent in entering into an international alliance. The previous treaty, the one this supplants. went into effect in 1952. It was signed at the same time as the Peace Treaty, and many Japanese felt that the Security Treaty was the price they had to pay for a peace treaty.

This treaty, supported by a substantial majority of the Japanese Parliament and a majority of the Japanese people, puts Japan squarely in the free world camp. And we need the Japanese at least as much as they need us.

It must be remembered that throughout this century, until World War II, Japan and Germany were the counterbalancing powers which flanked Russia and contained Russian expansionism.

With our defeat of these countries on the Soviet perimeter, the more distant forces of Britain and France were in no military position to prevent Russia's gobbling up the territory of others. Indeed, by our actions, we rendered ourselves helpless to stop communism until it engulfed most of the continents of Asia and Europe.

That is why the Japanese are such valuable allies. Unless Japan sticks with the free world, our defenses are thrown back to the Philippines and, inevitably and ultimately to Guam and Hawaii, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] suggests.

The new Security Treaty gives us at least 10 more years to maintain our bases in Japan, with planes, carriers, weapons, and men protecting one of the most important frontiers of the free world.

I thank the Senator from New York and the Senator from Wisconsin for yielding to me.

THE U–2 AND U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 1 minute to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon may proceed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in my judgment, the address delivered by the statesman from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] the other day regarding the U–2 spy plane incident and in criticism of the administration's bungling in respect to it was the most courageous address I have heard in the Senate at this session. In my judgment, it was absolutely sound in its criticism of the Eisenhower administration.

In my judgment, the use of the U–2 spy plane over Russia constituted an act of aggression on the part of the United States against a foreign power. Not only this particular flight, but every U–2 flight, in my judgment, was an act of aggression on the part of the United States. Such flights over Russia constituted a danger of provoking war. Under the facts and circumstances, in my judgment, brought out in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee investigation of this blunder by the Eisenhower administration was there any justification, under international comity, for the flights in the first instance? Neither would there be any justification for a continuation of such flights.

It is my opinion that if any President authorizes in the future such an act of aggression, he should be impeached.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think the real problem which confronts us in assessing the recent address delivered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] is that the remarks made about the U–2 were not so much the report of the committee as they were the speech of the Senator from Arkansas, because it was not in the report, but in the Senator's speech that it was said:

> The prestige of our country among the nations has reached a new low.

Then he said:

> We have not yet seen the last of the results of the bumbling and fumbling of the U.S. Government during the first 2 weeks of May 1960.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, upon which the criticisms of the Senator from Arkansas were based, itself conceded:

> What the committee is concerned with respecting the U–2 program is not the propriety, desirability, or necessity of such operations, but the lessons, if any, which can be drawn from the failure of the May 1 flight and related events.

The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is more than a Senator. In view of the authority of the committee and the authority of the Senate in foreign affairs, which is so very great, he is for all practical purposes a constitutional officer in foreign affairs, so far as the world is concerned. That is what made his statement about the prestige of our country so serious.

What we need to avoid, in the face of such a serious statement by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is use of the words "panic" and "guilt," as was stated in an editorial published in the New York Herald Tribune of June 30, 1960. We need also to avoid, as the Senator from Arkansas truly said "wishful thinking or partisan bickering."

I should like to address my attention to the lessons we must learn from what has occurred. Certainly we do not want to be defeatists or torn by doubts as to our own capacity to utilize these lessons successfully and effectively.

I believe that if the Senator from Arkansas reread his remarks, he might very well find in them a coloration which would tend to tear us with doubts and to make us pessimistic about our situation, far more than is deserved.

In this respect, I point out that the subcommittee on which I serve, the Subcommittee on National Policy Machinery, the chairman of which is the Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON], is now examining in great depth the adequacy of our governmental machinery to deal with emergencies which are inevitable in a cold war. This is one lesson we have learned. We must certainly find a way to coordinate our governmental machinery.

Whatever may be the partisan disagreements, there ought to be agreement, in effect, that in respect to the U–2 incident, the summit blow-up, and the recall of the invitation of the President to visit Japan, there was much bad luck, too. That is an important lesson to learn, because we must be prepared for emergencies.

The total, overall record of this administration in foreign affairs is, on the whole, a good one. We should not lose sight of that fact. The basic achievements of U.S. foreign policy since 1952, as formulated and executed by the Republican administration, with bipartisan support, has been the containment of the Soviet threat in such a manner as to minimize the territorial losses to Communist subversion and aggression, and to turn the struggle into spheres of economic and scientific competition.

The free world has been strengthened economically and militarily, and a monumental cooperative effort in trade and aid on the part of the industrial nations, known by the name of the Dillon plan, is now in contemplation. It could, if we espouse it affirmatively enough, decide the economic struggle decisively in favor of freedom within the decade of the sixties.

What are some of the other events which have happened during this administration? First, the stalemated war in Korea was ended. Just as our colleagues endeavor to charge responsibility to the administration for bad luck, they are entitled to claim credit for what is good in that administration.

Second, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization—SEATO—was formed, grouping Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand, Great Britain, France, and the United States.

The accession of the Federal Republic of Germany to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was accomplished.

The Austrian state treaty, by which Austria was reestablished as an independent state, and the forces of the allied powers and the Soviet Union were evacuated from its borders, was consummated.

The Eisenhower doctrine for the Middle East was ratified by Congress, and Lebanon, an anchor in the Middle Eastern position, was saved from Communist subversion.

The oil controversy in Iran was settled, thus avoiding a threatened Communist subversion of that country, too.

Also, proposing and getting approved the international pool for the use of atomic energy resources for peace, resulting in a treaty to which 79 other nations adhere in the International Atomic Energy Agency; settling the Italian-Yugoslav quarrel over Trieste; developing the new concept of a Development Loan Fund for economic aid as proposed by the late Secretary Dulles; taking the initiative in organizing and obtaining U.S. adherence to the Inter-American Development Bank, and doubling the resources of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund; taking the initiative in organizing the International Finance Corporation and in the International Development Authority—and we have just taken the initiative in approving the International Development Authority—for the making of soft currency loans for economic aid to less developed areas. These are but the highlights. They are an impressive and, in fact, an historic effort and record of this administration.

As to the recent events, neither Pakistan nor Norway, which were threatened by Chairman Khrushchev as a result of the U–2 incident, has withdrawn from its alliance with us, or shows any signs of doing so. If anything, our NATO partners have tightened their alliance with us. The United States-Japanese mutual defense agreement has been consummated.

Mr. President, on this score I should like to place in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a news article from Tokyo, dated July 1. It reads as follows:

> RUSSIA IS ACCUSED OF "SLANDERS" AGAINST THE UNITED STATES—SOVIET UNION TOLD OFF IN BLUNT NOTE BY JAPAN
> TOYKO, July 1.—Japan today handed Russia a bristling note, bluntly telling the Soviet Union to keep its nose out of Japanese affairs. Foreign Minister Aiichiro Fujiyama called in Soviet Ambassador Nicolai Fedorenko and flatly rejected Russia's three protests against the new United States-Japan Security Treaty and basing of U–2 spy planes in Japan.
> The Japanese note assailed the Russian protests as "dogmatic views," "slanderous," "willful misinterpretation," "intentional propagnada," and "utterly groundless."
> It was a highly unusual exhibition of diplomatic anger for the Japanese whose traditional politeness usually carries over into international affairs.
> STILL FOR WEST
> It was also the strongest Japanese reaction against the Communist camp since the recent antitreaty demonstrations which forced cancellation of President Eisenhower's visit—a dramatic reaffirmation that Japan, regardless of leftist influences, is still firmly on the side of the West, particularly the United States.
> Russia's protests, the note said, are "nothing but undue interference in the domestic affairs of Japan."
> The Japanese Government critical of the Soviet Union in strong terms for suggesting Japan become a neutral and made strong references, although the nations were not named, to Hungary, Poland and Yugoslavia.
> VIEW ON NEUTRALS
> "The Soviet Government has on several occasions advised the Japanese Government to do away with foreign military bases and to adopt a so-called neutral policy," the note said.
> "But it is still fresh in our memory that the Soviet Union denounced certain countries in its own camp when they sought to take an independent, neutral policy, or forced them to give up such plans by oppressive measures."
> Japan took strong exceptions to Russia's accusations that the three U–2's stationed here are used for spying. It also told Russia it was Japan's business whether Japan should accept the U.S. word that the planes were not used to spy on the Soviet Union and Communist China.
> "The Japanese Government," the note said, "desires to emphasize that it does not regard the guarantee given by the United States as being worthless, as the Soviet Government alleges."
> A FEW POINTERS
> The Japanese note, even more unusual in its great length—nearly 2,500 words—said:
> Japan's foreign policy basically is a policy of peace.
> U.S. facilities in Japan have decreased and the Soviet fears of their danger are unfounded.
> Japan will not allow the United States to bring in nuclear weapons.
> If Russia believes Japan-based U.S. forces may take aggressive action against a third nation, this is nothing but a willful misinterpretation.

In short, Mr. President, Japan was not frightened or taken in by Khrushchev's theatrics.

Indeed, even Chairman Khrushchev knows that things are not quite as bad as he would like them to be at this point, because he shows no signs of signing a separate peace treaty with East Germany or putting further pressure on Berlin—two positions which he would certainly be expected to exploit right now if he agreed that the prestige of our country among nations has reached a new low.

Two things appear to me clearly from the situation we are in now: first, the urgent need for a more integrated strategic direction of the cold war, requiring the establishment of adequate machinery to coordinate our strategic effort—which the committee on which I serve is at work on—and, second, the possibilities for closer and better alliances in the free world opened up for us by Chairman Khrushchev's intemperance and threats. It is the latter which is so important.

Assuming that as of today the channels of communication with the Communist bloc are blockaded, as evidenced by the walkout of the Soviet delegation from the disarmament conference in Geneva, the Bucharest agreement by the Communists, and the increased importance of the Chinese Communist regime in Communist affairs—assuming, therefore, that our channels of communication with them are temporarily blocked—we nonetheless have the right to believe that, so far as the peoples of the Communist bloc are concerned, they are taking with a grain of salt the charges of their leaders that the U–2 incident means our word cannot be trusted. As to the American people and the people of our free world allies, are we not entitled to suggest that—regardless of whether they would or would not have brazened out the U–2 incident without letting the President assume the responsibility for it—the President is entitled to the benefit of the understanding that this is a new day, with a new kind of diplomacy and a new kind of sophistication on the part of mankind? Might it not have been worse to present a picture of obvious irresponsibility, by denying the responsibility, while all knew it existed, rather than honestly accepting it and showing that the U–2 was attributable to the scourge of danger imposed by the Communist regimes upon the world?

Why, also, do we not have the right to consider the tremendous damage to the pious peace protestations of Chairman Khrushchev which have resulted from this situation, thereby very considerably damaging the Communist prestige, and lessening the damage, if any, to our own, for certainly the world now knows that Chairman Khrushchev wants to keep it on the anxious seat, rather than to ease its tensions? The rocket-rattling threats against Norway and Pakistan—so reminiscent of the same threats against the United Kingdom, France, and Israel at the time of the Suez incident in 1956—are hardly compatible with a desire to bring peace and confidence to the world. The incident again recalls vividly the unwillingness of the Communists to accept proposals such as President Eisenhower's open-skies plan, or to abandon secrecy and insure the world against surprise attack, as contrasted with our own willingness to accept international inspection and control toward that end. And why does not this situation highlight the capability of one man in the Communist dictatorship, like Chairman Khrushchev, by a sudden decision to plunge the world into an abyss of atomic war? Why, also, are not adult people reminded constantly and vividly by the U–2 of the spy networks which the U.S.S.R. has operated for 40 years in the free world and the names of Klaus Fuchs, Ponte-Corvo, Igor Gouzenko, Gerhardt Eisler, and Colonel Abel? There are also reports of U.S.S.R. aerial reconnaissance over free-world areas, including the United States, but we have not put on a propaganda show about it. Why, too, do we not have a right to assume that the Russian people themselves must now take careful account of what the Communist regime means to peace, and of the dreadful dangers it has imposed upon the world?

On the other hand, the great opportunity for us is in giving us a period in which, failing negotiations with the Russians, we can turn our attention to the integration and strengthening of the free world. The greatest capabilities for decisive success in the cold war are within reach for us in this way, for the Communist calculations are based upon disrupting or dividing the free world or overtaking it. But if it were neither divided nor disrupted, and if it can capture the full potential of its own development, it is already so far ahead of the Communist bloc in educational, economic, social, and cultural development as to leave the Communist bloc far behind, no matter how fast it runs.

It is interesting that we debate this subject today at the same time that there is being issued a most important and interesting study by the CIA, in cooperation with the State and Defense Departments, made at my request. It is entitled "Comparison of the United States and Soviet Economies: Supplemental Statement on Costs and Benefits to the Soviet Union of Its Bloc and Pact System; Comparisons with the Western Alliance System." It shows that: "On balance, it is felt that the Western Powers gain more from their alliances than the Soviet bloc does from its bloc and pact system." We get a larger defense contribution, more loyalty and common purpose, the greater aggregate gross national product and greater trade integration, whereas the Soviet Union relies on coercion and threats of force, and gets an unreliable defense contribution, and moves toward an authoritative and closed world, rather than an open world. We have—and again I quote the report:

> The sovereign realization that the Soviet gains result in a total bloc power position which presents the free world with a serious challenge.

Our gains in our alliances are so great that our course of action now is to concentrate upon the greater integration of our free world alliances. This is clear and unmistakable as the No. 1 lesson from the U–2 incident and its sequel, and as the No. 1 opportunity of this interregnum in negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The free world effort can now very well be directed to a massive effort to aid the less developed areas; to improve technical, professional, educational, cultural, sports, and other exchanges; to deal with extreme fluctuations in primary commodity prices; to develop broader and more prosperous internal markets, through establishing more common market and free trade areas. We are offered close association with the leading European industrial nations in the new Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the 20-nation group now in formation. There are tremendous opportunities in the development of oversea private investment through tax concessions, guarantees, investment codes and world development corporations. There are tremendous opportunities in educational exchange—for example, in helping the newly established nations of Africa south of the Sahara to train personnel for public administration and other operations of statehood.

The free world has great problems to solve—for example, in breaking economic blockades, such as that by the United Arab Republic of Suez; in sustaining the rule of international law through the greater development of the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice and the repeal of the Connally reservation in this country; and in ending apartheid in South Africa and violations of civil rights in the United States. The free world has an opportunity to back President de Gaulle in his efforts to settle the struggle in Algeria. Success in those efforts would, for the free world, be so overwhelming in its effect as completely to overshadow several U–2 incidents.

Finally—and I close upon this note—the free world has greater opportunities in developing the United Nations; yes, even in the disarmament field through cultivating the best possible relationships with the new nations which are becoming and will become members and within the next decade completely change the balance of voting in the General Assembly as it exists now. In all of these activities, the free world need not and should not exclude the Communist bloc, but it should utilize this opportunity of a probable interregnum in the effort to come to closer accord with the Communist bloc to more effectively unite itself and marshal its own resources for the peace struggle.

Whatever may be the storm of the moment, observers believe that it will gradually subside and that something resembling what the Communists call "peaceful competition" or "competitive coexistence" may develop, but this time we hope with far fewer illusions about the desirability of a relaxation in tensions as an end in itself and with better understanding of the fact that peaceful competition means the most intensive kind of struggle on every level.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I commend the Senator from New York for addressing himself to the lessons we can learn from the U–2 incident. I hope I may be able to speak on this subject in my own time at a later date. Just now, I want to commend the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin for his forthright speech this afternoon. He has performed an invaluable service, by making it clear that the President has been carrying out his highest responsibility—the responsibility of securing this country and our freedom.

None of us would want to impugn the patriotism or the motives of any of our colleagues as they have been led to form their judgments and analyses of the U–2 flights. On the other hand, we have a right to question the analyses they make of the incident.

I am not a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, but as the U–2 failure on May 1, and the events that have followed raised grave questions, I considered it my responsibility to attend the hearings of the committee when it conducted its inquiry into the U–2 incident and its relationship to the breakdown of the summit conference in Paris. I know a great effort was made to present the facts, as the committee saw them, in an impartial way. I have read the report. I must say, however, I had the feeling, in accord with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin as I read the report that it gave greater emphasis to ancillary issues—the question of the timing of the May 1 flight and the statements made after the flight, pertinent as they are—than to the vital question of the necessity of the flights themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin, 15 minutes, have expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield another 5 minutes.

Mr. WILEY. Not at this time. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] asked me to yield to him.

I have been informed my time was up at 2:25 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correctly informed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Kentucky such time as he may desire.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for 1 minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to yield if my time is extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has been yielded 1 additional minute.

Mr. COOPER. To me the central issue is whether the system of flights was necessary for the security of the Nation. After hearing the testimony of the witnesses who came before the committee, and seeing the photographs obtained by U–2, it is my firm conviction that the flights were essential to protect our country against a surprise attack.

The President acted correctly in approving the system of flights, and discharged his highest responsibility to protect our country. Timing is not the basic issue. If a flight had failed 1 week, or 2 weeks or 3 weeks or 6 months before the conference had failed, the same principle would have been involved—that of flying over Soviet Russia—and it is reasonable to believe that the Kremlin would have reacted exactly as it did in May.

If we have lost prestige as a result of the U–2 flights, it was a question of prestige or security and we cannot have both sides of the question. If the Congress and committee believes the flights were necessary, and the committee so reported, they must accept any temporary loss of prestige.

I say again I believe the President was correct in his judgment to approve the flights. Furthermore, after the U–2 had been brought down, even if the statements that were made had been better managed, I say it would not have been consistent with the character of the President, and he would have derogated himself before the world, if he had lied about it. He told the truth. Will we condemn the President of the United States for telling the truth?

His honesty reflected his character and the best values of our country. His truth did not lose prestige for our country.

The fact is that the situation between the Soviet Union and the free countries has not changed. These events have only made clearer the purpose of the Communists, and I think that they demand of us greater efforts to reach solutions, greater efforts to strengthen our defenses, and greater efforts to maintain our freedom.

I make only one suggestion. I believe it is imperative that the President make clear to the world that he is ready at any time to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union in an effort to reach solutions of the problems which threaten the world with war.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President——

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague from Kentucky and my colleague from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WILEY. Ten minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin yields 10 minutes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Wisconsin for the forthright and definitive speech which he has made here in the Senate today in connection with the report on the U–2 incident. Along with the Senator from Wisconsin, I am a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. We worked at some considerable length not only on the hearings, but the report which eventuated as a result. The one unfortunate thing about the report and the news that was released about it is that an objective reading of the report itself did not in any way warrant the interpretations which were put on the report in the news stories which came out over the wires and other places. I think anyone who will read the report as it came from the committee will agree it is quite a factual review of the circumstances, and contains some conclusions which were not violent criticisms, in any way, shape, or form, of the incident.

Unfortunately, one or two statements were taken out of context from the report, and they were blazoned across the country as severe criticisms of the U–2 incident. I call attention to a section of the report in the light of what was said about it by so many interpretative stories. The story came out that the report stated the U–2 flight should not have been made on May 1. The report did not say that at all. The report said that in looking back—those are the words in the report—if one accepts the conclusion that the failure of the mission furnished an excuse for Khrushchev's wrecking of the summit conference, then in the absence of compelling reasons to the contrary, there is good reason to conclude that the flights should not have gone on.

Two qualifications are stated. Hindsight is the first. The necessity of one accepting a certain conclusion which the committee did not necessarily accept is the second. That was taken as a positive statement.

All through the report, as I say, run the factual recitations of what happened. There is criticism in the report about the way the original news releases were handled. I agree that criticism should be directed at that point.

The thing which was not mentioned to any extent at all in the reporting all over the country of this finding of the committee was the extremely concise and very clear statement written by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. No space whatsoever, with the exception of perhaps some excerpts from a paragraph or two taken out of context, was given to that very clear statement, which could, in my opinion, well have been the complete report of the committee.

Mr. President, I shall take the time to read that statement to the Senate. The statement is by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. Four of us joined in approving the statement. We also joined in the general report of the committee, because we saw no particular incompatibility between the report and the statement developed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The statement is as follows:

These are the judgments that we have reached on the basis of the testimony presented to the committee:

1. The Congress of the United States has appropriated for a number of years the moneys that were needed for the development and operation of planes capable of reaching high altitudes and gathering information required as a guide for the evolvement in our country of defenses for national security. The Members of the Congress who have been responsible for reviewing the details of our intelligence-gathering activities knew of these flights and approved of them.

2. The U–2's have been operating successfully for a period of 4 years, and during that time have obtained information indispensable to the preparation of an adequate national defense. Without the information acquired by the U–2 operations, the present military posture of the United States would be less capable of meeting the Soviet military power.

3. When Premier Khrushchev left Moscow on Saturday, May 14, instead of Sunday, May 15, his previously declared date of departure, he had already decided not to participate in the conference. This decision was based on his conviction that the Allied Powers could not be divided at the summit, and that because of allied unity he would not be able to accomplish his objectives at the conference.

Thus, while the U–2 incident gave him an excuse for wrecking the conference, it was not the cause why he chose to do so. At the time of his departure from Moscow on May 14, he carried with him as a precondition to the Soviet's participation in the meeting, an ultimatum to be made upon the President of the United States which he knew the President could not accept.

4. The Soviet Union has the largest espionage organization of any nation in the world and possibly the largest in history. The activities of this organization which are carried on in this country and elsewhere were not suspended on May 1 or at any period preceding the summit meeting.

5. Those who launched the May 1 flight knew that these flights had a previous record for almost 4 years of unbroken success and they had no reason to assume that this flight would be any different from its predecessors. They were aware that there was almost always a diplomatic reason for not sending flights at a particular time and that if these reasons were made overriding, it would be difficult to find any time when such flights could be sent. They knew of the enormous value to the national security of these flights. These were the facts which had to be taken into account in deciding whether or not the flight should be launched.

Of course, if the failure of the May 1 flight could have been expected and foreseen, then the flight should not have been dispatched. This would hold true, too, for all the previous flights. But the fact is that when the May 1 flight started on its journey, every past experience justified the conclusion that it would not fail.

With the benefit of hindsight, no criticisms have been made against the flights which did not fail, but only against the May 1 flight. Bad luck not bad judgment was the true cause of the May 1 incident.

6. The May 1 flight having failed, representatives of the State Department, Defense Department, and NASA neglected to sufficiently coordinate the information which they gave to the public respecting the mission.

7. Conditions following the May 1 flight having developed as they did, it was unavoidable for the President to make a statement with regard to it. If he had to make a statement, he had to state the truth. Moreover, if he had not told the truth by avoiding personal responsibility, the four demands Khrushchev made upon him in Paris would not have been altered.

8. The gathering of intelligence has been practiced by nations from time immemorial and though it is an unsavory and hateful occupation, its omission would come fairly close to constituting criminal negligence in the responsibility of a nation to provide for its common defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. May I have 5 more minutes?

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy to yield 5 more minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has only 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have concluded the reading of the statement by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], which was approved by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], and by me. The last four Senators named also joined in the report of the committee.

There is very little, if anything, which is incompatible as between the report of the committee and the statement by the two Senators, except that the statement I have read is concise, clear, and to the point.

Mr. President, I deplore the fact that in a time of tension such as this we find raised in our country the voices of those who would constantly disparage the United States, our motives, our policies, and our methods of operation. It does the United States a disservice internally, but it also does us immeasurable harm abroad in certain countries which are on the fence, perhaps, so far as their opinions as to allegiances and orientation are concerned. It is too bad, and it is unfortunate, that the very destinies of U.S. policy should be treated lightly on an occasion of this kind. Rather should we stand with one voice and commend the CIA for taking responsibility for finding out what are the programs and plans of Russian military development. Rather should we stand and commend the CIA for securing this information so that our military posture can be one which will contribute to our security.

Abraham Lincoln once said that he had no fear of the destruction of the United States by forces from without; that if this country were ever destroyed it would be destroyed by forces from within our country.

I, for one, think we should be very careful as to how we use, for whatever purpose, criticism which I think is unjustifiable and which in turn does a disservice to this country at home and abroad.

I hope—and I am confident—that the people of the country appreciate what was done in the whole U–2 program. That program has been the most successful espionage operation, so far as I know, which has ever been conducted by a country. It is an operation which has given us insight pictorially and otherwise into the military preparations and programs inside Russia itself, which no other country has been able to obtain.

I think that we should be commended for the vigor and the determination to do that job, and I hope we will continue to appreciate the job that has been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER]. Does the Senator from Iowa recall that in the committee mention was made of appending the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and myself as conclusions to the report, and the request was voted down?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am sorry to say, no. In answer to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, I made the motion myself, and it is my understanding it was carried. That is why it is in the report.

Mr. WILEY. I am glad to hear the Senator from Iowa make that statement, because, while we shall not argue the point, in the committee the statement came out and I suggested that it be made a conclusion. These are really minority views which were approved.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That is true.

Mr. WILEY. They were approved by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The Senator from Iowa does not remember that. I wish to read into the RECORD the statement of those four Senators:

> We joined in approving the committee report, which is a result of composite committee views. We have read the views of Senator FRANK J. LAUSCHE, and Senator ALEXANDER WILEY, above, and believe that overall they state concisely and succinctly reasonable and proper conclusions on the U–2 incident, and we express our general approval of their statement in connection with the entire report.

I invite the attention of the Senator at this time to the fact that my discussion today did not relate to the report. It related to the remarks that were made by the chairman at the time he introduced the report. If at that time he had followed the regular procedure, he could have done it very smoothly, and there probably would have been no subsequent discussion. I agree with the statement of the distinguished Senator from Iowa that after working over the conclusion, a great deal of the original text was reduced and cut out. There was not a great deal of discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. WILEY. In conclusion, if we had been successful in having the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and myself appended to the report as conclusions, we would all have been satisfied, because the conclusions state, as the Senator from Iowa said, the meat and the substance. But our request as to the conclusions in relation to the whole affair was turned down, and so we filed minority views. The other Senators mentioned agreed with the minority and with the majority. Then what happened? When the report was filed, the statements that we have been discussing today, to which I and other Senators have taken exception, went out over the air. Yet there was nothing in the report, as outlined in my speech, that contained those particular statements.

Mr. President, I conclude at this time. I am very grateful to Senators who have participated in the discussion. I feel that the record is made, and if anyone wants to know the speech about which I am talking, he can refer to the RECORD of June 28, at which time the distinguished chairman of the committee introduced the committee report.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

PORT AUTHORITY OF NEW YORK—CONTEMPT CITATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, yesterday the House Judiciary Committee recommended to the House that S. Sloan Colt, chairman of the Port of New York Authority; Austin J. Tobin, executive director; and Joseph G. Carty, secretary, be cited for contempt of Congress in that they failed to produce materials called for by a subpena issued by Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Judiciary Committee.

The port authority is an agency created by the States of New York and New Jersey under a bistate compact approved by the Congress in 1921.

On the return date of the subpena Messrs. Colt, Tobin, and Carty, acting in their capacity as officials of a bistate agency, produced the official documents and records responsive to the subpena, but, pursuant to instructions from the Governors of the States of New Jersey and New York, withheld the internal papers, including memorandums and daily worksheets, called for by the subpena. I am advised that the Governors' instructions were based on the advice of their respective attorneys general that there is a substantial question whether all of the documents subpenaed can constitutionally be demanded of a State agency by the House committee and that the Governors had, in fact, sought an opportunity to discuss this and other similar questions with the subcommittee.

I ask unanimous consent that the instructions from Governors Rockefeller and Meyner to the officers of that agency be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Trenton, N. J., June 25, 1960.

Hon. JAMES C. KELLOGG III,
Vice Chairman,
Port of New York Authority,

DEAR MR. KELLOGG: On June 23, 1960, as you know, Governor Rockefeller and I sent telegrams to the members of the House Judiciary Committee requesting the opportunity to meet wih the Judiciary Committee at a mutually convenient date to present for the committee's consideration our position on the grave questions of constitutional propriety arising from the subpena served upon S. Sloan Colt, the chairman, Austin J. Tobin, the executive director, and Joseph G. Carty, the secretary of the Port of New York Authority. We requested an adjournment of the subpena to permit such a presentation to the committee. We took this action because of our deep concern for the basic principles of our American form of government which reserve to the States all powers not delegated to the Federal Government.

We have sought by these means to resolve the important constitutional issues involved in a cooperative manner. The subpena at issue appeared to us and our legal advisers to constitute a novel intrusion by the Federal Government into areas reserved by the Constitution to our respective States and to constitute a precedent which could subject various agencies of State government throughout the Nation to be similarly answerable to Federal authority. As the responsible chief executives of our States we could not allow such action involving a State agency to proceed without our having an opportunity to present our objections.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee has refused our request for a meeting and has refused to adjourn the date for the return of the subpena to permit us to present our objections. Accordingly, in order to insure that these basic issues may be presented and decided in an orderly way and with full opportunity for the States to present their views on these crucial questions, I am instructing the New Jersey members of the Port of New York Authority to direct Mr. Colt, Mr. Tobin, and Mr. Carty, when they appear before the subcommittee on June 29, to renew our request for an adjournment of the return date of the subpena to permit the Governors of the respective States to present their States' views to the committee. Failing the grant of this request, due regard for the important questions of constitutional propriety and legality presented and the necessity to have these questions determined by the appropriate tribunal, constrains me to instruct the New Jersey members of the port authority to direct Mr. Colt, Mr. Tobin, and Mr. Carty, not to produce the internal memoranda, worksheets, day-to-day correspondence and other materials now requested by the subpena.

As we understand it, you have already produced the minutes of the board and committees, the reports of the agency to the Governors and the legislatures and a great volume of other documents delineating the scope of the agency's activities. Of course, similar board and committee minutes and agency reports may be supplied for any period now requested.

The furnishing of the internal records now requested, in the opinion of my legal advisers, would represent a serious infringement of the rights of the States under the Constitution and could constitute a dangerous precedent as recognition of Federal authority in an area of State responsibility.

My own purpose is to insure that these basic questions of constitutional propriety and legality will be fully considered and determined by the appropriate tribunal.

I regret any inconvenience this may cause Chairman Colt and the other officers of the port authority, but I know you share with me the desire to have these basic issues decided with due regard for the substantial matters of State concern which are involved.

Sincerely,

ROBERT B. MEYNER.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, N.Y., June 25, 1960.

Hon. S. SLOAN COLT,
Chairman, Port of New York Authority,
New York, N.Y.

DEAR MR. COLT: On June 23, 1960, as you know, Governor Meyner and I sent telegrams to the members of the House Judiciary Committee requesting the opportunity to meet with the Judiciary Committee at a mutually convenient date to present for the committee's consideration our position on the grave questions of constitutional propriety arising from the subpena served upon you, as chairman, Austin J. Tobin, the executive director, and Joseph G. Carty, the secretary of the Port of New York Authority. We requested an adjournment of the subpena to permit such a presentation to the committee. We took this action because of our deep concern for the basic principles of our American form of government which reserves to the States all powers not delegated to the Federal Government.

We have sought by these means to resolve the important constitutional issues involved in a cooperative manner. The subpena at issue appeared to us and our legal advisers to constitute a novel intrusion by the Federal Government into areas reserved by the Constitution to our respective States and to constitute a precedent which could subject various agencies of State government throughout the Nation to be similarly answerable to Federal authority. As the responsible chief executives of our States, we could not allow such action involving a State agency to proceed without our having an opportunity to present our objections.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee has refused our request for a meeting and has refused to adjourn the date for the return of the subpena to permit us to present our objections. Accordingly, in order to insure that these basic issues may be presented and decided in an orderly way and with full opportunity for the States to present their views on these crucial questions, I am instructing the New York members of the Port of New York Authority to direct you, Mr. Tobin, and Mr. Carty, when you appear before the subcommittee on June 29, to renew our request for an adjournment of the return date of the subpena to permit the Governors of the respective States to present their States' views to the committee. Failing the grant of this request, due regard for the important questions of constitutional propriety and legality presented, and the necessity to have these questions determined by the appropriate tribunal, constrains me to instruct the New York members of the Port of New York Authority to direct you, Mr. Tobin, and Mr. Carty not to produce the internal memoranda, worksheets, day-to-day correspondence, and other materials now requested by the subpena.

As we understand it, you have already produced the minutes of the board and committees, the reports of the agency to the Governors and legislatures, and a great volume of other documents delineating the scope of the agency's activities. Of course, similar board and committee minutes and agency reports may be supplied for any period now requested.

The furnishing of the internal records now requested, in the opinion of my legal advisers, would represent a serious infringement on the rights of the State under the Constitution and could constitute a dangerous precedent as recognition of Federal authority in an area of State responsibility.

My only purpose is to insure that these basic questions of constitutional propriety and legality will be fully considered and determined by the appropriate tribunal.

I regret any inconvenience this may cause you personally, but I know you share with me the desire to have these basic issues decided with due regard for the substantial matters of State concern which are involved.

Sincerely,

NELSON ROCKEFELLER.

As Governor of New York I join with Governor Meyner, of New Jersey, in requesting an opportunity at a mutually convenient date to meet with the Judiciary Committee to present for your consideration the deep concern of our respective States over the grave questions of constitutional principle arising from subcommittee five subpena of internal memoranda, work sheets, and other documents of our local port agency, the Port of New York Authority. Most serious questions of constitutional propriety are at stake, involving upon our parts the fundamental sovereignty of the States. I believe these issues of constitutional principle are so important that they should be the subject of thoughtful discussion and consideration between the members of the Judiciary Committee and the chief executives of the two States.

I join, therefore, with Governor Meyner in requesting that the return date of these subpenas be adjourned from June 29, and that a date mutually convenient to the members of the committee and the Governors be arranged to discuss the serious matters involved.

NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER.

As Governor of New Jersey I join with Governor Rockefeller, of New York, in requesting an opportunity at a mutually convenient date to meet with the Judiciary Committee to present for your consideration the deep concern of our respective States over the grave questions of constitutional principle arising from subcommittee five subpena of internal memoranda, work sheets, and other documents of our local port agency, the Port of New York Authority. Most serious questions of constitutional propriety are at stake, involving upon our parts the fundamental sovereignty of the States. I believe these issues of constitutional principle are so important that they should be the subject of thoughtful discussion and consideration between the members of the Judiciary Committee and the chief executives of the two States.

I join, therefore, with Governor Rockefeller in requesting that the return date of these subpenas be adjourned from June 29, and that a date mutually convenient to the members of the committee and the Governors be arranged to discuss the serious matters involved.

ROBERT B. MEYNER.

Mr. JAVITS. Naturally, I respect the dignity and authority of the Judiciary Committee of the other body and make this statement quite apart from the questions involved in the subpena itself, but only as those reading a report of the House Judiciary Committee's action, relating as it does to three distinguished New Yorkers, might take it out of context and read into it some reflection upon them personally. This would be most unfortunate and unwarranted.

Whatever may be the outcome of the legal and constitutional issues involved in the subpena and the response to it of Mr. Colt and his colleagues, it should be made clear that it does not involve any question bearing on their morality or criminal wrongdoing, as that term is understood generally rather than professionally. I do not feel that there is involved any contumacious disregard for the authority of the House of Representatives, for law or for orderly procedures on the part of these three individuals, as distinguished from a legal contempt. Indeed, Chairman CELLER, of the House Judiciary Committee, himself assures us there is nothing personal involved. It is for this reason that I wish to note upon the record the reputation and standing of the three individuals concerned so that it is clear that there should be no reflection on their character and integrity, as in each case they have shown a lifelong dedication to the public welfare. Indeed, it is quite extraordinary that Mr. Colt should be in this position of being charged with contempt, as he could easily have resigned as an official before the subpena was served, but chose rather to practice the principle of standing up to his responsibility, no matter how onerous or embarrassing a position resulted.

Mr. Colt has had a distinguished career in public service, civic work, and in the business world. He has served the State of New York as a commissioner of the port authority without salary for more than 14 years and as its chairman for the last year. He also serves the State of New York as a member of the temporary State commission on economic expansion. He served the Federal Government as a member of the Clay Committee on Federal Highway Aid and as a Director of the Federal Reserve Bank. He has been a national chairman of the American Red Cross war fund, a director of the Metropolitan Opera and of the American Museum of Natural History. Mr. Colt's career includes service in the U.S. Army during World War I, when he enlisted as a corporal and rose to the rank of major. For 27 years he was chief executive officer of the Bankers Trust Co. in New York and is presently a director and member of the bank's executive committee. The French Government honored him in 1949 by bestowing upon him the Order of the Legion of Honor—Chevalier. New York University conferred the honorary degree of doctor of commercial science on Mr. Colt in 1950 and Colgate University conferred the honorary degree of doctor of laws upon him in 1946.

Mr. Tobin has been in public service for 33 years, rising from the position of law clerk in the port authority law department in 1927 to his present position of executive director, which he has held since 1942. He has been port consultant to the Royal Government of Thailand, is presently a member of the advisory council of the department of politics of Princeton University, and just recently returned from Israel, where, on behalf of the World Bank, he reviewed and evaluated Israel's plan for organizing and effectuating a gigantic port development program. In 1957 Adelphi University conferred the honorary degree of doctor of laws on Mr. Tobin and the French Government also in 1957 bestowed the Order of Legion of Honor—Chevalier. On at least three occasions in recent memory the New York metropolitan press has acclaimed Mr. Tobin's significant contributions to public service.

Mr. Carty has been a member of the port authority staff since 1930, rising from his first position as paymaster to personnel director in 1934 and to this present position of secretary in 1946. Mr. Carty served in the U.S. Navy during World War I for a period of 2 years. He has been active in the leadership of the American Legion on local, State, and National echelons for the last 40 years. He presently serves by appointment of the incumbent national commander as a member of the Legion's national legislation commission; he was New Jersey State commander in 1944 and he has served on the Legion's national public relations commission. In 1949 he was appointed by Governor Driscoll, of New Jersey, to a commission to investigate communistic and un-American teachings and activities in the public schools and universities of the State of New Jersey. His other governmental service includes his present membership on the New Jersey State Veterans' Service Council, which is concerned with the welfare of veterans in the State of New Jersey.

Here are three fine Americans who have contributed much in a civic and community sense. Against their backgrounds of public service, it is not difficult to understand that they complied with the instructions of their Governors, notwithstanding that the course of obedience presented personal risks in their dealings with the Congress. Many great Americans before them have assumed personal risks in upholding the authority and prerogatives of the Government for which they acted. Men of the caliber and ability of Messrs. Colt, Tobin, and Carty must be convinced that they are acting in the best interests of their public service if they continue to pursue this difficult course. I would hope that this proceeding, or future proceedings like it, will not have the effect of deterring such men from rendering able public service, whether it be in local, State, or National Government.

Should the contempt proceedings go forward, we must keep uppermost in mind the role of these men as defenders of their view, and that of their Governors, with respect to proper Federal-State relationships, rather than their technical status as defendants in a penal proceeding.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. KEATING. It is appropriate that my distinguished colleague from New York has called attention to the background of these fine, upstanding men, all leaders in the community, who have hanging over them now the charge of being in contempt of Congress.

Mr. President, on Friday night I addressed the Senate with regard to the investigation of the New York Port Authority by the subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary. At that time I expressed my opinion that the request of Governor Rockefeller and Governor Meyner to meet with the subcommittee prior to the return date of a subpena, the validity of which was in question, was eminently reasonable and should have been welcomed by all concerned.

I am conscious of the necessity of remaining entirely within parliamentary bounds in my remarks, and I shall try not to depart from that course. However, I believe that the refusal of the chairman of the subcommittee to grant this request has now precipitated a clash between the Congress and the States of New York and New Jersey which might have been entirely avoided if the requested conference had been held.

Governor Rockefeller and Governor Meyner had no choice, in view of the chairman's decision, but to direct their respective representatives on the New York Port Authority to refuse to produce the disputed documents. We must not forget that we are dealing with two sovereign States. Every effort should have been made and every possibility of reconciliation should have been exhausted before this jurisdictional clash was allowed to occur.

A court battle is apparently now inevitable. Dedicated State officials, acting under the direction of their respective Governors, apparently are going to be charged with contempt as the result of the chairman's refusal to grant a reasonable opportunity for discussion of the issues involved.

I do not impugn the motives of any of the parties concerned; however, it is obvious that an extremely undersirable situation has now been created which will not inure to anyone's benefit and which will probably be to the detriment of all.

ADJUSTING THE RATES OF BASIC COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9883) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the time agreed upon for debate on the veto message began approximately at 2:30 p.m. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At 12:25.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DODD in the chair). The Senator from Texas has 110 minutes remaining, and the Senator from Illinois has 115 minutes remaining.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I have supported pay increases in the past for postal workers and civil service employees, and I will support pay increases when I am convinced that they are justified and earned.

Proper pay for work is certainly a responsibility of every employer. I know this because I have been in business most of my adult life. One of the first responsibilities of any man in business is his responsibility to those with whom he works. Here we have a question of who is the employer. Is it the Government? If we recognize that it is the Government, then it is the people. And the people of the United States have the responsibility in this matter. I might suggest that they also have a very keen and deep interest in it.

I cannot bring myself to agreement with the bill as it was vetoed by the President, and I must therefore vote to sustain the President's veto of the measure.

I should like to explain a little in detail, if I may, some of the factors which have entered into this decision.

The steady and full employment of the postal worker provides in effect a guaranteed annual wage, a still unfulfilled dream among workers in private industry. Other pace-setting benefits of postal employees include a guarantee of 8 paid holidays per year, 3 to 5 weeks of vacation leave each year, and 13 days' credit each year for sick leave absence at full pay, leave which may be accumulated indefinitely if unused. In sum, the enviable package of fringe benefits and extras enjoyed by postal employees adds 30.9 percent to base salary costs for time worked.

H.R. 9883 was the bill recently rushed through both Houses of the Congress without the opportunity for careful deliberation and analysis and under the erroneous label of a 7½-percent pay increase measure.

This bill provides an average 8.35-percent pay raise for 550,000 postal workers, effective July 1, 1960, at an annual cost of $248 million.

It will raise the hiring rate for postal clerks and letter carriers from $2 to $2.15½ an hour, it will raise the average pay rate of regular clerks and carriers from $2.31½ to $2.49½—18 cents an hour—and it will raise the maximum hourly rate of clerks and carriers by 21 cents, from $2.49 to $2.70.

By contrast, 12½ million factory production workers in this Nation receive an average straight-time pay rate of $2.22 an hour, or nearly 10 cents an hour less than the present average hourly pay of post office clerks and letter carriers.

How does this 15½ to 21 cents an hour immediate increase for postal workers compare in size with recent industrial wage settlements?

Within the last few weeks a 4-percent pay increase was awarded to railroad engineers in a binding award of a six-man arbitration panel. This award will add an average 11.3 cents an hour in two steps over a 17-month period.

A Presidential emergency board in the wage dispute between railroads and some 600,000 off-train workers has just recommended a 5-cent-per-hour pay increase effective this July 1, and some fringe concessions in lieu of an increase in 1961.

The steel agreement provided for wage rate increases averaging 9.4 cents per hour effective next December 1, and 8.6 cents per hour on October 1, 1961, in addition to liberalized insurance benefits. The only increase in take-home pay prior to next December 1 has amounted to about 6½ cents an hour, representing employee contributions for insurance now assumed by the companies.

The January 1960 Economic Report of the President states that the average wage increase in 1959 was about 9 cents an hour.

The Bureau of National Affairs reports that the median increase granted in all industries during the first quarter of 1960 was 8.2 cents an hour. Settlements for the communications industry were at 4.3 cents an hour.

It is obvious, therefore, that the increases provided postal workers in H.R. 9883 are not only unjustified in relation to the present pay rates of millions of production workers in this country, but also wholly out of line with the size of the increases currently being granted in industry.

In addition, H.R. 9883 would apply these increases with the utmost inequity, in flagrant violation of the principle of equal pay for equal work, higher pay for the more responsible work—a principle which constitutes the cornerstone of the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955. While the supervisory and managerial employees would receive increases of 7½ percent, employees in the upper steps of the lower salary levels—mail handlers, clerks, carriers, and so forth—occupying the less responsible jobs, would receive increases ranging from 8.4 percent to 8.8 percent.

Apart from the basic inequity of such a wage distribution, this produces a most dangerous compression in percentage difference between salary level 6 and salary level 7, the first level of supervision. The present difference between the top steps of those levels is only 8.29 percent whereas the corresponding differential in industry is generally about 10 percent. H.R. 9883 would reduce this already narrow differential to 7.55 percent. Obviously, the incentive for advancement would be materially reduced.

In view of this bill's wholly unjustified discrimination in pay treatment among postal employees, and its complete lack of merit in relation to industry wages and wage settlements, it is evident that this expenditure of $248 million a year in public funds for the Post Office Department alone represents the height of fiscal irresponsibility. Added to the already anticipated postal deficit of $603 million for fiscal 1961, it will produce a deficit of more than $850 million to be borne by the taxpayers of this country, many millions of whom would consider themselves fortunate to receive the postal worker's present base pay, fringe benefits, and continuity of employment.

So that I shall not detain the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in my remarks a list of 14 additional benefits which have accrued to postal workers under the Republican administration.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL BENEFITS ACCRUING TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES UNDER THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION, JUNE 22, 1960

1. Direct pay increases totalling approximately 20 percent, for a first-year cost of $436,831,000.

2. Greatly liberalized retirement benefits, with an added first-year cost of $10,538,000.

3. Group life insurance, at a first-year cost of $7,103,000.

4. Group health insurance, with an estimated first-year cost of $37,963,000.

5. Executive order holiday benefits for rural carriers, and Saturday holiday benefits which guarantee each employee 8 paid holidays per year, with first-year costs of $4,433,000.

6. Additional equipment allowances for rural carriers, with first-year costs of $6,800,000.

7. Increased travel allowances, with first-year costs of $4,100,000.

8. Tax-free uniform allowances of up to $100 per uniformed employee each year, with first-year costs of $13,600,000.

9. Biweekly pay periods, providing 1 extra day's pay per year, with a first-year cost of $6,700,000.

10. Military leave for substitute employees, at a first-year cost of $2,800,000.

11. Longevity pay for substitute employees, at a first-year cost of $765,000.

12. Unemployment compensation, with an estimated first-year cost to the Federal Government, attributable to postal employment, of $7,200,000.

13. Free fidelity bonds at an estimated annual savings to postal employees of $776,280 and a cost to the Department of $190,000.

14. Social security coverage extended to temporary employees, at a first-year cost of $5,300,000.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, there is one thing I wish to make clear. I feel that the postal service is the responsibility of the Government; that we are charged with that responsibility in the Constitution. Therefore, I am not one who is so wedded to the idea that the Post Office should, in effect, pay its way. I think we should make every possible effort to hold its costs down to a relative position. However, that is not my reason for opposing this particular pay raise in both the postal area and the area of civil service employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I do not believe that the decision to grant these increases was made after careful consideration. I charge again that it was because this is a political year. In every political year, or in every election year, since I have been a Member of the Senate, a proposal has been made to raise the pay of the employees of the Government. I charge that this is simply a double-barrelled political attempt. I have been hoping, ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, that the committees which are in charge of this matter, in both Houses of Congress, would apply themselves to developing a proper wage system for postal employees. If the Government employees get the raises proposed in the bill, then just as surely as we are here today, in 2 years they will come in again, because the wages at that time will not equal, in their estimation, what they should be earning.

I have pleaded with the postal workers in my State to try to have something constructive done in this field, so that we would not have this constant approaching of the Government, particularly Congress, in an election year.

The bill before us, as I understand, was not even the subject of hearings in the Senate. I understand it was passed without any witnesses having been heard. I may be wrong, but that is the information I received.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Would the Senator like to correct my statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes, siree. [Laughter.] The committee held hearings for several days.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Were the hearings held on the bill before the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The hearings covered all proposals for pay raises. Notices were sent to all persons concerned, and all who were interested testified. That was the statement I made when I opened the discussion.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Kansas clarify this matter. I do not want to have an incorrect statement coming from our side.

Mr. CARLSON. The chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina] held extended hearings on pay raises; but the particular bill which is before the Senate today was not before the committee when the hearings were held. A bill came from the House, and our committee reported that bill. During the Senate committee hearings, the committee did not have before it the language of this bill. However, we had held extensive hearings on the subject of pay raises.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We held extensive hearings on pay raises; and when we had finished, even before the House had reported its bill, a majority of our committee had reached an agreement as to what we thought we should do, and we reported the bill which was passed by the House.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina has cleared up any misunderstanding. However, my statement that this particular bill did not receive hearings in the committee still stands.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If the Senator will look on his desk, he will find the hearings.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The only hearings I have on my desk are the hearings on H.R. 10. I am sure that they are not the hearings to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. President, when we talk about pay increases, I think every factor should be carefully weighed. I do not believe it is possible, in Government employment, to measure a very important ingredient which we measure in industry, namely, productivity. It is difficult to assess the competitive position, since many persons work for the Government because they feel it is the best place in which they can give their services. To try to compare Government work with private work is very difficult, particularly in this field. Nevertheless, while it is difficult to assess competitive ability in the Government, I think we must recognize one fundamental fact, namely, that any unearned wage increase, no matter where it is, will be reflected, in industry, in higher prices; and in Government's price, which is taxes.

I know that I have been heard many times on the subject of taxes. However, I call the attention of the American people to the fact that taxation in the United States today is 31 percent of the net national income. To bring taxation back to a level of approximately 25 percent would mean cutting some $26 billion a year from the present total of $129 billion of Federal, State, and local expenditures. We shall have to recognize that that cannot be done. It is an impossible task to cut that much out of expenditures.

At the same time, we should recognize our responsibility to hold unearned pay increases down, especially when they are sought, as they have been, in election years; when it is difficult, considering the pressures which are put on this body and the other House, to resist the temptation to go along and say, "Well, all right; we will give the boys and girls a pay raise. This is an election year. Maybe they will vote for me."

I do not like that approach to solving the fiscal problems of the people who work with us.

Unearned wage increases in this country, to my mind, are doing more damage to the American economy than any other thing. Such unearned increases have created a competitive position in which European and other nations find it very favorable to ship goods to the United States, goods made by persons who have been historically paid on a basis of increased productivity. In this country, though, the tendency has been to provide across-the board increases as a result of industrywide bargaining; to provide pay increases which do not recognize the skill or the better position of one man competing against another.

I warn the Senate that a continuation of such a practice in industry and in government can result only in continued price increases and continued inflation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I have to agree with what the distinguished majority leader [Mr. JOHNSON of Texas] said last night in a debate with the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], when they were talking about another bill.

The majority leader said, as appears at page 15148 of the RECORD of June 30:

> I doubt the wisdom of granting the request of even a great man from Texas for the appropriation for an item which the committee has not heard, about which it knows nothing, which does not belong in the bill.

Mr. President, I wish we had a more careful study of this particular bill. Proof might have been offered that wage increases in one or the other, or both, of these segments of Government workers is justified. I have not been convinced of it. It is difficult for me to put myself in the position of being seemingly against the employees, because I have spent my life in a very cordial relationship with the people with whom I have worked. However, at this time I must vote to sustain the veto of the President of the United States. I hope that in the future it will be possible to take a more intelligent approach to this problem.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Mr. President, my vote was cast, somewhat reluctantly, it is true, in favor of H.R. 9883. This despite the fact that at the time is was my feeling that at least three separate legislative proposals were arbitrarily lumped together in one bill providing a pay raise for postal employees, including letter carriers, all classified civil service employees, and all employees on the payroll and staffs of Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

Of these three general groups, it was my feeling and it is my judgment that postal employees, including letter carriers, although they and these other employees received a pay increase of 10 percent in June of 1958, are the most deserving of a further increase in pay at this time.

My view is that in all probability classified civil service employees who received this substantial increase in 1958 are not entitled to this sizable 7½-percent-plus increase in pay at the present time, as proposed in this bill.

It is my considered judgment that employees in senatorial offices and in the offices of the Members of the other body are well paid in accord with the present allowance permitted to Members of the Congress.

It is true that the consumers price index has advanced 2.1 percent since June 1958. I cannot in good conscience go along with the view that the cost of living has increased 7½ percent to 9 percent since the last time a substantial pay raise was authorized for Federal employees.

It is my observation that most Government employees in Washington and elsewhere in governmental departments and agencies are and have been well paid in comparison with those doing the same work in private industry. Were I to make any exception whatever in connection with this statement, I would except postal employees, including letter carriers. They doubtless deserve some increase but not an 8.5-percent salary increase in addition to the 10 percent granted 2 years ago.

Furthermore, those who are in the classified civil service, including the postal service, have a job security which—in these days of corporate mergers, with one corporation taking over another and then enforcing economies; or, in event of a recession, with business failures and unemployment—those in private industry do not have. Nor do they have the fringe and retirement benefits which are given to all those Federal employees.

Furthermore, I know the members of senatorial staffs are not underpaid. A Senator who observes administrative assistants and committee clerks attending sessions of the Senate and lining the walls, watching the proceedings out of curiosity, and engaging in conversations with each other, to the disturbance of Senators who are desirous of hearing the proceedings, and conducting themselves generally in contrast with the conduct of the minority of staff assistants who are present in the Senate and really engaged in assisting Senators, feels that, by and large, they are not underpaid or overworked.

It appears to me that if the maximum pay increase accorded a Senator's assistant, as provided in the bill the President vetoed, becomes the law, then a topmost paid senatorial staff employee will be in a most favored financial situation, particularly since, unlike a Senator, it is not essential that he maintain a place of residence in the home State or meet the expenses that Senators are glad to undertake and do undertake at all times.

In addition, there is in the vetoed bill a provision about which I had no knowledge despite the fact I read the bill and listened to the debate preceding the time when we passed the bill. I refer to the extension of Federal retirement and health insurance benefits to employees of locally elected county stabilization and conservation committees. These employees, as I understand, are not in fact Federal employees, nor are they appointed or supervised by Federal Government officers. If such is the case, I do agree with President Eisenhower that the Federal system should apply only to Federal employees. This provision alone justifies sustaining the veto.

By and large, Government workers in all departments, including the legislative branch and the postal employees, are good people, and no doubt they are entitled to consideration for a pay raise.

I have come to have grave doubt about the present legislative proposal. This in addition to doubts I had before studying President Eisenhower's veto message. Now, having studied his message, and with the knowledge that our adjournment is for a period of only about 5 weeks, my conclusion is to vote to sustain the President's veto. If the veto is sustained, it will be a simple matter for the appropriate committee of the Senate to report proper legislative proposals for a pay increase. Then, depending on whatever pay increases are justified by the rise in the cost of living and whatever increases are justified in certain categories of employment, where it is considered that employees in the classified civil service and in the postal service are entitled to a substantial pay increase, there should be no difficulty in securing passage of such legislation in August. Any proper pay raise could be made retroactive to July 1.

May I add the thought and suggestion that first consideration should be given to the employees, including the letter carriers and others, in the postal service.

Then, separate consideration could be given to those in the classified civil service in Washington and in the various States.

Frankly, I would be less than truthful if I were to say that I felt that a salary increase of 8.5 percent is justified in this grim period when so much of the taxpayers' money must be spent for the defense of our country and to maintain our retaliatory power against dictatorship aggression.

It is unfortunate that administration officials have not come forward with a proposal for a more flexible salary system and a planned schedule of salaries and fringe benefits which would deal fairly with all Government employees who are not being grossly overpaid at the present time.

Having studied this entire matter, it is my judgment that this is not the time to indulge in self-indulgence. This is not the time to fatten the already fatty and well-larded Federal payroll. But, on the other hand, this is the time, in this grim period, to seek to meet the critical needs of the Nation.

Mr. President, I assert that after full and thorough consideration I cannot—and I say this regretfully—in good conscience do other than vote to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from North Carolina require?

Mr. ERVIN. About 10 seconds.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very well, I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement concerning House bill 9883.

I thank the Senator from Illinois for yielding to me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ERVIN

I wish to make it clear why I voted against H.R. 9883 on final passage, and why I expect to vote to uphold the President's veto of such bill.

Despite the impressions of many people to the contrary, the financial resources of the Federal Government are not unlimited. For 28 years, the Federal Government has pursued a policy of fiscal irresponsibility. This is true because the expenditures of the Federal Government have exceeded its revenues in 23 of these years. As a consequence, the national debt of the United States has risen from about $30 billion to about $290 billion. It requires more than $9 billion a year at the present time merely to pay the interest on this national debt. From the standpoint of plain principles of honesty, Congress ought not to make appropriations for increased expenditures without levying new taxes to cover the same.

One is shocked beyond measure when he contemplates the rate at which the Federal Government is expending the resources of the American taxpayers, and particularly how such rate has been stepped up during recent years. From the time of George Washington's inauguration in 1789 down to the day on which Eisenhower assumed the Presidency, the Federal Government collected from the American taxpayers revenues totaling approximately $571 billion. From the time of the inauguration of President Eisenhower down to this date, the Federal Government has collected from the American taxpayers slightly in excess of $572 billion. The Federal Government has expended all of the revenues so collected by it, and, in addition, the $290 billion constituting our present national debt.

A substantial amount is being expended by the Federal Government each year to pay Federal civilian employees. It is estimated that during the fiscal year 1961 the average Federal civilian employment will be 2,365,359 persons, and that the Federal Government will pay these persons as compensation for their services $12.8 billion even if H.R. 9883 is not enacted into law.

In my opinion, the Federal Government is now levying taxes which are confiscatory in nature. This is true because persons doing business under corporate franchises pay 52 percent of their net profits into the Federal Treasury in the form of income taxes, and individuals pay taxes upon their incomes into the Federal Treasury ranging from 20 to 91 percent of all their income above a paltry $600 exemption. Moreover, these same persons and corporations are compelled to pay substantial sums to the Federal Government in the form of excise taxes, and to State and local governments in the form of income and property taxes.

For these reasons, it is not advisable for Congress to undertake to increase the heavy burden of taxation now resting upon the backs of the American people. Moreover, the Federal Government should put an end to the disgraceful practice of deficit financing, which imposes upon our children and grandchildren the obligation of paying debts created by us. They will undoubtedly have sufficient obligations of their own.

These things being true, Congress should carefully scrutinize all requests for new expenditures and increased expenditures and confine such expenditures to the revenues at its disposal. If Congress is to follow this sensible course, it will have to confine such new or increased expenditures to things which in good conscience are entitled to priority over the numerous other demands made upon Congress by various groups of Americans.

It is undoubtedly true that virtually all Americans will agree that national defense has first call upon all Federal revenues. For several years, I have advocated as a primary necessity in this field the construction of B–70 bombers, which can be based in America and fly from America to any target on earth, the speeding up of the modernization of the ground forces which have many components now armed with obsolete weapons, the acceleration of the program for the construction of nuclear submarines armed with Polaris missiles, and the acceleration of the development of intercontinental ballistic missiles. In my view, these things are necessary to deter the Soviet bloc from attack upon us and our allies, and are necessary for our very survival in case such an attack should come.

As a result of events in Japan and elsewhere, Congress has apparently at long last waked up to the necessity of doing what I have long advocated. As a result of action by the Senate it now appears likely that Congress will appropriate approximately $700 million for additional funds for defense items of the character described above. This means that expenditures for national defense will be increased to this extent out of such meager surplus funds as may be available during the next fiscal year. This will leave scant surplus funds for use for such new purposes as Federal aid to education, the medical care of the aged, and the like, and it can be maintained that items of this kind ought to be considered worthy of some priority over other expenditures.

If H.R. 9883 should be enacted into law, it would require $756 million additional Federal moneys for payment of the increased salaries of postal workers and Federal employees generally. About one-third of this amount, namely, $252 million, would be used to increase the pay of postal employees. The remainder, or $494 million, would be required to take care of the increased pay for other Federal employees covered by the bill.

It is undoubtedly true that anyone who works for the Federal Government ought to receive just compensation for his work, and just compensation, in my opinion, would be similar to that earned by persons of comparable skills and responsibilities in private industry.

According to present plans, the Federal budget expenditures during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1960, will total $79.8 billion even if the salaries of Federal employees are not raised, and even if no new expenditures of any kind are authorized by Congress. If H.R. 9883 were enacted into law, it would add almost 1 percent to the entire Federal budget even if Congress made no increased appropriations for national defense, Federal aid to education, medical aid to the aged, or any other purpose.

No one can rightly assert that the Congress ought to authorize an increase in the salaries of any governmental employees unless such increase is necessary to place such governmental employees on a par with other workers of like skills and responsibilities in private industry.

About a year ago, Congress appropriated $500,000 to enable the executive branch of the Federal Government to investigate and report how the compensation and fringe benefits of Federal employees generally compare with the compensation and fringe benefits of persons doing like work in private industry. This investigation has been under way for some time, and we have been advised that it will be completed by September. This being true, Congress will have accurate information on this subject in time to do what is fair and just to Federal employees generally, as well as to the American taxpayers, when it convenes for a new session in January 1961.

It could act at that time on the basis of sound information free from all the tensions existing in this election year.

Instead of taking this wise course, Congress elected to act at this time before this vital information was available to it. Consequently, each Member of Congress had to determine as best he could whether or not the requested pay increases were justified.

I studied this problem to the best of my ability in the light of all the information available to me, and came to these deliberate conclusions:

1. That the postal employees had made out a case justifying the pay raise provided for them in H.R. 9883.

2. That some Federal employees subject to the Classification Act—particularly those in the lower grades—were entitled to some increase in pay, the amount of which was not clearly established.

3. That many Federal employees—particularly employees among the higher grades—were already receiving as much or more than persons of similar skills and responsibilities in private industry.

4. That the Classification Act salary structure is in need of reform. For example, the difference between the pay levels in the different grades has no sound basis, the within-grade step increases of the various grades have no relationship to each other, and the percentage difference between the entry and top salaries of the various grades differ excessively. Time and space do not permit me to go into details concerning these matters.

5. An across-the-board increase of 7½ percent in the salaries covered by the Classification Act would magnify the defects and inequities and promote rather than diminish the injustices arising to thousands upon thousands of the Federal employees covered by the Classification Act. For example, in order to vote for a paltry raise of $225 per year for a first year GS–1 under the bill, I would have had to vote for an increase of $1,235 per year for a 5-year GS–17.

6. The only way in which to provide for fair and just treatment for Federal employees generally is to abandon the practice of granting across-the-board percentage increases to all grades and revise the entire Classification Act of 1949 upon a selective basis which will give the employees falling in each category compensation comparable to that of persons of like skills and responsibilities in private industry. It is well to remember that H.R. 9883 does not authorize an expenditure of $494 million for increase in the pay of Federal employees generally for a single year. It establishes new salary schedules which will require the expenditure of a like amount each year until the law is changed. Indeed, it will authorize an expenditure of much more than $494 million a year for Federal employees generally if the Federal Government keeps expanding. In authorizing increased expenditures of this magnitude for all years in the foreseeable future, Congress ought to take enough time to see that the authorized expenditure is made on a fair and just basis. It did not do so in approving H.R. 9883.

I objected to the form of the bill insofar as it attempted to cover postal employees and Federal employees falling under the Classification Act in one bill. My objection on this basis was twofold. Since I believe the postal employees were entitled to the proposed increase, I was placed in the position of either voting against any salary increase for the postal employees, or voting to pay out almost one-half billion dollars in salary increases to Federal employees generally under a classification full of injustices and inequities. My second objection was that by including both of these matters in one bill, the President was being impliedly invited to veto the entire bill, even though he might believe that the increase provided for one of the groups of employees was fair and just.

I made two attempts to procure a bill for which I could vote with good conscience. My first attempt was my support of the Ellender amendment to restrict the increase in salary to those earning less than $10,000 per annum. The adoption of the Ellender amendment would have removed some of the most glaring inequities created by the across-the-board percentage increase for all grades. The Ellender amendment was defeated because the proponents of the bill insisted that it be passed unchanged. My second attempt consisted of a motion on my part that the bill be recommitted to the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with directions that it divide the provisions of the bill into two bills, one dealing with postal employees and the other with Federal employees generally, and report the two bills back to the Senate immediately. This would have provided, in effect, that each of the proposals would have to rest upon its own merits and be voted on separately. If my motion had been adopted, it would have averted the possibility of a veto in case the President concluded that one group was entitled to salary increases while the other was not.

Despite any assertions which might be made to the contrary, a very good case can be made for the proposition that a large proportion of Federal employees covered by the Classification Act are not faring too bad in comparison with other employees of like skills and responsibilities in private industry. As a matter of fact, available statistics show that hundreds of thousands of people are now seeking employment in the Government service. During the past 15 years, classified employees have received seven different salary increases. I voted for the two of them adopted after I came to the Senate—one in 1955 for an average increase of 7.5 percent, and one in 1958 for an average increase of 10 percent. Moreover, I voted for an average increase for such employees of 11 percent in 1957. This increase met a Presidential veto. In addition, I have voted for measures increasing the retirement benefits of classified employees, and for measures under which they are made eligible to receive very liberal hospital and surgical insurance. I have certainly tried to be fair to them at all times. It is to be noted that available data indicates that the cost of living has risen about 2 percent since the 1958 increase of 10 percent was granted to classified Federal employees.

All of us are human. Most of us want our earnings increased, and are not inclined to have much patience with any legislator who does not agree with us on this point. If I had been guided by political considerations, I would have taken the easy way out and voted for a bill which would have conferred financial benefits upon 1,569,900 Federal workers, many of whom are my own constituents. I could not take the easy way out in this particular case. This is true because I have what some people consider a political handicap, that is, a Scotch-Irish conscience, which compels me to vote for what I think is right in the light of all the circumstances known to me. For the reasons I have already stated, I could not vote for H.R. 9883.

Sometimes a legislator is put in the unhappy situation in which he is compelled to choose between the requests of his constituents and what he thinks is his duty to his country.

In such circumstances as this, I think that the legislator is required to guide himself by this simple verse of Edgar A. Guest:

"I have to live with myself, and so
I want to be fit for myself to know,
I want to be able, as days go by
Always to look myself straight in the eye;
I don't want to stand, with the setting sun,
And hate myself for the things I've done."

If Congress should fail to override the President's veto of H.R. 9883, I think that it should take the following action:

1. It should enact into law a separate bill increasing the pay of postal employees before adjourning the present session of Congress.

2. Congress should reform the Classification Act in such a way as to make it certain that existing inequities and injustices are removed, and that classified workers will receive compensation comparable to that received by persons of similar skills and responsibilities in private industry.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, at this time I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of explaining my position with respect to the issue before the Senate. I also wish to inform the Members of the Senate of my intentions in the event the Presidential veto is sustained.

When the roll was called 2 weeks ago, on the question of final passage of H.R. 9883, which provided for a 7½-percent pay increase for postal and Government classified employees—or, in effect, approximately 8.4 percent for postal workers and 7½ percent for classified employees—I cast my vote in the affirmative. However, the RECORD will show that I had previously supported an amendment, submitted by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], which would have reduced the increase to 6 percent. I believe it would have been wiser had the Senate accepted the 6-percent amendment, offered by the Senator from Kansas. The amendment would have increased the possibility and the probability of the immediate enactment into law of H.R. 9883, without requiring us to undergo the situation which faces us today.

It was my opinion then, Mr. President, and it is my opinion today, that a slightly lower percentage—slightly less than the 8.4 percent or the 7½ percent provided by the bill—would have been much more advisable. However, I voted for that measure because I believed a reasonable increase was warranted.

President Eisenhower has demonstrated, through his veto action and the language contained in his veto message, his opinion that H.R. 9883 would create very serious budgetary ramifications.

As the ranking minority member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I realize what a difficult job it is attempting to keep appropriations within necessary limits. I realize that one of the most tremendous problems the country faces is the problem of inflation. I realize that each step we take toward inflation means suffering for practically everyone in the United States, including the postal workers, the classified workers, and all others.

Therefore, Mr. President, I could bring myself to believe in, and to support enthusiastically, what I consider to be a reasonable pay increase. The effort to amend H.R. 9883 to a 6-percent increase having been defeated, I supported the 7½-percent measure for classified workers and 8.4 percent for postal employees because I believed they were entitled to some pay increase.

However, I believe that now, in view of the President's strong veto message, in view of his definite feelings on this subject, and his responsibility for the financial conduct of our Government, the only thing for me to do, as the ranking Republican on the Appropriations Committee, is to vote to sustain the veto.

I do so with this thought in mind: If the veto is sustained, I have in my hand a bill which provides for a 6-percent increase for postal, classified, and other Federal employees. It eliminates the objectionable features which the President has pointed out, and it deletes section 115(b) through section 115(d), which were also criticized in the veto message.

I shall ask unanimous consent to introduce my bill at the conclusion of the vote if the veto message is sustained. If unanimous consent is not given, I will introduce it at the next opportunity for introduction of bills.

Mr. President, I believe that the bill is based on a sound position and, if passed, will become law. I have definitely in mind human obligations and the fact that some pay raise is warranted. But I believe it is my duty in a situation of this kind, to exercise my responsibilities as a Senator, as chairman of the Republican policy committee, and as the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee and to vote to sustain the veto of the President.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the President's veto. As a member of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I have for many years been associated with every pay bill that has gone through this body. I have been rather proud of the fact that I have been able to be of some assistance in trying to work out some of the difficulties that are always involved when the consideration of pay legislation is begun. Therefore, it is not an easy vote for me.

These difficulties are associated with the problems that originate among groups of our postal employees, classified workers, and other Federal employees. There are always some differences of opinion between the executive branch of the Government and the legislative branch. Quite often there are differences between the majority and minority members of the legislative committee dealing with this problem. Regardless of the differences in the past, we have usually been able to work out some reasonable compromise that would be acceptable to all concerned. Today, despite my efforts and the efforts on the part of others, we have been unable to resolve these differences, and, therefore, we are confronted with this veto message.

When this legislation was before the Senate for consideration, I discussed it at some length and expressed my views on several features of the pending matter. I offered an amendment, as the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has just suggested, which would provide an across-the-board pay increase of 6 percent. That amendment was defeated by a vote of the Senate of 28 to 54.

I felt, in all sincerity, that this amendment might have been a solution to our present difficulty, but the Senate thought otherwise. In my discussion of the pending bill, I called attention to several what appeared to be very apparent inequities in pay legislation; and should the pending bill become law, despite the President's veto, these inequities, in my opinion, will become even more glaring as the law goes into effect.

Mr. President, I could discuss the pending matter at great length, but I feel that my views are well known and that my position has already been stated.

The Civil Service Commission, under date of June 30, issued a release which gave the Commission's views on this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the release of Chairman Roger W. Jones be made a part of my remarks.

The Civil Service Commission, as this body well knows, is a commission composed of bipartisan membership, and they have made an excellent analysis of the bill as they see it. I think this analysis, which I ask to have made a part of my remarks at this point in the RECORD, should be helpful as we begin to live under this new pay legislation.

There being no objection, the release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Civil Service Commission today said that it greatly regretted numerous inaccurate statements that have been made about the effect of the 7½-percent pay bill on Classification Act salaries. In stating the Commission's views that the legislation will have many inequitable results, Chairman Roger W. Jones said:

1. Legislation now pending at the White House is not a flat 7½-percent increase for all grades and steps within grade under the Classification Act. The raises actually range from 8.3 percent for the top longevity step in grade GS–1 to 5.7 percent for grade GS–18. Furthermore, within all grades through grade GS–10, the average increase is 7.7 percent, with the range running from 7.5 percent to

8 percent or over. The greatest increases, in many cases, will be given in jobs where Government pay already is comparable to that in business and industry.

2. Not only is the effect of the new schedule unequal, but it also further increases the lack of consistency among the different pay systems of the Government. At the same time discrimination is increased in numerous types of positions in which the Government under one of its salary systems already pays salaries in excess of those paid in private industry. A typical example of this result may be found in the case of general stenographers. Data thus far collected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in 30 areas show a national average annual salary today for general stenographers of $3,849. Differences already existing are illustrated by comparing this figure with the Classification Act and postal stenographers whose average salary is at the fourth step in grade GS–3 ($3,780), and level 4 of the postal field service ($4,455). Under the salary bill now pending, the GS–3 rate will advance to $4,075 and the postal field service rate to $4,825, thus compounding existing discrepancies.

3. A precedent for further imbalance and inequity under the Classification Act is set in connection with the application of increases in the salary system of Department of Medicine and Surgery of the Veterans' Administration. A 7½-percent increase is granted in the top salary for a Chief Medical Director, thus setting that salary above the statutory salaries of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the Deputy Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

4. The Commission also is deeply concerned about the dangerous precedent set by a provision in the bill which not only increases the pay of, but gives to some 15,000 employees of agricultural stabilization and conservation county committees the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act, the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance Act, and the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959. These county committee employees are not Federal employees in any sense. They are hired and supervised by committees of farmers, elected by other farmers, who are not Federal employees. These employees are not under Federal appointment, they take no oath of office, they are not supervised by a Federal officer, they are not subject to any of the laws relating to tenure, hours of work, salary, and conditions of work which regulate the conduct of Federal employees. It is not fair to almost 1 million Classification Act employees to select this group of private citizens for this highly preferential treatment because the Federal Government has some connection with their work. It opens the door for claims of vast numbers of other citizens whose work is also of concern to the Government.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I speak with a heavy heart about this veto message and my feeling that I have an obligation to sustain the President's veto. I made a statement at the time the bill was originally voted on, so I shall make these remarks brief.

At that time I noted I had obtained reliable comparisons between the levels of wages in the Federal service and the levels of pay of State employees in the State of Connecticut, and the levels of pay in commerce and industry within our State, and other States, too. I discussed this matter, also, in considerable detail with a Connecticut citizen, the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Roger Jones, a highly respected and responsible civil servant, who has devoted most of his life to Government service.

He feels that it is an unjustified pay raise. I am convinced that it is unjustified at the present time, when we are without the information to be provided by the study for which we voted $500,000 last year. For that reason, I shall vote to sustain the veto.

I might add that the President himself is not one who would be naturally unsympathetic to the hopes and aspirations of Government employees, inasmuch as he has been one for the entire useful years of his life. Therefore, his very strong message, I think, must be considered as being an authoritative, objective analysis of the situation.

But what disturbs me more than anything else, Mr. President, is the relationship of this raise to other matters. I believe that the big issue before the country today is the economic competition in which we are engaged, not only with the Communist countries, but now even with the free world; countries we have helped to put on their feet, countries to whose welfare we have generously contributed by our own efforts. Many of these countries have become more aggressive and efficient in international trade than they have ever been in their history. So our competitive position in the world today is a very, very serious matter, indeed. This question came up this morning in the hearings of the Jackson subcommittee, when Governor Rockefeller was testifying, and he spoke of the seriousness of the economic war. One of the aspects of that war is the question of wages and pay. The fact is that in recent years the custom of wage increases in this country every time a contract expires, or every 2 or 3 years, has had the result of raising our wage costs above the rise in productivity. This has increased our competitive disadvantage as a producer both at home and abroad. There are thousands—hundreds of thousands—of workers in the State of Connecticut whose jobs are at stake in this world struggle, in this great competition.

Mr. President, if we continue to yield to the demand for increased wage costs without compensating increases in productivity, I feel we shall continue to increase the disadvantage which we are already beginning to feel, quite seriously, in our country. This is the big issue of the day.

Because I think it is inappropriate for the Government itself to set a bad example in the matter, and inasmuch as no overwhelming case has been made of the necessity for an across-the-board wage increase, I think it is appropriate that the Government refrain from setting an example by increasing wages throughout the entire employment structure of the U.S. Government.

I say, I speak these words with a heavy heart. I have many friends—old friends—in the organizations affected in the Government service by the bill. I know they are all going to be grievously disappointed in my vote. I regret it. I could not in good faith, feeling as I do, having studied the issue as carefully as I have in the last few weeks, do other than to vote to sustain the veto of the President.

I yield back my remaining time.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I am a little confused. The President of the United States in his message said that he would be willing, possibly, to sign a pay bill providing 4 percent increase. The ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations a minute ago said that if the bill failed he would introduce a bill to increase the pay rates some 6 percent.

I think everyone who has talked about sustaining the veto, including the President himself, is willing to provide 4 or 5 or 6 percent increase. That confuses me.

If there should be some increase, as all these gentlemen seem to think, including the President, I am not wise enough to know whether it should be 7½ percent, 5 percent, or 6 percent.

I shall vote to override the veto of the President, because I think these employees deserve an increase in wages.

Furthermore, those who know better than I, including the President of the United States, the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations and the ranking member of the Civil Service and Post Office Committee, the able Senator from Kansas, have stated their positions. The able Senator from Kansas said that he offered an amendment in committee to provide a 6-percent pay increase.

Under those circumstances I shall vote to override the veto of the President.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, how much time remains for both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponents have 108 minutes and the opponents have 74 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask that the time be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CALL OF CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, at the conclusion of routine morning business, there be a call of the calendar for consideration of measures to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 1817.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I give notice to Senators that we should like to consider Calendar No. 1824, S. 2195, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the western division of the Dalles Federal reclamation project, Oregon, and for other purposes, and shall make a motion for its consideration, if at all possible, before the recess.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH].

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, since the Congress will be in recess during the observance of Captive Nations Week, starting July 18, 1960, I should like to associate myself at this time with the text of the Captive Nations Week resolution as passed in the 1st session of the 86th Congress.

Judging by the violent reaction from the Kremlin to the passing of the resolution last year, it must have struck at the heart of the Communist monolith. The resolution rightfully points out the evil nature of Communist imperialism and decries its policy of enslavement and its denial of basic human rights.

While valid aspirations for independence are being satisfied in the free world, the tenacious stranglehold by communism of captive nations continues unbroken. In most of the world, the strong tide of nationalism since the end of World War II has resulted in the attainment of independence by hundreds of millions of people, largely through peaceful means. Within the last 2 weeks alone, we have seen several new nations emerge on the African continent, and many more will undoubtedly attain independence in the next decade. Within the Communist bloc however, any attempt on the part of the people to attain freedom would be crushed ruthlessly as it was in Hungary.

Despite the relentless implementation of Communist policies of imperialism and enslavement, the people behind the Iron Curtain have never given up hope for their eventual release from Communist tyranny. By observing Captive Nations Week, we shall once again dramatize to the world our dedication to the principles embodied in our own Declaration of Independence, thereby associating ourselves with, and encouraging, those who steadfastly aspire to freedom and independence.

ADJUSTING THE RATES OF BASIC COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill (H.R. 9883) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the majority leader, I wish to state that I shall yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT], and I believe 3 minutes is desired by the Senator from New York. Then I shall conclude the discussion on this side, and we shall be prepared to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if it is agreeable, we shall try to work our discussion in under a 30-minute period. If the other side can do likewise, we notify Senators that we shall try to have a vote at approximately 4:30, if that is satisfactory to the minority leader.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I said that we shall confine ourselves to 30 minutes on condition that the minority do likewise, and then we shall notify Senators that we shall be prepared to vote at 4:30.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I will make every effort to conform.

I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I shall not use 5 minutes.

I rise to speak in support of the forthright action taken by the President in vetoing H.R. 9883, the Federal employees salary increase bill. In my opinion the veto message is sound and presents overwhelming data showing why this pay legislation should not be enacted in its present form.

During the years I have served in Congress I have championed and supported legislation providing adequate salaries for our Nation's postal workers and civil service employees. In addition, I have supported bills providing life and health insurance for the Federal workers and sponsored other measures improving working conditions and granting many fringe benefits to these employees. Consequently, I am not unmindful of the needs of Federal workers, nor of the substantial contribution which they make to the welfare and security of our Nation. However, I cannot in good conscience support H.R. 9883.

It seems strange to me that Congress would appropriate $500,000 for a special study to ascertain the comparability of Federal salaries with those paid in private business, together with a study of the grade-by-grade differentials, and then proceed to act on this sweeping pay legislation before the study is completed. This survey is scheduled to be in final form by September, and wisdom would dictate that we wait until next year to pass a pay bill, based on the findings of this special study.

If we will take a careful look at the facts, it is impossible to justify a 7.5- to 8.5-percent pay increase at this time. In 1958, Federal employees received a 10-percent pay increase which more than made up for the differential in the Consumer Price Index dating back to the previous increase in 1955. Since 1958, the Consumer Price Index has increased 2.1 percent, based on the latest available data. Thus any argument that a 7.5-percent pay increase is necessary to keep up with the cost of living is completely unfounded. The maximum justifiable increase on this basis is 2.1 percent.

Going back to 1953, the beginning of the Eisenhower administration, the Consumer Price Index has increased less than 11 percent, while Federal classified salaries have increased 18.5 percent, and postal salaries an average of 23.4 percent. These computations are based on a selection of a GS–5 entrance rate for the classified workers and a city carrier for the postal workers. Thus under this administration, Government salaries have increased at twice the rate of the Consumer Price Index.

Finally, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another important effect of a Federal pay increase. This has to do with the relationship between Federal salaries and State government salaries, which I pointed up in my statement to the Senate when the bill passed on June 17. The President has made an excellent analysis comparing Federal pay scales with private industry, but there is also the important factor of relating Federal pay to State and local government pay, since there is competition for workers at these various levels of the government.

Using the present pay scales, before the proposed increase, employees of the State of Utah who correspond to Federal GS–2 and GS–3 clerks, are now earning from $50 to $60 a month less than their Federal counterparts. If the pending bill goes into effect, it will increase that difference by another $20 to $24 a month.

Utah social caseworkers, who are a semiprofessional group, are earning between $60 and $100 a month less than the pay received by Federal Government employees who perform similar work. And numerous other examples of the same nature could be cited.

I wonder whether we stop to realize the damage we are going to do to the State governments and their employees, particularly in the case of the smaller States far removed from the large metropolitan centers, when we widen this variation. Not only shall we increase the burden on the taxpayers, by reason of the added cost of the Federal payroll; but, in addition, we shall put the taxpayers of many States in a situation in which, by using the Federal Government's example as a lever, attempts will be made to force up the State, county, and municipal payrolls.

So the real burden on the taxpayer may be very much heavier than that represented by the proposed legislation now before us. This is one additional reason why I am persuaded to uphold the President's veto of the Federal pay bill.

It is my hope that Congress will take action before adjournment to make permanent the 2.5 percent temporary pay increase granted to postal workers in 1958. In addition, I favor a modest and fair salary increase for Federal workers as suggested by the President in his veto message.

After the completion of the Federal pay study and report which is due this fall, Congress should be able to work out any inequities in the Federal pay schedules and come up with a permanent solution to this vexing problem.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suppose there is probably a larger concentration of postal employees, who are so heavily affected by this bill, not only in my State, but in my home community of New York City than there is in any other State or city. It is estimated that the New York post office, which does not cover the whole city but covers the busiest commercial part of it, has about 35,000 employees. For many years I have had my Senate office in post office buildings of New York. I now have it in one of the major stations of the New York post office. For many years I have known personally a host of the employees and have become very familiar with their problems. Others will unquestionably analyze the detailed figures on this bill, and, indeed, the President of the United States has analyzed the detailed figures in his veto message.

But I wish to identify myself with the views I just heard expressed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], which I think hit the nail on the head. I have been impressed through the years with literally hundreds upon hundreds of postal employees, whom I know personally, and the trouble they have had making a living. Whatever the figures may show by way of comparisons, it is a fact that an unbelievable number, an altogether uncalled for number of postal employees either have two jobs or have wives working in order to make ends meet. The individual but detailed stories of these servants of the United States, indicating the hardships which they are undergoing in order to manage and keep their jobs and live at the same time, negate all of the abstract and theoretical arguments which were made upon the subject. But even beyond that, I think there are two final facts which will make me vote to override the veto. They are these:

First, that when the increases which these employees have received since 1952 are compared with the increases afforded employees in normal private employment, they fall under par, with an average of around 17½ percent, as contrasted with 25 percent or more on the part of industry generally.

Second, and very importantly, even when the arguments which are made against this bill which the President has vetoed are examined, it will be seen that in percentages it gets so close to what the bill provides that, knowing as I do the individual hardships involved—and I have lived with it for years—it does not make any sense to turn this bill down and start all over again.

Everyone agrees that the two and a half percent cost of living increase should be continued, and there seems to be general agreement, even from the strongest opponents, that there ought to be something added to that—let us say another two and a half percent. Many, including the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], have talked about the fact that the increase should be three and a half percent. The Senator from Kansas himself proposed that there be a 6-percent increase. When the final one and a half percent or two and a half percent difference—considering the 7½ percent in this bill—is precipitated down to the individual salary, and realizing that if the veto is sustained we must start from scratch, with the real possibility that nothing may happen, and considering the present state of the congressional session and the fact that we shall return in August in a highly political atmosphere in Congress, I think the decision must be made looking at the measure not from the astral regions down, but from the ground up.

I believe the measure before us now is reasonable and proper, considering the situation, and in the round that reasonableness is pretty much agreed to, in my opinion, as indicated even by the concessions of those who oppose the measure. Hence, I shall vote to override the veto.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish 10 or 15 minutes. I yield myself 15 minutes.

This is D-day for Federal employees. They are discouraged, disappointed, and disillusioned. This is because of the action taken yesterday by the President of the United States, in vetoing a reasonable pay-increase bill. However, before today's sun sets in the west, I believe their spirits will be revived by speedy Congressional attention to their plight.

The action taken by the President was not unexpected. It did not deviate from the pattern followed by him since he first took office. He destroyed the hopes of Federal employees for a justified pay adjustment in 1954 after Congress had adjourned and gone home. The wounds of that veto were healed by a sympathetic Congress early in 1955. Again in 1958, he vetoed a much-needed and well-justified further adjustment in the pay of our Federal employees. Within a matter of weeks, Congress again took appropriate action to see that Government employees received proper treatment. Now, once again, we find history repeating itself.

Early this year, even before Congress had an opportunity to hold hearings to determine whether pay increases were justified, the word was out that "Justice be hanged—an increase of any amount will be vetoed." It was against the background of such an attitude in the White House that both the House and Senate gave the problem long and careful study, finally reaching agreement on a measure that both Houses agreed was justified, reasonable, and fair.

This is not just my view—378 Members of the House voted for passage of the measure and only 40 voted against passage. Later, 62 Members of the Senate voted in favor of the bill and only 17 voted against. In total, 440 Members of Congress voted in favor of a pay increase for Federal employees and 57 voted against an increase. These 57 have now been joined by the President, making a total of 58 opposed as against a total of 440 favoring. Mr. President, I am glad to say that in both Houses of Congress many members of the President's own party supported the pay bill. Certainly this shows that just and fair treatment for Federal employees is not, and should not be made, a partisan question.

There are compelling reasons why a pay increase is justified at this time. The cost of living has continued to increase since the pay of Federal employees was last adjusted. If the Government is unwilling or unable to arrest the ever-upward increase in the cost of living, it certainly should not hesitate to take such steps as are necessary to see that its own employees are not made the innocent victims of economic conditions over which they have no control.

The second reason justifying an increase at this time is that the employees in whose behalf this measure was introduced—whose pay has been allowed to lag behind—can obtain relief in no other way than through congressional action. Wage board employees of the Government, whose rates of pay are keyed to those of private industry, have received increases annually, or more often, just as increases have occurred in private industry. Thus the three-quarter-of-a-million-plus wage board employees of the Government have outstripped our postal workers and classified employees in the matter of pay. Military personnel have also received rather generous increases, which incidentally were approved by the President.

The third factor is that previous increases have fallen short of bringing the pay of these employees to a proper and equitable level. Additionally, it was established conclusively in the hearings in both the House and in the Senate that, during this atomic age, if the Government is to recruit and retain the type of personnel needed to conduct its programs, it must establish pay rates that are at least competitive with private industry.

The President gives as his first reason for vetoing the bill that it "ignores the recognized precept that the only sound basis for setting Federal salaries is reasonable comparability to rates paid for similar work in private industry." Well, as I have stated, the rates of pay of some 750,000 employees of the Federal service are directly related by statute to rates of pay received by similar employees in private industry. Information provided the committee by the Civil Service Commission shows that these wage board employees have received increases up to as much as 40 percent since 1954, as compared with increases of less than 20 percent given to our postal and classified workers. These figures destroy completely the validity of the President's first reason for vetoing the bill.

His second reason is that some employees would receive a larger increase than others. Who is it that would receive the larger percentage increases? I think we all know who it is. It is the little people at the bottom of the pay ladder. It is the letter carrier, it is the postal clerk, it is our neighbor who has been caught in the economic current and almost pulled under.

The third reason seems to be the same as his second reason, except that percentages are used to show that some of the little people receive an increase of 1½ percent more than others.

In terms of dollars, as the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma pointed out when the bill was being debated on the floor of the Senate a few weeks ago, the added increase amounts to less than 50 cents a day. Now I do not believe that an increase of such an amount will buy many Persian rugs or vicuna coats. But it might buy a bottle of milk or a loaf of bread. As for me, I do not begrudge these little people an extra amount in their pay checks sufficient to buy a pound of bacon or a box of oatmeal.

The fourth reason given by the President is that the increase exceeds the rise in the cost of living. I do not recall this argument being used by the administration when it participated in the steel settlement. Neither do I recall its being used by the administration in connection with payment of interest to Wall Street bankers, when the rates of interest were increased.

Then why does the President tell us it applies to little people who have to work for a living?

The fifth reason for his not approving the bill is that postal revenues are somewhat less than postal expenses. One way of solving this problem might be to fire the present Postmaster General. Certainly, I would suggest that such action would be preferable to denying postal employees a wage to which they are justly entitled.

His final reason is that the bill extends an increase to a small group of persons who, according to him, are not Federal employees. He says that he has asked the Secretary of Agriculture to see that these people receive equitable treatment. Personally, I have no reason to believe that the Secretary of Agriculture would be any more successful in this than he has been during the past 8 years in solving the problems of the American farmer.

The only difference is that these people are recommended by the agricultural committees in the various counties of the United States, and then they are appointed by the Federal Government and paid with Federal funds. It should also be noted that they are held to be under the Hatch Act.

Finally, the President deplores the fact that certain unnamed employee groups have solicited the aid of Congress in seeking justice for their members. In view of the treatment Federal employees have suffered during the past 7½ years, I don't blame them for appealing to Congress. Where else could they go?

Mr. President, in my view perhaps the most insidious part of the President's veto message is his eleventh-hour suggestion that he might be willing to go along with some lesser pay increase than this bill provides. I say "insidious" because I believe his offer is designed to kill the measure by sowing among us the seeds of indecision. The question of a pay adjustment for Federal employees has been uppermost in the minds of those members concerned with post office and civil service matters—and in the minds of many other members who are friends of the Federal worker—since January.

Open hearings have been held, equitable percentage of increase has been thoroughly discussed. And in the face of these frank and free discussions by members and others who are interested, the President gave us to believe that he would veto any increase, however small, pending the results of an administration study to be completed after the Congress has adjourned.

Now, faced by a strong possibility—to my mind a very real probability—that the Congress will override his veto, he comes back to us with a half-a-loaf offering.

Time is short. The important work of the Congress puts increasing pressure upon us. Political conventions loom on the horizon. In this atmosphere, after months of hardrock opposition to any pay increase, the President asks us to change our minds. If we do, he says he may go along with us.

The 7½-percent bill is a good bill, offering the Federal worker certainly no more than he deserves. I hope we will reject out of hand the President's belated half-a-loaf proposal.

Mr. President, the bill vetoed by the President was fair, it was just, it was reasonable. It is worthy of enactment, and I believe it will be enacted. To that end, I invite the support of Members on both sides of the aisle; for it is only through rising above partisanship that the ends of justice can be served.

In this instance, I believe firmly that a vote to override the President is more than justified on the basis of fact and in the interest of an efficient and effective Federal Government.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the President's veto. There are a number of reasons why I have come to that conclusion. I shall try to recite them.

When the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] offered his amendment to separate the postal employees from the general classified employees, I voted in favor of that amendment. I did so because I felt that the postal employees had made their case, while the case of the general employees had not been sustained.

While this subject has been under discussion, countless numbers of postal representatives have come to my office, pointing out the justification for an increase in their pay. They stated that in one class, particularly that in which the beginning salary was about $4,000, the maximum pay, as I recall, that one could attain was about $4,800 per year.

I replied that, in my opinion, they were entitled to a raise; that if I had my way, I would give them more than the 7½ percent which is generally discussed here. Without doubt, according to the assertions which are made by some persons, the increase will amount to more than 8 percent, in some instances; and that amount I would support.

At no time in the discussions which I had was it ever urged upon me that I should consent to a 7½ percent increase for that category of employees who are earning $12,000, $15,000, and $17,000 a year. I suppose no effort was made to discuss that subject because the strength of the argument would have been so weak that it was thought best to leave that fact covered.

The bill provides for a pay increase, I understand, for about 1,500,000 or 1,700,000 employees. One-third of them are postal employees. The other two-thirds are employees in the general classified service.

If the bill had been separated into two categories, we could have dealt with equity with each class. But the classes were not separated. I am not casting any aspersions, but I have had enough experience to know that if one has a bad package, and thinks he cannot get it passed, he ties the bad package into the good package, and thus coerces the acceptance of the bad with the good. I do not claim that that was done in this instance. However, if I vote for the general bill, I shall have to put my approval upon an increase in the salaries of those who are now earning $12,000, $15,000, and $17,000 a year.

I want the citizens of Ohio to note that the bill does not deal with the $4,000, $5,000, and $6,000 a year employees alone. It deals with the high-pay category of Federal employees.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. No; let me finish my argument.

The argument is made that private industry is pirating the employees of the Federal Government. I know who was pirating the employees of the State of Ohio. It was not private industry; it was the Federal Government. I have in my files correspondence from the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation in Ohio, pointing out that Ohio cannot keep its employees because they flock to the Federal payroll. One of my grave problems as Governor of Ohio was to keep the men and women who were working for me from going to work in the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation and the other agencies which were financed by the Federal Government. If there is pirating, the pirating is done by the Federal Government.

Let each Senator introspect his own thinking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In how many States are the citizens choosing jobs with the State government in preference to the Federal Government? The fact is that in practically all the States they would rather go on the payroll of the Federal Government than of the State government.

Five hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated and is now being spent for a study, the purpose of which is the equitable adjustment of salaries, so that there shall be a just relationship among the various salaries paid. That report is to be submitted next September. The need for adopting an equitable standard is grave. The study is supposed to make recommendations as to how, not the equalization, but the equitable establishment of relationships among the different salaries, shall be attained. My question is, What did we spend $500,000 for? Have we deliberately decided to throw the study down the drain? The study was justified, and it would produce good results.

There is haste to pass the bill now. I think I know the reason for the haste. The easy way out is to vote for the bill. The easy way out for me would be to be absent and not vote at all. The hard way is to vote what I believe is the just and proper course to take in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has well depicted the dilemma in which I find myself. I was necessarily absent in my State when the bill was considered before. I had fully determined to vote for the increases for the postal employees, but I find now that if I vote to override the veto in order to provide an increase for the postal employees, I must also vote to provide an increase of more than $1,200 a year to those in the higher pay brackets. That is something I cannot in good conscience do.

I think it is most unfortunate that these bills were tied together. That has not been the case in the past. We all know, of our personal knowledge, that some persons in the higher pay brackets in the Federal Government are already overpaid.

The Senator from Ohio is correct in saying that persons leave the employ of the various States of the Union and enter Federal employment so that they may reach the higher grades of employment.

I shall vote to sustain the veto, in the hope that we can separate the different groups and deal with the Federal employees on a just, fair, and equitable basis.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Georgia for his statement. He was Governor of his State, and he knows what the facts are.

I venture to say that no Senator who has been a Governor will disagree with my statement about the pirating by the Federal Government of State employees.

Mr. President, I make this appeal to the Senators who argued that two-thirds of the employees would be given pay increases, even though the justification for increasing their pay has not been established. Those Senators were in favor of giving the pay increase to the remaining one-third. But how can those Senators reconcile their views in that respect to the giving of an average pay increase of 7½ percent to the other two-thirds?

The cost of this bill will be $750 million—$250 million of that will go to the postal employees, $500 million will go to the general classified employees. In the latter group there are thousands who receive more than $10,000, and many who receive up to $18,000.

Mr. President, for these reasons I shall vote to sustain the President's veto, believing it to be in the best interest of the people in general.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I should like to comment briefly on two points in the President's veto message.

One is the assertion by the President that the claim of the proponents of the bill that the pay increase provided by the bill is justified by the increase in the cost of living is utterly without foundation in fact. Mr. President, the Chief Executive, through information which was furnished to him, has cited as an illustration the fact that since June 1958, when a 10-percent pay increase was granted, the cost of living has advanced only 2.1 percent.

The answer is that the 10-percent increase in 1958 was completely inadequate at that time to meet the increase in the cost of living. The increase in the cost of living has always exceeded the pay increases which have been granted to the Federal employees, and will exceed them now, even after the pay raise by means of this bill, by from 3 percent to 5 percent.

In my remarks in connection with original passage of the bill, I dealt with that point. Of course one could always pick out a short period, immediately following a pay increase, when the cost of living might not have increased as much. But when we consider the increase in the cost of living over any reasonable 10-year, 12-year, or 15-year period, the pay increases, including the one contemplated by means of this bill, will not equal the increase in the cost of living, nor will this pay increase bring the Federal workers up to a position comparable with that of their counterparts in private industry.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield to me, I wish to concur in what he has just said. We must remember that all salaries were frozen during the war period; and when the first pay increase was made—and at that time I was on the committee—we did not increase the pay in accordance with the increase in the cost of living during that period; and we never have.

Mr. KEATING. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his statement.

Mr. President, the other point on which I feel impelled to speak has not previously been mentioned. In the closing paragraphs of the President's message—and again, no doubt, what he set forth was based on information furnished to him, for certainly he has not been subjected to any great pressures—he attacked the pressures for the passage of this proposed legislation.

Mr. President, as the President recognizes, everyone has a right to petition the Congress. We must not do anything to discourage proper and vigorous exercise of that perogative of every citizen. I do not know whether my experience is comparable to that of others; but at least in my case I cannot say that any great number of those who have indicated that they felt a pay increase was justified have used any undue pressures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. KEATING. May I have 2 more minutes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 2 more minutes to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 more minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, in connection with any hotly contested measure, all of us receive some mail which causes us to be resentful—for instance, mail in which it is stated, "You vote for this bill—or else," or "We supported you; now you support us," or similar language, which of course is not the proper way to approach any legislative problem.

But I must say that during my legislative career the pressures which have been exerted in connection with some of the other problems which have been before us have been much more of the type that I would call improper than any of the pressures which have been exerted in this case.

From personal experience, I know the situation of many Federal employees, particularly the postal workers. A very large number of the letters I have received have been written in a calm and deliberate manner, and have outlined the problems which the particular families referred to face in meeting the present high cost of living. Many, many workers, for example, have had to take second jobs in order to make ends meet.

Based on my own experience, I cannot say that the conclusion the President has drawn in regard to improper actions was justified. I happen to know personally several postal worker leaders, including Mr. Doherty and Mr. Keating, both of whom have been active in this field. In my experience, they have never—neither during my service here nor during my 12 years of service in the other body—exerted upon me anything which I considered to be improper pressures. The same goes for the other leaders of the Government employees.

To the contrary, they have been most helpful in providing factual information to justify this pay increase. They have forcefully demonstrated the need for this legislation.

Therefore, I feel that this pay increase is justified; and I shall vote to override the veto.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield briefly to me?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Is it not interesting to consider the fact that we did not think it wrong to increase our own salaries, since the war, from $15,000 to $25,000, or approximately one-half?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, my colleague places me in an interesting position, because I voted against that pay increase. But I shall vote for this one.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like to take a brief time to make clear my position on the President's veto of House bill 9883 and on legislation authorizing increases in the salaries of postal employees and other Federal employees in general.

On June 17, the Senate, after rejecting various amendments, passed H.R. 9883 by a vote of 62 to 17. I supported several moves designed to bring the bill more closely into line with the administration's policy. They included the Carlson amendment, which would have set the rate of increase at 6 percent; and the Ervin motion to recommit the bill, with instructions that it be reported back in such form that the postal workers' pay increases and the other Federal employees' pay increases would be treated in separate legislation.

When those moves failed, I voted in favor of final passage of the bill, because I wished to indicate my belief that some bill in this field was needed this year.

In his veto message, President Eisenhower has set forth clearly and forcefully the reasons why he cannot support House bill 9883. He has stressed the need to make permanent the 2½-percent temporary salary increase which was given 2 years ago to the postal-field-service employees and he has supported a modest general salary increase reasonably consistent with the rise in the standard of living costs which has occurred since the last general pay increase was made.

Because of the inequities in H.R. 9883, as it now exists, because of both the President's cogent arguments against its enactment and his willingness to support immediately responsible and fair legislation in this field, I join him and I join the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] in supporting a bill of that character; and because of the time available to Congress to work out a solution to the problem in August, I will vote to sustain the President's veto of H.R. 9883.

Congress has voted half a million dollars for a national salary study, to be undertaken by the Department of Labor, to determine the comparability of Federal salaries and the salaries paid at comparable levels in private business.

This action underscored our belief that the equitable way to go about revising Federal salaries was on the basis of rates paid in private industry. This expensive survey is scheduled for completion in September.

H.R. 9883 ignores this project and its underlying concept. It revises the Federal pay scales without waiting for the benefit of the needed information from the authorized study, and it aggravates serious disparities which already exist.

The bill contains increases that add new inequities; and it includes benefits for persons who are not Federal employees to begin with.

The very logical and persuasive argument that Government salaries should be related to cost-of-living increases simply does not apply to this bill as it is now written.

I am afraid that this legislation is the result of hasty action based on incomplete study, and is an example of the dangers facing the Congress of the United States in its grave responsibility to pass bills for the general good in a limited period of time and during an election year.

Particularly in light of the administration's hope that justifiable and fair action be taken this year to increase Federal salaries, and considering the additional time we now have available to accomplish this purpose, I shall vote to uphold the President's action.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG].

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, as a member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I sat through many hearings on proposed pay raises for Government employees. It is unquestionable that this bill is going to cost a lot of money—in fact, around three-quarters of a billion dollars. The fact that this bill is going to cost three-quarters of a billion dollars is no reason why we should vote against it. The real issue is whether the Government employees are worthy of this raise. When we take into account the wages paid in private industry, I am satisfied the wages we have proposed in the bill are equitable and just.

Because of those facts, which I learned in the committee, I shall vote to override the veto.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE].

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I believe in the last 3 or 4 minutes we have realized the inconsistency of some of the arguments presented on the floor. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] arose a moment ago and said, "I agree with the President of the United States. We should sustain his veto, because this is hasty action. I believe sufficient consideration has not been given to this pay raise bill." Now, from the same side of the aisle, we hear a member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and a member of the same party as is the Senator from Massachusetts, say "We have been considering this legislation for a long time in our committee, and from what was disclosed in the committee, it is fair legislation." Therefore that Senator declares he will vote to override the President's veto.

Again on the same side of the aisle, the ranking Republican member of the same committee, only a short time ago, when this bill was under debate, said he did not think the pay increase should be 7½ percent. He would favor 6 percent.

Mr. President, I do not know what the magic of 1½ percent happens to be, but, assuredly, he was willing to go 6 percent. His colleague, Mr. FONG, of the same party, who is also on the committee, is willing to go 7½ percent. Yet we are being told constantly by persons who did not attend the hearings, persons who have been speaking on this legislation and yet do not know the background, that it was a hastily enacted measure and should not be reenacted today over the veto of the President.

Here is further inconsistency and incongruity: Some Senators are saying, "I am willing to accept this pay raise for the postal workers without waiting for a report; but when it comes to the other employees, let us wait for the report."

Of course, I am for the postal employees, and the postal employees are entitled to more than 7½ percent. As a matter of fact, when they originally came to the Congress, they asked for a 23-percent raise.

The first responsibility that came to me when I became a Member of the U.S. Senate in 1950 was to be assigned to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] will attest to this: We had hearing after hearing on pay adjustments to meet living costs. The fact still remains that, if we consider the purchasing power decline of the American dollar from 1939 to 1960, and as we have watched the rise in the cost of living during that period we have done less than equity to our Government employees. We will be doing less than justice today, if we do not override the President's veto.

After all, I am not one who has ever advocated or who will advocate, that Government employees or postal workers be given the right to strike. They do not have that right, and they should not have that right. We will all concede that. But let me say to my colleagues that if the Government employees had a right to collective bargaining, if they had the right to strike, like the steel workers of America, then instead of talking about a 7½-percent raise this afternoon, we might be talking calmly and collectively about a 15-percent raise.

What has happened here, my colleagues? The blue collar workers of the Government have been able to achieve a 30 percent increase, and the others have been able to achieve only a 17½-percent increase.

To come here today, realizing that the last pay increase was granted in 1958, to admit an interim increase in the cost of living and then to say that the classified workers of this Government are entitled to nothing, I think is closing our eyes to the facts, to the realities and the equities of today.

I am one who feels that this bill is just. I am one of those who feels that if we enact this measure we shall be achieving equity and justice for the faithful workers of the U.S. Government. I do not think this is an excessive increase for the classified workers. I feel that the postal workers should get more than 7½ percent. But they are willing to take this, and they are eager to see that the same 7½ percent is granted to their colleagues.

What are we saying here this afternoon? Mr. President, do you know that, under the law, if less than 50 percent of given premises are used by the Post Office Department, the janitors in that building come under the classified service?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PASTORE. May I have 5 minutes more?

May I have 2 minutes more?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield 2 minutes more to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. That shows what we all have to do. The employees asked for 23 percent, and came down to 7½ percent. If the junior Senator from Rhode Island has to compromise on the time, he will take 2 minutes if he cannot get 5.

Let me ask, Mr. President, What are we quibbling about here? We keep saying how much this is going to cost. We can afford it if the raise is equitable. If it is just, we can afford it. If it is unjust, we ought to reject it. But the question is, Is it a just measure? Has it been considered by the committee? Has it been recommended by the committee? Has it been passed by the Congress? The answer to all this is "Yes."

Mr. President, I must be becoming a little effective, because the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] has just now confidentially whispered that I may have the additional 3 minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this quibbling over pay increases has gone on continuously year in and year out. My first experience with it was in 1950 and 1951. I remember the pay increase in 1955. We had the same harangue. We had the same struggle on the Senate floor. There were many who thought the 1955 increase was too much.

Now I return to the explanation I was giving earlier. If we have a post office in a building where the premises are used 50 percent or more by the Post Office Department, then the janitors and the elevator operators in that building come under the Post Office Department. Therefore they would get a raise. However, if we have a post office in a small town, where it is most probable that less than 50 percent of the premises is used for post office purposes then those people come under the classified service. Yet there are Senators in this Chamber who would say, "Do not give these last employees a raise."

How ridiculous can we get? Perhaps we have to be a Solomon? Let us use his wisdom to prevent discrimination. Let not justice be divided in halves. That way—justice is denied—destroyed.

I say to my colleagues, let us look at the facts. Let us study the hearings. Let us look at the statistics. Let us analyze the background.

In view of the wage experience in private industry in this country, in view of the pay increases which have been granted, in view of the rise in the cost of living, in view of the decline of the value of the dollar, if Senators can stand on the floor of the Senate in the face of all these facts and say, "This is too much," the junior Senator from Rhode Island disagrees with them with all his mind—with all his conscience—with all his heart.

I shall vote to override the President's veto. When I do so, I shall do it in clear conscience. I shall do so in justice. I shall do so in the best interests of my country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, does the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] desire some time?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I believe we are all indebted to the able Senator from Rhode Island not only for a moving message but also for a message which was persuasive in the power of his words and equally if not more persuasive in the logic of his argument. The Senator from Rhode Island has stated the case in a manner which demolishes the veto message.

I ask my colleagues to examine the message. If my colleagues will look at other veto messages of other years, they will find apparently there is a party line which is being followed without regard to the facts.

This message, like others, speaking of H.R. 9883, says it "is indefensible by any light."

I ask my colleagues to listen to these words:

> This hastily drawn bill violates every concept of fairness, every rule of reason and logic.

Mr. President, I do not know who advised the President of the United States, but whoever did ought to be called in for disciplinary action.

[Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. President, this bill was not hastily drawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The guests in the galleries will be quiet. Visitors are guests of the Senate. We shall have no demonstrations in the galleries.

The Senator from Minnesota may proceed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the bill was not hastily drawn. There are 406 pages of hearings held by the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], who for years has concentrated his attention on the subject of postal pay, pay of classified employees, and all matters relating to Federal employees.

Let the record be clear, the advisers to the President may be competent, but I submit when a man has served as chairman of a committee of the U.S. Senate for a good many years, he, too, is competent. His colleagues are not without competence.

Mr. President, furthermore, the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the other body held hearings which, in summary, are twice as long as the hearings held by the Senate. These hearings were held in June and July and August—3 months—of 1959 in the Senate. The hearings were held over a long period of time in the other body.

What is more, Mr. President, the justified pay increase is not 7½ percent—it is 9 percent. We chiseled off 1½ points to please this administration.

I submit to the President of the United States, who has been poorly advised in this matter, that the proposed legislation is well drawn. It is long overdue.

I further submit that there is a body of testimony which no department of Government can refute.

The President's veto message talks about the lobbying activities in behalf of the bill. Mr. President, if we want to talk about a lobbyist, let us talk about the Postmaster General, and let us talk about his cohorts. They have been lobbying around the Capitol for a postal rate increase. They have been lobbying around the Capitol for years against any pay increase which was worthy of our Federal employees. They have continued to lobby inside and out of this building. That is their right. However, if we are going to start putting the finger of scorn or of blame upon somebody, then I wish to point out that there are two hands with which to point.

The postal employees, of course, have had a lobby at work. The word "lobby" is not necessarily an ugly or evil word. As the Senator from Rhode Island said awhile ago, our Federal employees are denied the right to strike. What is their opportunity to be heard? It will do them no good to go to the department head, because the department head cannot act. The law fixes the wages for these employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the department head, even if he is the most sympathetic boss, cannot act. The only place the Federal employees can receive any consideration is in the Congress of the United States. We are, in a sense, the collective bargaining committee, in terms of trade unionism.

These employees belong to organizations, and without those organizations they would be the forgotten men of this Government. I would think it is unworthy of a Presidential veto message to speak in terms which are derogatory of a legitimate right of our citizens in the United States—the right to petition.

The administrative branch of the Government, the executive branch, petitions every day. We get "a message from the President." We stop the proceedings to hear "a message from the President."

We have messages from the departments. We are always getting messages from the Bureau of the Budget. I will say that the Bureau of the Budget is the body of the Government without a soul, a kind of political zombi.

We receive messages week after week and year after year. There is a right to petition the elected representatives of the American people. When a Federal employee has an organization, if he lives in the State of Minnesota, with his fellow workers, and if he sends a petition to the Senator from Minnesota, is that supposed to be wrong? I will tell Senators it is not wrong. I am in the Senate to represent those people. I am here to represent the people of my State. They can petition whenever they wish to, and that petition will be respected by me and responded to, the executive branch of the Government notwithstanding.

The President of the United States has the power of the veto, and we have the power to override it. I suggest it is about time that the Congress exercised its power. The administration has one word which will take it down through history. It will be known as the "veto" administration. I wish to save it from that ill repute.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to remove the blight from its record.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt, Mr. President, we previously indicated to Senators we would try to vote at 4:30. As we go along, we seem to generate more discussion.

I have an understanding with the distinguished minority leader, that if our speakers will go ahead with their speeches, we can probably conclude the discussion in 20 minutes to each side. I therefore ask unanimous consent that we have not to exceed 20 minutes to a side, and then proceed to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. PASTORE. I have one question to ask.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. PASTORE. Does not the Senator from Minnesota feel that we are confronted with a disgraceful situation when a man who works in the Post Office Department has to have a second job in order to support his family?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should say we are. May I add that such situation does not add to the efficiency of the mail service. The efficiency of the mail service could be improved if the workers of the country in that service were given an opportunity to devote full time to their jobs without being required to do extra work on the outside to take care of their particular responsibilities.

I conclude my message by stating that frankly the argument of the President in his message that the pay raise violates the principle of keeping wages up with the cost of living is an erroneous argument. It is true that workers in recent years have received proportionately a little more increase in pay than the so-called inflation has risen. But I should like to remind the President of the United States that there was a long period—a desert, it might be called—of no pay increases, in which period the price indexes rose and the working people of the country were the victims of the high cost of living. The workers of this country have not yet caught up with that high cost of living. Seven and one-half percent is still below what is just, and I hope the Senate will vote to override the veto and make it unmistakably clear that we wish economic justice for the Federal employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the junior Senator from Texas.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, there is a very old axiom that no army is better than the training of its troops or the leadership of its key officers. This, I believe, applies to governmental service or to the operation of any private industry.

In calling for support of the bill to increase Federal employees' pay and in voting in favor of this bill becoming law, I am not doing that just to oppose the President or in any effort to lessen his prestige.

I am doing this because I think it is right. I think the employees of the Government are entitled to the proposed pay raises. I think that they are dedicated people who generally work very hard at their jobs, and these pay raises will increase the efficiency of the Government of the United States.

I serve as a member of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee. I was present every day but one at those hearings. The volume of printed hearings that was held up and so well exhibited here today by other Senators, including the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota, shows overwhelming proof that we have viewed this as we would a case at law, with a record made, and a verdict rendered for the Government employees.

When the Postmaster General appeared, he did not say that the postal employees were not entitled to the increase; he said, "I must have a nickel stamp to pay for it."

We must raise money for the Government. Taxes are not popular. However, I voted for the continuation of the transportation tax this year. I voted for a continuation of the telephone tax. I voted to take off the credit on stock dividends.

I voted to eliminate the procedure by which a manufacturer in Pennsylvania can go to Africa on a safari, kill lions, and charge it off on his inccme tax return as a business expense. I have voted for taxes to pay for expenditures by the Government. We retained part of those taxes in the bill, though the House deleted some. So surely when we spend money we must raise sufficient taxes. I voted for them. I thought of the pay raise when I voted to retain those taxes and to increase others. I thought that those who dance must pay the fiddler. I voted to raise money to pay for this pay raise because I think one of the critical needs of the Government is to pay its employees sufficient so that they can be proud of their jobs. Over 80 percent of the postal employees either must hold a second job in the nighttime or the daytime, or their wives must work to keep body and soul together and to keep the children in school.

Having heard the testimony presented at the hearings, I believe if all Senators had heard some of the testimony before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service that we had heard, they would vote 4 to 1, at least, to override the veto. I would not be surprised that if they had heard all the testimony that we on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee heard, the vote would be 9 to 1 to override.

In my opinion the proposed pay raises should be voted. They are modest. They are not enough. They have been cut down to try to avoid a veto. There was talk in both Houses of Congress to the effect that if the pay raise was kept at 9 percent, the President would veto the bill. There was much discussion to the effect that if the proposed increase were cut back to 7½ percent, the bill would not be vetoed.

As a member of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee who has had occasion to study this problem perhaps more carefully than some, there seems to me no question but what the proposed pay increases should be voted. The argument that Federal pay increases should be paced by cost-of-living increases in the past few years only is not only invalid, it is ridiculous. Does it make sense to say that because a Federal employee and his family was almost starving or living in near poverty 10 years ago, that he should continue to live the same way today? Of course it does not, and our whole purpose here today is to, in some measure, attempt to correct some of the very great injustices that have been continued over the years. And, I might add, this bill goes only a short distance toward meeting the problem. More pay for these employees is needed and justified, not less.

It has been proven many times over, not only by the Federal Government, but by the leading industries of the Nation, that low pay and inefficiency often go hand in hand. Right now, the Government is losing an alarming number of well-trained and well-educated professional people because private industry simply outbids the Government for their services. This bill, providing only a 7½-percent pay increase, won't even begin to completely correct that problem but it will be a step in the right direction, the right direction being toward keeping top qualified employees and efficiently operating our Government.

Mr. President, I will vote to support this proposal and strongly urge its passage. I will vote to override the President's veto of the governmental employees pay raise.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wonder if it would be agreeable to the minority leader to suggest the absence of a quorum so that we may notify all Senators.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That would be agreeable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the understanding that the time will not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I rise to urge in all sincerity that the Members of the Senate vote in a few minutes to override the President's veto. I do this in the face of a rather intemperate veto message, which recites on its first page, with respect to the ways that we have voted:

> Such fiscal and legislative responsibility, and particularly the bill's basic unfairness and the discrimination that would perpetuate, offend all thinking citizens, Federal employees among them, and make this legislation entirely unacceptable.

Mr. President, the President of the United States charges that the bill is discriminatory. One of the reasons why he says it is discriminatory is that the postal field service workers are given a pay increase of 8.8 percent, while those in the higher grades in the Government service drop down to 5.7 percent. What I should like to call attention to is the fact that 5.7 percent for a grade 8 civil service worker amounts to an increase of $1,000 a year, which the President believes is discriminatory against the higher paid worker.

While in the top step the level for the postal field service is an 8.8 increase, to many it means only $430. Let us look and see what the $430 amounts to. This is the exact raise that more than 1 million of our Federal employees will receive; 400,000 are in the letter carrier grade, and the other 600,000 are in the classified service. The total increase in the case of letter carriers, after 7 years of service—and that is as high as the letter carrier can go in his lifetime—will amount to $430 a year. This amounts to $35 a month by way of an increase. If we deduct 20 percent for taxes on the $35 a month that he has to pay back to Uncle Sam, $7 of that raise is already absorbed; $2.28 of that $35 is absorbed by the retirement fund contribution; $12 a month will be required for the health insurance program, which Congress unanimously voted at the urging of the late Senator Neuberger and the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service [Mr. JOHNSTON]. The deductions that occur monthly as a result of the $35 per month increase will take $21.28 out of the $35 per month increase, leaving a take-home pay of $13.72 a month.

It is true that these benefits are given to our postal workers and to the civil service workers. However, the steel settlement and other industrial settlements that are made in favor of industrial workers' contracts include these fringe benefits. Those workers are not charged, as we charge our employees, for health insurance or for retirement. It is a part of their fringe package. We require our employees to pay for it, as we should. The take-home pay against which the President rails in his blistering veto message to us amounts, so far as 1 million workers are concerned, to $13.72 a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. The starting grade for a letter carrier in our biggest cities in the United States is less than we pay these fine young men who serve us as page boys. If Senators will check on the matter, they will find that these men in the postal service, with families, living in big cities, trying to maintain a home, are paid less per year—$4,035 a year in the starting grade of grade 4, and that is where we find a great many of them—than we pay our fine young page boys.

They are paid $400 less than the city of New York pays its garbage collectors. We cannot have a Federal service or a career service with responsible Federal employees under those conditions. I hope the Senate will vote to override the veto.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How does the time stand, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponents have 9 minutes remaining, and the opponents have 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, first let me say that the President of the United States is a very temperate and restrained person. He is a man who talks in gentle terms and in gentle spirit. When one of the press columnists stated that the President angrily vetoed the bill, it was certainly a departure from the fact. I am afraid that whoever said that mistook conviction for anger. The very fact that this is a slightly testy message is only further proof that the President of the United States had a deep conviction about the bill, and uttered that conviction in terms everyone could understand.

Notwithstanding everything that has been said on the floor, the postal increase average in this bill for 550,000 workers is 8.35 percent. That is the record. We can use figures like 7½ percent and phrases like fringe benefits, but I am talking about the average. The bill provides an average increase of 8.35 percent for a total of $248 million; for the classified service, $452 million; for the agricultural workers and Foreign Service workers, an additional amount. The net total is $746 million.

The basis for the President's approval is eightfold or tenfold. First is the impact on the budget. What we are doing, of course, is cutting off the dog's tail a little at a time. In January the President estimated a surplus of $4.2 billion. We did not provide the revenues he asked, so take off $700 million.

The pay increase impact will be $700 million the first year, so take off $700 million.

If we approve H.R. 10, take off another $400 million.

If we approve school aid, the impact in the first year will be $300 million.

If the President finally signs the Health, Education, and Welfare appropriation bill, take off another $300 million—although the Senate figure was $500 million above the budget.

In the Defense appropriation, there is a writeup of $665 million. However, it has no impact so far as the 1961 budget is concerned.

On international health, take off $100 million.

On housing, take off, roughly, altogether, $900 million.

What has happened to the $4.2 billion surplus which was to be applied to the $290 billion debt? It will have been whittled to $200 million, and we are not through yet.

If Senators think that that will not have an impact upon the economy of this country in the months ahead, I am afraid we are badly mistaken.

Senators speak about the inequities in the bill. First, the increase is 8.3 percent in the GS–1 grade; 5.7 percent in the GS–18 grade. I wonder what has happened to the bill we passed long ago to preserve incentives in government? In proportion to one's competence, skill, and ambition, he was to be rewarded. This bill makes mincemeat out of that.

Second, the increases are the greatest in the positions where the Government pay exceeds the industry pay. As an example, the national average for general stenographers, in 30 areas of the country, is $3,849 a year. Under the bill, in grade GS–3, the pay will not be $3,849; it will be $4,075.

In the postal field service, the pay will be $4,800 a year, which means $1,000 more.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] is as right as Punch when he speaks about the Federal Government pirating employees away from the State governments.

What about other inequities? It is amazing to learn that under the bill the Chief Medical Director in the Veterans' Administration will get more money than the Administrator or the Deputy Administrator.

The proponents of the bill like to say that it was not hastily drawn. Yet it had only 1 day's consideration in the committee. That is the record on this particular bill. Let there be no mistake about it.

Other inequities? The bill provides for county and community committeemen—15,000 of them—who will get health benefits, retirement benefits, and so forth. It has been said that they come under various acts. Let us look. Those 15,000 committeemen take no oath. All other Federal employees take the oath. The committeemen are not subject to the Hatch Act, no matter what the chairman of the committee says. So the bill provides for 15,000 persons who can carry on their political activities, although other Government personnel cannot. Those committeemen are not subject to the Lobbying Act; they are elected by farmer committees. They are not subject to any laws on tenure or hours of work or salaries. This is a beautiful precedent, since they are brought into the bill because a part of their salary comes out of the Federal till.

I warn the Senate now that highway workers, working for the States which get some of their money from the Federal Treasury, will be on the Federal doorstep asking for retirement and health benefits, and all the rest that goes with them.

We are setting a precedent in the bill which will rise to haunt us. It has been said that we have to take care of living costs. Since the 1st of June 1958, there was a 10 percent pay increase; but living costs went up only 2.1 percent.

The general pay increase for Government workers was from 17½ to 20 percent, and the living costs went up only 11 percent.

Something has been said about industry rates. Let us see. There is no guesswork about this. In the bill, the hiring rate for clerks and carriers goes up 15½ cents an hour. For regular clerks and carriers, the rate goes up 18 cents an hour. The maximum rate for clerks and carriers goes up 21 cents an hour.

Let us look at the industry rates: Did industrial workers get a 15½-cent increase? Did they get an 18-cent increase? Did they get a 21-cent increase? The railroad engineers got an increase of 11 cents-plus over a period of 17 months; 600,000 off-train workers, according to the recommendation of the emergency board created by the President, would get an increase of 5 cents an hour. The steel increase was roughly 9½ cents an hour, and it will not begin until December, with 8½ cents an hour more provided, beginning in October 1961.

The whole 1959 average was 9 cents an hour. But the bill provides 15½ cents, 18 cents, and 21 cents. Is it any wonder the President said the bill was hastily drawn? Is it any wonder he said the bill was indefensible? Is it any wonder he said it could not be justified? The President of the United States was on good ground.

Do not forget. This increase will be from now on. It will be $750 million a year. It is like that old song: "Not just for today, not just for a day, but for always."

The distinguished Senator from Minnesota talked about that sum being known to the Budget Bureau. Would it not have been something if he could have achieved his ambition and gone to occupy 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue? What might we suppose would have been the first thing he would have done? He would have called up the Budget Director to see where he was, to keep things on track.

Incidentally, the Senator from Minnesota said that Eisenhower will go down as the great vetoing President. Oh, is that so? Let us see. Franklin Roosevelt had 631 vetoes; Truman had 250; and up to date Mr. Eisenhower has had 160. It is so easy to generalize and throw these statements about. But this is the record. Somebody must have raised the question in connection with this bill, so just to make certain Senators will know where to find it, on page 21 of the hearings they will find the veto record.

Mr. President, I simply do not understand how we could have given the Department of Labor $1 million last year, have them earmark $500,000, direct them to make a study of comparable wages in industry and government, and to submit the report by September. What are we going to do? It is an inelegant but American expression: We are going to thumb our noses at what we did last year and kiss $500,000 down the drain because we are not willing to wait until the report comes in.

What are we asking the President to do? We are asking the President to ignore what we have told him to do. That is a great business. It is no wonder he had a deep and abiding conviction on this subject, when he finally vetoed the bill.

Oh, Mr. President, there are many things to be said about it, but of course time will not permit.

One other thing: After spending and spending, it seems that we propose to let the President grovel around to find where the revenue shall come from.

I offered the postal rate bill in connection with this bill, but it was voted down on this floor.

Mr. President, how would you like to be sitting at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, as President of the United States, and have a body 16 blocks away spend money like water, and then, when you said, "Please give me a little revenue," be told, in effect, "The devil with you. You find it wherever you can." Certainly that is not a pretty picture, in my book.

Mr. President, the total national income for the first quarter of this year is estimated by the indicators at $402 billion; personal consumption expenditures, $321 billion. What do we think would happen if the consumption cost—the living cost—went up 1 percent on $321 billion of consumption expenditures—or $3,200 million, 4 times the amount called for by this bill? And for what? For 2½ percent of the entire labor force. Today the country's labor force is roughly 73 million. This bill affects 1,600,000—or 2½ percent of that labor force. The bill calls for $750 million for them. Mr. President, do we trifle now with the stability of the country's economy? If we rock it by 1 percent, we shall have placed on all the families in the country an additional burden to the extent of $3 billion, 4 times the amount involved in this bill; and if there were an increase of 2 percent, it would be 8 times the amount of money involved in this bill.

In our conference the other day, I said I am becoming increasingly concerned about the cost-price squeeze in this country.

Mr. President, where do you think this money will come from, finally? It will come out of production, and nowhere else. When we make it so difficult for the producers of goods and services, and then add the spirited competition from abroad, by means of the imports of shoes, automobiles, and fabricated steel, we are playing with a little bundle of dynamite if we put these additional burdens on the economy, unless they are completely justified.

One other thing about all the untoward sentiments which were expressed in regard to the President's references to pressure. I have seen a great deal of pressure in this man's town.

Mr. President, let me ask how much time remains under my control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States contains a provision which marks out the seat of the Federal Government—called the District of Columbia; and the Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the seat of government. Perhaps one wonders why the framers of the Constitution were so wise. There was a reason for that provision, for when one of the early Congresses met in Philadelphia, it was so beset by soldiers who were clamoring for land grants and for other considerations, that finally it was necessary to provide that the seat of government shall be under the jurisdiction of the legislative branch; and it has been so from that day to this.

No one objects to having any groups petition the legislative branch of the Government. But sometimes that can go a little too far. I do not quarrel, for I know the gentlemen who are interested in this bill. Why, Mr. President, JERRY KEATING is one of my best friends. I have been at postal workers meetings with him. Believe me, it is no easy chore for the minority leader to stand here today and appeal to the Senate to hold up the hand of the President of the United States; but the minority leader does so because he believes the national interest supervenes the group interest. That is the reason for this appeal today.

Mr. President, I have often wondered: Suppose the Army lobbied us; suppose the Navy lobbied us; suppose the Air Force lobbied us. It may be said they are under contract, and that their freedom is limited by their enlistment. But who shall say how far that might go someday and then we would get into real difficulty. But I shall not put the matter on that ground.

I simply say I think this bill was hastily drawn. It contains many inequities.

Therefore, I believe the President's veto should be sustained.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of the time under my control.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING] desires to speak for 2 minutes; therefore, I yield 2 minutes to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, for 7 years we have been told by the White House what legislating we could do and what legislating we could not do. During the 86th Congress, in which I have served in the Senate for the first time, I have noted again and again that, without exception, we have been told by the President of the United States what we could not do in regard to legislation for airports, for highways, for aid to schools, for classroom construction, for aid for teachers' salaries, for housing, for aid to small business, for area redevelopment, for antipollution control, for public works, and for resource and conservation development. The needs of the American people in these vital fields have been slighted and impaired by veto or threat of veto.

We are now being told what we cannot pay to our Federal employees.

Mr. President, I think it time for the Congress to resume its legislative function.

I intend to do my part by voting to override the President's veto. I hope this body will join the House of Representatives in overriding this veto by an impressive majority.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield one-half a minute to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], in order to permit him to request that an insertion be made in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from South Dakota may proceed for one-half a minute.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I have received numerous telegrams and letters in regard to this subject.

In response, I have stated in my letter of June 30:

I felt that the increases over such a broad range of Federal salaries would be inflationary unless clearly shown otherwise. The additional cost to the Treasury was estimated at $746 million each year from now on.

All things considered, it did not seem wise to me to commit such additional funds until the study that is being made on Federal salaries has been completed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of my letter and the telegrams be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 30, 1960.

Mr. GEORGE W. COUGHLIN,
Mr. GEORGE E. MUSER,
Mr. WALTER L. KLINKEL,
Local No. 1010,
De Smet Post Office Clerks,
De Smet, S. Dak.

DEAR FRIENDS: Thank you for your letter relative to my vote on the Federal pay raise bill.

I felt that the increases over such a broad range of Federal salaries would be inflationary unless clearly shown otherwise. The additional cost to the Treasury was estimated at $746 million each year from now on.

All things considered, it did not seem wise to me to commit such additional funds until the study that is being made on Federal salaries has been completed. It is due in September.

I am concerned with the welfare of our Federal employees, but also with the state of the Federal Treasury at a time when we must spend more money for our defense needs and when the country is plagued with the inflation problem. Possibly a bill can be worked out that will not be quite so expensive.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS CASE,
U.S. Senator.

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 30, 1960.
Senator FRANCIS CASE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:
We strongly urge you to vote to override the Presidential veto of H.R. 9883 relative to salary increase for postal and Federal employees. We are voicing the unanimous desire of our membership in Federal Government employment for a muchly deserved and long-delayed salary increase.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE FIGHTERS,
WILLIAM B. BUCK, President.
JOHN C. KABACHUS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 30, 1960.
Senator FRANCIS CASE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:
We respectfully request your support of motion to override veto of H.R. 9883, the postal and Federal employees' pay bill. The bill was enacted by substantial majorities in both Senate and House of Representatives after thorough and lengthy consideration and following extensive committee hearings. Every argument advanced in the veto message was presented to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and rejected by large majorities. We believe the facts warrant the enactment of this legislation, the objections of the President notwithstanding.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
J. CLINE HOUSE,
President.
E. C. HALLBECK,
Legislative Director.

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 1, 1960.
Senator FRANCIS CASE,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.:
Great indignation has been caused among the postal employees of the Nation by the harsh and intemperate tone of the President's veto message. The postal and Federal employees have been seeking a fair adjustment in their pay. We regret that apparently the President has been misled by his advisers. American citizens should be able to expect that the facts or conclusions presented by executive departments to the President and to the Nation should be presented in an objective manner and should be exact in detail. Unfortunately this is not the case in the statements furnished to the President for use in the veto message.

We have clearly demonstrated to the committees in both Houses that Government workers are far behind workers in private industry when it comes to pay. Those opposing the pay increase have not successfully disputed this fact. In the last 12 years Government employees have received only four increases while those in private industry have received 11. The alleged inequities in Government pay have never been successfully described or explained.

We urge you on behalf of all letter carriers in America to vote to override the veto of H.R. 9883.

Sullivan, Portland, Maine; Philip Lepper, New York, N.Y.; Andrew F. Baker, Austin, Tex.; J. Stanly Lewis, Burbank, Calif.; Dean E. Soverns, Denver, Colo.; James H. Benning, Springfield, Ill.; Nelson E. Sundermeier, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield 40 seconds to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, I have listened to the debate this afternoon, and I wish to refer to the priorities and the set of values involved in this case.

I am disturbed that there should be so much concern over a salary increase of $400 or $500 to one who earns it, but no great concern over an increase of $4 billion in interest charges.

It seems to me that if we put first things first we should have no difficulty resolving this problem.

We note with concern that there have been mounting increases at the White House and at the Bureau of the Budget. It is these that are responsible for the statement today that we cannot pay the living a living wage.

Mr. President, I hope we assign the proper values and priorities to these factors in the American economy, and that we vote to override the President's veto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I believe the issues confronting us here are very simple.

I believe every Senator has already made up his mind in regard to how he will vote.

All of us are dealing with a group of dedicated and hard-working Americans who perform vital tasks under great difficulties. They are the Government workers. Without this group, good government and efficient government could never function in our country. These workers, Mr. President, are entirely dependent upon the good judgment of the Congress as to the wage scale that shall be set. They do not have the power, they do not have the authority, to exercise great economic pressures in order to better their own conditions and their status in life.

Mr. President, I am not swayed by the strong language that has been used against the proposal to better the economic lot of these hard-working people who, for the most part, are in the lower pay grades. I think the important consideration is whether we shall make conditions sufficiently attractive to draw into the Government service, and to maintain in the U.S. Government service, the highest type of American.

I read an article this morning which said that even when the pay raises were granted, even if the veto should be overridden, the average salary of the postal worker—his actual take-home pay—would be less than $75 a week.

I am going to vote to override this veto. I am going to vote to override it because I believe it is in the interest of good government, because I believe it is a matter of simple justice, because I think it is the wise course for our country.

I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, under the Constitution, the yeas and nays are required. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the Chair restate the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, as I understand, a "yea" vote is a vote in favor of the passage of the bill; a "nay" vote is against it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to inform the Senate that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee has a House joint resolution concerning appropriation bills that he desires to present. I should like to yield to him at this time to offer that resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 778, the joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the months of July and August.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 778), making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, there is no objection to its immediate consideration, but only to make the record, as these bills are signed by the President from time to time, the joint resolution will have no application; the joint resolution is intended only for carryover purposes.

Mr. HAYDEN. It would carry over as to the operations specified, and when the President signs any one of the bills concerned, the joint resolution will no longer apply to that bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. This joint resolution is the usual type, in order to make provision for continuing in operation the functions of Government for which annual appropriations for fiscal year 1961 have not been enacted. The joint resolution will continue its function until August 31, 1960.

The joint resolution covers the following appropriation bills: Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1961; General Government Matters Appropriation Act, 1961; Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1961; Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1961; Departments of Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare Appropriation Act, 1961; Military Construction Appropriation Act, 1961; Mutual Security and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1961; Public Works Appropriation Act, 1961; Departments of State and Justice, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1961; and the Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1961.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 778) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] has a conference report that is noncontroversial which he wishes to present. I think it can be disposed of in a relatively short time. Then the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has a conference report that is very important and I understand it is also noncontroversial and can be disposed of within a short time. First we should like to lay before the Senate the conference report on the military construction bill.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12231) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRUENING in the chair). The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today, p. 15455, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, the report is unanimous and is signed by all conferees. I ask that it be adopted.

Mr. DIRKSEN obtained the floor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I support entirely the statement of the Senator from Mississippi. The conference report was unanimously agreed to. It was arrived at after about 6 hours of labor. I believe it is a proper report for this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the amount of the budget estimate, the amounts contained in the House and the Senate versions, and the final amount for each item in the bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11776) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today, p. 15456, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 11776, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S.
July 1, 1960.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 18, 23, 44, and 52 to the bill (H.R. 11776) entitled "An Act making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and officers, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes", and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named therein, insert "$2,500".

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: After the word "transferred" insert "without reimbursement".

Mr. MAGNUSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate amendments numbered 1 and 47.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. For the purpose of the RECORD, this report is a unanimous concurrence of all conferees from both the House and the Senate. There are several important matters in this huge appropriation bill in which the Senate was interested and with respect to which it instructed the conferees before they went to conference. Among those is the matter of the appropriation for the civil defense program of matching funds for State and local administrative costs. We have agreed upon $6 million, which is one-half of the $12 million requested, and the program is scheduled to begin January 1.

Provided for the General Services Administration for the construction of public buildings throughout the country is $165,441,000. It also includes the construction of four large buildings in the District of Columbia, and the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs Appeals.

Restored to the Federal Communications Commission is $150,000 for enlarging the investigation of stations as to technical and legal requirements with respect to their licenses. The Senate added $50 million to begin the program for housing for the elderly, after the House had put in only $5 million, over the opposition of the Federal Housing Administration itself, but we finally decided in conference to provide $20 million for housing for the elderly, to get the program off the ground and started.

Provided is $915 million, for the full budget estimate, for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Provided for medical research in the Veterans' Administration is $4,500,000 of additional money, making $21,500,000 earmarked for 1961.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point a table showing comparative action on all items in the bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am very happy to see that the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, as reported by the Senate-House conferees, provides $20 million to begin a low-cost direct loan program for the construction of housing for low-income elderly persons.

Although this figure is slightly less than a mathematical division between the $5 million provided by the House and the $50 million which the Senate passed in adopting my amendment on June 22, it is a significant achievement on behalf of the millions of low-income elderly families who, without a program such as this, would never be able to find decent housing at costs they could afford.

All the members on this side of the aisle who spoke so eloquently to the enormous need for this type of program have reason to be glad that, at last, we will be able to make a real start in this important area of concern.

I am sure, too, that without the interest and full support of the Senate conferees, especially the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], it would have been impossible to achieve the appropriation now proposed. I personally am deeply indebted to the Senator from Washington and to his colleagues on the conference committee for their support and efforts in this cause.

As a result, there is now a prospect that, in the coming year, money will be available to private, nonprofit corporations to build approximately 2,000 housing units for the elderly at charges of nearly $20 a month less than they would be under conventional FHA financing. This is only 154 units less than all the units that have been completed and occupied in the 4 years since 1956 that FHA has provided mortgage insurance for elderly housing.

I only hope, Mr. President, that, having persistently opposed this badly needed program, the administration will sign the measure and begin promptly to implement the law of the land. I have no doubt that, if it wishes, it will be able to find reasons for administrative delay. But at least the money will be there for the next—and hopefully more friendly—administration to meet the pressing needs of those elderly citizens who made possible everything that we are able to enjoy today.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT MATTERS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11389) making appropriations for the Executive Office of the President and sundry general Government agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of June 30, 1960, p. 15185, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, several relatively minor amounts were in dispute between the Senate and House, and we came to a satisfactory unanimous decision. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT] and I took part in all the hearings and in the conference. We were a little disappointed that we did not get the full amount for the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, but the $115,000 agreed to will start the program and give us ample sums with which to proceed.

I move the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a comparative statement showing the action taken on the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that, in the matter of NASA, the Senate had a very long dispute and argument over the funds.

After we talked to Dr. Glennan, we were convinced, although the Senate had provided approximately $50 million additional, in view of the fact that we will have a supplemental appropriation bill in January, and because NASA could get along on this amount, and Dr. Glennan agreed we were particularly fortunate in coming out with the budget amount on the space agency.

With respect to the Committee on Intergovernmental Relations, both the chairman of the committee and I were very insistent that we add money to the item or retain the amount the Senate had added. However, the House was absolutely adamant in their opposition. I think we came out of conference with a situation which will allow a program of progress.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate, numbered 44, to the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today, p. 15498, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, all items in the bill have been agreed to heretofore except one Senate amendment. In conference the House declined to accept the Senate amendment, and the Senate was therefore forced to recede and to carry it over to next year. It pertains solely to the old Senate Chamber and its restoration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I assume this is the unanimous report of the conferees.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The House would not agree to go forward with the restoration of the old Supreme Court Room. I can only say that I hope the Senator from Mississippi will retain his interest in the bill, as well as the Senator from Arizona. I intend to do likewise. We hope to stimulate further interest in the matter.

Mr. STENNIS. We will be able to accomplish it with the help of the Senator from Massachusetts, I am sure.

I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the amount of the budget estimates, the amount of the House bill, the amount of the Senate bill, and the conference figures be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INCORPORATION OF BLUE STAR MOTHERS OF AMERICA, INC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1315) for the incorporation of the Blue Star Mothers of America, Inc., which were, on page 2, after line 18, insert "It shall be the duty of the persons named in this section, jointly and severally, to file with the Superintendent of Corporations of the District of Columbia a copy of this Act within fifteen days after the date of its enactment."; on page 7, line 2, after "process" insert ", notice, or demand"; on page 7, strike out lines 3 through 5, inclusive, and insert "service of such process, notice, or demand required or permitted by law to be served upon the corporation may be served upon such agent. The corporation shall file with the Superintendent of Corporations of the District of Columbia a statement designating the initial and each successor registered agent of the corporation and the initial and each successor registered office of the corporation immediately following any such designation. As used in this Act the term 'Superintendent of Corporations of the District of Columbia' means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or any agent designated by them to perform the functions vested by this Act in the Superintendent of Corporations.", and on page 8, line 22, strike out all after "annually" down through and including "standards." in line 24, and insert: "in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards by an independent licensed or certified public accountant or a firm of independent licensed or certified public accountants."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have discussed the matter with members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary who are interested in this legislation, and I believe that the Senate should concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I inquire whether this merely adds the Blue Star Mothers to the resolution?

Mr. WILEY. The first amendment provides:

It shall be the duty of the persons named in this section, jointly and severally, to file with the Superintendent of Corporations of the District of Columbia a copy of this act within 15 days after the date of its enactment.

The second amendment provides:

The corporation shall file with the Superintendent of Corporations of the District of Columbia a statement designating the initial and each successor registered agent of the corporation and the initial and each successor registered office of the corporation immediately following any such designation.

The third amendment provides:

The financial transactions of the corporation shall be audited annually in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards by an independent licensed or certified public accountant or firm of independent licensed or certified public accountants.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to.

COORDINATED SYSTEM OF TRANSPORTATION FOR NATIONAL CAPITAL AREA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11135) to aid in the development of a coordinated system of transportation for the National Capital region; to create a temporary National Capital Transportation Agency; to authorize negotiation to create an interstate agency; and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today, p. 15493, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, the conference resolved four major differences:

To encourage the development of rapid transit, any construction of new freeways or major parkways in a sector of Northwest Washington is prohibited until July 1, 1965. The Transportation Agency will submit before then its recommendations on the need for these controversial and expensive facilities. In this matter, the House had proposed more stringent limitations.

Transit development proposals offered by the Agency will require express authorization by Congress, rather than merely appropriation action, as had been thought sufficient in the Senate bill.

The Agency will not operate transit facilities until Congress shall have established a labor relations policy, as required in the Senate version of the bill. The House conferees also agreed that transit workers' unions shall have the opportunity to review and comment on the transit development program which the Agency shall prepare.

Finally, the conference managers concluded that determinations with respect to any tax exemption of D.C. Transit resulting from its program of converting streetcar to bus facilities shall remain in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission, right where it is now.

The resulting bill is one which I can fully endorse as reflecting the best efforts of the conference.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nevada has given much time and effort to this particular matter. I speak with some knowledge of the time and effort which would be required to submit a conference report on a matter which involved as many items of controversy as does this particular bill. I commend the Senator from Nevada and his associates for the work they have done.

The Senator has alluded to the four points of controversy in conference. Would the Senator state briefly what the bill will do?

Mr. BIBLE. I am happy to do so. I was about to develop the subject of the resolution of the four points in controversy.

The first point resolved was to stay major highway and parkway construction in the so-called Wisconsin Avenue Corridor until July 1, 1965. The testimony was very clear that there would be no road construction in this area for a period of from 5 to 10 years.

The second area of difference between the Senate and the House bills centered around the necessary authorization by Congress. The House of Representatives took the position that there should be statutory authorization by Congress. The Senate version required simply an appropriation. Those who have followed this particular problem will see that the debate in the House was rather acute and keen on this particular point. The Senate conferees receded from their position and agreed to the House amendment. This means that as the program is implemented and carried forward, it will have both the authorization of a special legislative act and an appropriation, as well.

The third point—and it was one which was raised by the amendment of the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]—was one which required Congress to establish a labor relations policy before this agency actually started operating facilities. This amendment was agreed to by the House of Representatives.

On the fourth point, the conference managers concluded that determinations with respect to any tax exemption of the D.C. Transit System, resulting from its program of converting streetcars to bus facilities, shall remain in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission, where it is now.

Those are the four points of difference which were resolved as I have just indicated.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. With the resolution of those four points of difference, what does the bill do? Does it authorize the creation of an authority to set in motion a rapid transit system for the District of Columbia?

Mr. BIBLE. The bill authorizes the creation of a transportation agency, to be headed by an administrator and a deputy administrator to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The agency will have the benefit of an advisory committee of five members. The transportation agency is charged with designing and engineering a rapid transit system for the National Capital region. It must then report back to Congress for specific authorization, before it can move forward in the field of mass transit development. The agency is specifically charged with the duty of making use of existing rail and bus facilities.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is for plans or the designing of plans.

Mr. BIBLE. That is for designing, planning, and drawing specifications.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The authorization of appropriations was limited to the amount which would be necessary for the creation of the transportation agency and the preparation and engineering of its plans, but no funds for construction are authorized unless there could be subsequent legislation.

Mr. BIBLE. That is a correct statement. Specific authorization would be required by Congress, based upon the plans, designs, and specifications to be submitted by the transportation agency.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that I personally regret the freeze on highway construction in the northwest part of the city is made as long as it is. It is true that funds are not available under the present program for construction within the next 5 years of an interstate or turnpike connection. However, until that matter is settled, there will be some uncertainty in the minds of property owners, developers, business interests, schools, hospitals, and churches centering upon just where the connection for interstate route 70–S will come into the city.

Therefore, I hope that if the Maryland Public Roads Commission and the District Highway Department should reach agreement on a suggested route in order to provide a highway within the prohibited area, and should submit it to the Bureau of Public Roads or the Secretary of Commerce, consideration could be given at that time to lifting the restrictions.

Mr. BIBLE. I am certain that can be done. As a matter of fact, the bill now before the Senate requires that a report be made to Congress not later than November 1, 1962. It is possible that this problem might be resolved by that time and be included in the report. Then Congress could act accordingly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am not critical of the result of the conference, because I recognize that it is necessary to reach some compromise. When the bill was passed, I hoped the Senate's position might have been accepted. But I think a reasonable compromise has resulted. I have stated what I have, however, as a matter of legislative record, so that if any disagreement should arise between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland with respect to the interstate highway connection, it could be said that that was not entirely foreclosed, or that there is a possibility it is not yet foreclosed, by the action taken.

Mr. BIBLE. I hope the transportation agency will give top priority to the northwest section in an attempt to resolve that very difficult problem.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is one other aspect of the report which I should mention, and that is that the contemplated highway through the Glover-Archbold Parkway, which has been proposed, might, I hope, be unfrozen. That matter is presently in the courts. If the courts resolve the legal questions involved, that project might be freed also. There again, my statement is an expression that if the courts should come to a resolution of the legal points involved, that fact would be noted by the agency in its study, and that matter might receive separate and special attention.

Mr. BIBLE. I think the agency certainly could take proper recognition of such action.

Mr. President, I fully and wholeheartedly endorse the bill. I think it is a step in the right direction. It moves into the field of mass transportation in the Washington metropolitan area.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 12475) for the relief of Claude L. Wimberly, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 598. An act for the relief of Anthony Di Giovanni;

S. 1409. An act for the relief of Donald B. Thurston and other employees of the Fish and Wildlife Service;

S. 1454. An act for the relief of Keitha L. Baker;

S. 1965. An act to make uniform provisions of law with respect to the terms of office of the members of certain regulatory agencies;

S. 2197. An act to protect the public health by amending the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act so as to authorize the use of suitable color additives in or on foods, drugs, and cosmetics, in accordance with regulations prescribing the conditions (including maximum tolerances) under which such additives may be safely used; and

S. 3125. An act for the relief of Robert William Neal, Robert J. Naumann, Charles LeRoy Van Slyke, and Franklin Jordan.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 12475) for the relief of Claude L. Wimberly, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COLOR ADDITIVE AMENDMENTS OF 1960

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday concurred in the amendment of the House to S. 2197, to protect the public health by amending the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. On that motion, I ask recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think it is essential that the record be made clear upon this measure. It was approved in my absence yesterday, but quite in good faith on the part of those who may probably have believed that I had agreed to it, although I actually had not agreed to it.

The bill proposes to amend the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act by providing that color additives and various types of food, drugs, and cosmetics should be subject to the same tests as other substances which are covered by another law.

The main problem which is raised in respect to all this legislation occurs in paragraph B of section 706 of the law, which deals with substances which may induce cancer in man or animal.

This is a very serious matter, of course, and it properly commends itself to our grave concern.

By means of this measure the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is not only given broad authority, but is given mandatory direction, to see that any color additive which, upon tests of man or animals, is found to have this effect, or if it is found that it could possibly have this effect, is barred from use.

Those who manufacture pharmaceuticals and have very substantial employment and very substantial plants in the State of New York, take very serious exception to feasibility of this kind of very strict and mandatory standard, from the point of view of whether it can be carried out without so greatly inhibiting normal and perfectly safe practices in the pharmaceutical industry as to very seriously hurt their businesses.

In that connection, we have a very important piece of evidence, because this subject has been examined at the White House level; and in that connection I read now from a statement issued on May 14 from the White House:

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1960.

The White House today made public the report of a study of certain aspects of the use of chemicals and drugs as food additives, which the President requested to be made by the Departments of Agriculture, and Health, Education, and Welfare, and the President's Science Advisory Committee.

In making this study, the Science Advisory Committee convened a special panel of experts and consulted scientists from the Agriculture, and Health, Education, and Welfare Departments and also outside Government circles.

Findings of the study were approved by the President's Special Assistant for Science and Technology, Dr. George B. Kistiakowsky, and also concurred in by the Departments of Agriculture, and Health, Education, and Welfare.

The report describes the complex nature of the scientific issues involved in protecting the food supply from added cancer-producing substances. It suggests areas of research and also recommends improved administrative procedures.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the conclusions and recommendations set forth in the report.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The rapidly increasing number of new chemicals potentially useful in agriculture and food production demand vigilant and careful scrutiny of the compounds offered in order to safeguard the consumer from those that may present carcinogenic and other toxic hazards.

In applying the provisions of section 409(c)(3) of the Food Additives Amendment of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the enforcing agency must employ the "rule of reason"[1] based on scientific judgment in order to carry out the intent of the Congress to protect the public from the possibility of increasing cancer risks through the diet.

The definition of a carcinogen implicit in the language of section 409(c) requires discretion in its interpretation because so many variables enter into a judgment as to whether a particular substance is or is not carcinogenic.

It is to be emphasized that the present difficulty in establishing whether there are permissible levels for certain possibly carcinogenic food additives is accentuated by the limited relevant scientific information available. From the experience obtained in animal experiments and study of humans who have been exposed to carcinogens in the course of their work such as cited above, the panel believes that the probability of cancer induction from a particular carcinogen in minute doses may be eventually assessed by weighing scientific evidence as it becomes available.

[1] "Every statute must be interpreted in the light of reason and common understanding to reach the results intended by the legislature." Opinion handed down by Chief Justice Warren in Rathburn v. U.S. (355 U.S. 107 at 109).

The special emphasis placed by the Congress on the protection of the public from the dangers resulting from the addition of possible carcinogens to food calls for prudent administration of section 409(c) of the Food Additives Amendment of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. Since an area of administrative discretion based on the rule of reason is unavoidable if the clause is to be workable, it is essential that this discretion be based on the most informed and expert scientific advice available. Until the causes of carcinogensis are better understood, each situation must be judged in the light of all applicable evidence. In this way the protection of public health can best be assured.

Accordingly, the following recommendations are made:

1. That the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare appoint a board advisory to him to assist in the evaluation of scientific evidence on the basis of which decisions have to be made prohibiting or permitting the use of certain possibly carcinogenic compounds.

The advisory board should be composed of scientists from the National Cancer Institute, the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and the scientists outside of Government from a panel nominated by the National Academy of Sciences.

It would be the function of the board to weigh evidence and to make recommendations to the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on the basis of available scientific data, both on applications for approval of new food additives and in all cases where the withdrawal of a prior approval or sanction is under consideration. The board would consider among other matters:

(a) whether or not the tests for carcinogenicity are appropriate and reasonable,

(b) whether the substance is or is not in reality carcinogenic as determined histopathologically or by other criteria,

(c) whether addition of the substance to agricultural products would result in a concentration of the substance above the natural background level of such substance,

(d) what assay techniques are appropriate to determine whether a specific carcinogen is present in food.

It would also be the function of this board to review from time to time its recommendations and to modify them in the light of new scientific knowledge. Further, the board would assume the responsibility of recommending to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare specific research problems to be undertaken to provide necessary scientific data.

2. If existing legislation does not permit the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to exercise discretion consistent with the recommendations of this report, it is recommended that appropriate modifications in the law be sought.

3. Because of the limited scientific information available relevant to the effects of possible carcinogenic food additives, it is recommended that:

(a) Proportionately greater emphasis be placed by Government agencies on the study of representative carcinogens in a variety of animal species in an attempt to define dose-response relations. It must be recognized from the very nature of such research that definitive answers useful in extrapolation to man may not be expected for many years to come. The applicability of such research to the problems discussed in this report will be furthered by studies carried out on large groups of animals.

(b) Studies be increased on the possible carcinogenic action of substances to which numbers of individuals have been regularly exposed and that these studies be related to the incidence of cancer in the exposed individuals. Retrospective studies should also be made of patients who have received a variety of chemical compounds, in the course of treatment of disease, which are subsequently suspected of being carcinogenic.

4. Research be expanded also by the Department of Agriculture, by the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, and by industry to discover additional safe and effective materials for the production and processing of foods.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the substance of the conclusions set forth in the report is that it states that authority such as that conferred by the amendment—and I have moved to have the vote on the amendment reconsidered—should be used and applied within the "rule of reason." It is intimated that otherwise the measure could be applied very arbitrarily and would not work out in the way its authors intended or in the way they designed it to work.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. JAVITS. Of course.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, this matter has been of considerable interest to me. I have discussed it with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. He says that even if the Delaney amendment were deleted from the legislation, they would still have to apply that general principle, and that they do apply it on the advice of the National Institutes of Health.

They tell me that both the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and private industries can live with this legislation, and that the rule of reason will prevail. I think that is the manner in which most of those who have come to discuss it, particularly the advisers of some of the commercial interests, have approached it.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator from Illinois. I point out that the assurance the Senator from Illinois has just given us, and which I hope very much will be joined in by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], is a caveat to our own agency to apply the rule of reason. I yield to no one in my anxiety to have the law applied to the full, in terms of public health and safety. But at the same time we do not want the application of the law to "go overboard". We wish it to be fair.

So I have moved that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, in order to afford an opportunity to make a matter of record this position on the part of the Government agencies.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, after consultations with Secretary Flemming, of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, I wish to state that I agree with what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], has said. I also wish to state that the report of the group of scientists, under date of May 14, 1960, to which the Senator from New York has referred, did not recommend repeal of the Delaney amendment, as that amendment is now carried in the Food Additives Act of 1958, but did recommend that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare appoint a board, advisory to him, to assist in the evaluation of scientific evidence, on the basis of which decisions have to be made as to prohibiting or permitting the use of certain carcinogenic compounds.

I may say that the amendment to which we agreed last night not only provides for such an advisory board—they use the term "advisory committee," but an advisory board is the same thing—but gives to anyone who may feel that he needs some redress the right to have such an advisory committee consider the matter.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama then join in the assurance given by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], namely, that, fully consistent with health and safety—and all of us are absolutely committed to guarding and safeguarding them in every possible way, he, too, feels that the legislative record here should show clearly that the recommendation as to the application of the rule of reason by the enforcing agency is expected to be applied?

Mr. HILL. I would say so.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Alabama proposes to move to lay on the table the motion——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the remarks of the Senator from New York. But following his remarks, I intend to make that motion.

Mr. JAVITS. I shall conclude my remarks in just a moment.

I understand that the Senator from Alabama will move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, as if it had been done on yesterday.

Again, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Alabama. I think among all the chairmen of Senate committees, the Senator from Alabama needs yield to no one as regards his fairness and his very great consideration for all of us who serve with him.

Because we had these objections from those who have a serious interest in the matter, and because it was possible to make the record clear without prejudicing the legislation—certainly I never would wish to do that—I am grateful to him for having facilitated this effort.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for his very kind and generous remarks. Certainly no member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is more cooperative or more helpful in connection with matters pertaining to the health of the people than is the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, Representative DELANEY has fought a long, hard battle in connection with this matter. I know him very well; he is from New York. I think all of us are indebted to him, too, for the way in which he has carried on this effort to assure the health of the people, as regards the use of these substances.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to lay on the table the motion that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TOMMY MORGANO

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, this resolution calls for the approval by the Senate for a member of the staff of the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field to testify in Kentland, Ind., in State court, concerning a criminal case growing out of the work of the committee in that State.

By Senate Resolution No. 255, section 5, the files of the select committee were placed in custody of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations. This situation demonstrates one of the reasons why I sought such a disposition of the select committee files.

There is pending in the Newton Circuit Court in Kentland, Ind., criminal action, alleging attempted bribery, against Tommy Morgano. Morgano appeared before the select committee and invoked the fifth amendment to all questions pertinent to the activities about which the committee inquired.

Charges have been brought against Morgano by local authorities, and one of the witnesses deemed necessary by the prosecuting attorney is Mr. Richard G. Sinclair, a staff member of the select committee who has now returned to his permanent position at the General Accounting Office. In addition to Mr. Sinclair's testimony, the prosecuting attorney has requested certain evidence contained in the files relating to that investigation.

This resolution seeks authority from the Senate to permit Mr. Sinclair to testify and to present pertinent evidence from the select committee files now in the possession of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 349) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations has in its possession, by virtue of S. Res. 255, section 5, certain evidence pertaining to an investigation dealing with Tommy Morgano in the State of Indiana; which investigation was conducted by the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field under S. Res. 44; and,

Whereas the matter of the State of Indiana against Tommy Morgano, a criminal action now pending in the Newton Circuit Court at Kentland, Indiana, charges said Tommy Morgano with attempted bribery; and

Whereas the Prosecuting Attorney of the Sixty-seventh Judicial District of Indiana has requested the production of evidence in the possession of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations in this matter, and has requested that Richard G. Sinclair, formerly an investigator for the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field and presently an investigator for the U.S. General Accounting Office, to appear and testify in the above proceedings; and

Whereas by the privileges of the Senate, no member or Senate employee is authorized to produce Senate documents but by order of the Senate; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Senate Committee on Government Operations is granted leave to permit the copying and presentation of certain evidence for examination in connection with the aforementioned court case, the evidence thereupon to be returned to the possession of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations; and be it further

Resolved, That Richard G. Sinclair, an investigator formerly employed by the Senate, is authorized to appear and testify in the above mentioned proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the preamble is agreed to.

TEMPORARY AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN SUPPLEMENTAL AIR TRANSPORTATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7593) to provide that the Civil Aeronautics Board may temporarily authorize certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of July 2, 1960, p. 15760, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, this bill is almost identical with the bill that passed the Senate, except, instead of a 24-month temporary extension, the agreement with the House provides for a 20-month temporary extension of the act. There was one other minor change, the word "and" to "or".

I ask that the report be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF DUTIES ON METAL SCRAP—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11748) to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11748) to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes, having met after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

CECIL R. KING,
N. M. MASON,
JOHN W. BYRNES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the amendments to this bill which were adopted by the Senate were all retained. The Senate conferees were united and firm and insisted on their amendments and the House receded on all points.

One of the amendments had to do with the use of certain oil products used in vessels going between the mainland and the States of Hawaii and Alaska. I am authorized by the conference committee to state that the amendment is not intended to change the status existing under the mandatory oil import program. The conferees were assured by the Department of Defense that the mandatory oil import program will not be affected by the amendment.

I ask that the conference report be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXEMPTION FROM INCOME TAX FOR SUPPLEMENTAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT TRUSTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, having met after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

W. D. MILLS,
AIME J. FORAND,
CECIL R. KING,
N. M. MASON,
JOHN W. BYRNES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the conferees met this morning on H.R. 8229, a bill to provide a new alternative rule for granting income tax exemption to supplemental unemployment benefit trusts and made the following agreements:

The House receded from its disagreement to all the Senate amendments relating to the subject matter of the bill. The Senate was forced by the opposition of the House conferees to recede from its amendment, offered by Senator CASE, which would have exempted from income tax certain nurses registration organizations or associations. The House conferees felt this amendment was not relevant to the subject matter of the bill and refused to accept it.

With respect to supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendments to insure that this new provision is not the exclusive rule providing for income tax exemption of supplemental unemployment benefit trusts. Trusts which qualify for income tax exemption under the present law may continue to do so. Trusts that do not meet the requirements of present law may seek exemption under the new category created by the bill. As agreed to by the conferees, the bill will apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1959.

I ask that the report be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF TITLE 3 OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and myself, to call up calendar No. 1895, H.R. 6871, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 6871) to amend title 3 of the Public Health Service Act, to authorize project grants for graduate training in public health, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I understand that the bill which is before us is the bill as reported out of committee by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare; that this is not the House bill, which had some provisions in it with which I would take very sharp exception. I ask the Senator to confirm that statement.

The Senator did confer with me. I know the bill is very much needed. I was called up by the Commissioner of Health of the State of New York, reiterating the need. I would have opposed the bill had it been before us in the form in which it came from the House.

Mr. HILL. May I say to the Senator the bill was reported with a committee amendment which removes the objectionable language and contains the language which, as I understand, was submitted to the Senator from New York, and was agreed to by the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague. I wanted the record to be clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare with an amendment to strike out lines 9, on page 1, through line 25, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 309. The Surgeon General may make project grants, recommended by the advisory committee appointed pursuant to section 306(d), to schools of public health, and to those schools of nursing or engineering which provide graduate or specialized training in public health for nurses or engineers, for the purpose of strengthening or expanding graduate public health training in such schools. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for making such grants not to exceed $2,000,000 for each fiscal year in the period beginning July 1, 1960, and ending June 30, 1965."

(b) The first sentence of subsection (d) of section 306 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 212d) is amended by inserting "and section 309" after "this section" and by adding before the period at the end thereof "and including, in the case of section 309, certification to the Surgeon General of projects which it has reviewed and approved".

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the purpose of H.R. 6871 as it passed the House of Representatives is the same as S. 3454 which I introduced for myself and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA] on April 29, 1960.

The intent of the legislation is to expand and strengthen graduate public health training by authorizing a new 5-year program of project grants not to exceed $2 million annually to schools of public health and to those schools of nursing and engineering which provide graduate or specialized training in public health. It would also extend the present authority of the Surgeon General to make grants-in-aid not to exceed $1 million annually to schools of public health.

There is an urgent need for strengthening, increasing, and improving the teaching programs providing graduate or specialized public health training in this country. A recent survey disclosed that more than 20,000 professional personnel now employed in public health agencies do not have the public health training they need to provide the public health protection for people which is possible in the context of today's technological and scientific developments. In addition, it was found that there were more than 2,500 vacancies in professional positions due to lack of trained personnel to fill them.

It is clear that graduate and specialized public health training programs must be expanded and improved to prepare personnel more adequately and in greater numbers if we are to meet the staffing needs of new and emerging public health problems. These new and expanded public health activities would include, among others, such programs as those for chronic disease and aging, radiological health, rehabilitation, cancer, heart, and mental health.

The Senate amendment is intended to clarify the language of the House bill. This is made necessary by the House limitation of $2 million for each fiscal year of the 5-year program. Under the bill as introduced in the Senate the authorization was not specified, and language was included to permit grants to be made for projects to extend over more than 1 year. The $2 million limitation in the House bill makes such an approach unworkable and therefore the language of the Senate amendment is offered, at the suggestion of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, to simplify and clarify the operation of the program.

Other technical amendments refer to necessary changes in references to section numbers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 6871) was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1960

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I send to the desk for appropriate referral a bill to be known as the Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1960.

It is the purpose of this bill to provide sufficient additional public revenues to enable the next administration to meet the country's manifold needs—the needs of national security, of social and economic progress, of debt retirement, and of our responsibilities in the world. Spending measures approved and to be approved by the 86th Congress necessitate passage of new revenue measures if a budget surplus is to be achieved in fiscal 1961 and deficit financing avoided. The additional revenues needed can be gained by correcting inequities in the tax structure which favor the few at the expense of the many.

The six sections of the bill will raise, if the bill is passed, approximately $2,620 million of additional revenue, without doing the slightest injustice to any taxpayer.

Mr. President, a similar bill is being introduced in the House of Representatives today by my colleague from Pennsylvania, the Honorable JAMES QUIGLEY, who happens to be the Representative in Congress for President Eisenhower, for he serves the Gettysburg area.

I hope when the Congress returns in August that not only the Finance Committee of the Senate but also the Ways and Means Committee of the House will promptly schedule hearings on this bill and that we may pass it before we adjourn at the end of summer, in order to assure a balanced budget and the ability to make a substantial payment upon the national debt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3806) to increase the public revenues, introduced by Mr. CLARK, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Will the Senator briefly enumerate the tax measures which would be involved and how much money would be raised?

Mr. CLARK. I shall be happy to do so.

Section 3 deals with the dividend-credit repeal, which is a provision passed by the Senate under the able leadership of the junior Senator from Minnesota. That would yield $355 million.

Section 4 covers the business-expense-deduction amendment, sponsored by me earlier this week, which I have called the anti-swindle-sheet amendment. This would yield a minimum of $250 million. The Senator will recall that we passed the amendment in the Senate.

Next, there is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, relating to withholding for dividends and interest. I believe the Senator thought this would raise at least $1.1 billion.

There is the oil- and gas-depletion amendment, which involves some $400 million.

There is also the amendment which I offered, dealing with capital-gains limitation, which would bring in another $500 million.

There is, in addition, the repeal of the 14-point Western Hemisphere Trade Corporation preference, which would yield some $15 million.

Mr. PROXMIRE. If the Senator will yield for another minute, I wish to congratulate the Senator on his proposal.

I know this is a sincere effort on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania to permit the Senate to act with fiscal responsibility.

As I understand the proposal, it would raise more than $2 billion?

Mr. CLARK. Two billion six hundred and twenty million dollars plus.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Two billion six hundred and twenty million dollars.

Today we passed a measure which will cost several hundred millions of dollars. As the Senator from Pennsylvania knows, in the last few days we very substantially increased Federal spending. We agreed to a conference report last night involving a great deal of money. We have other legislation pending which will add to expenditures.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania makes all the sense in the world. I realize, as I am sure the Senator realizes, that he has a long hill to climb. We must keep hammering away at this issue until the American people are aroused by the gross injustices and inequities and until they respond to the opportunity to raise substantial revenues, or else we cannot accomplish this good purpose. It is going to be extremely difficult to achieve our desired end, but I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is proceeding in the only way it can be done, by offering this kind of a proposal and by keeping at it until we can make some progress.

Mr. CLARK. I thank my friend for his very helpful interjection.

Mr. President, I wish to turn to a discussion of another matter, and I propose to make quite a long speech. I should be quite willing, however, to yield at any time during that speech to the majority leader or to other Senators, if my friends will agree that I shall not lose my right to the floor in so doing, because I wish to complete my speech before we adjourn tonight.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I wish to accept his generous offer at this moment, with that understanding.

There is an important supplemental appropriation bill to be considered.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania may yield so that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] may call up the supplemental appropriation bill, which needs to go to conference, with the understanding that when action is concluded upon the bill the Senator from Pennsylvania may resume his speech. I hope it will not be a long speech, because there are one or two other important speeches to be made. I request unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania not lose the floor by so doing.

Mr. CLARK. I thank my friend from Texas. I shall be glad to yield from time to time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCARTHY and Mr. KEFAUVER addressed the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, may the Senator from Arizona be recognized, to call up the appropriation bill?

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1961 (S. REPT. NO. 1832)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report House bill 12740, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 12740) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the supplemental appropriation bill which is now before the Senate, H.R. 12740, carries appropriations recommended by the committee in the amount of $1,068,740,000. This is an increase of $111,330,540 over the House bill. The bulk of this large increase is the $73,600,000 which the committee has recommended for the International Development Association, which was not included in the House bill. Thirty-three million dollars was included by the committee for forest highways and public lands highways. Likewise, this sum was not in the House bill.

Mr. President, I have a detailed table before me which shows the individual increases made by the committee, should any Senator desire any additional details.

I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc except the committee amendment on page 12 of the bill, lines 1 through 7, and that the bill as thus amended be regarded for purposes of amendment as original text; provided that no point of order shall be considered to have been waived by reason of agreement to this request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART in the chair). Will the Senator from Arizona restate his request?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc, except the committee amendment on page 12 of the bill, lines 1 through 7; and that the bill as thus amended be regarded for purposes of amendment as original text; provided that no point of order shall be considered to have been waived by reason of agreement to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments agreed to en bloc are as follows:

On page 2, after line 5, to strike out "For construction of an Entomology Laboratory, $500,000."

After line 7, to insert "For an additional amount for 'Construction of Facilities', $5,200,000."

After line 9, to insert:

SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

Watershed protection

"For an additional amount for 'Watershed Protection', $1,800,000."

After line 13, to insert:

"Flood prevention

"For an additional amount for 'Flood Prevention', $1,570,000, for the purposes of Public Law 86-486."

After line 16, to insert:

"AGRICULTURAL MARKETING SERVICE

"Marketing research and service

"For an additional amount for 'Marketing research and service', for Marketing services, $1,350,000."

On page 3, after line 8, to insert:

"BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS

"Forest highways (liquidation of contract authorization)

"For payment of obligations incurred in carrying out the provisions of title 23, United States Code, section 204, pursuant to contract authorization granted by title 23, United States Code, section 203, to remain available until expended, $30,000,000, which sum is composed of $29,250,000, the remainder of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1960, and $750,000, a part of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1961: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental, purchase, construction, or alteration of buildings and sites necessary for the storage and repair of equipment and supplies used for road construction and maintenance but the total cost of any such item under this authorization shall not exceed $15,000."

At the top of page 4, to insert:

"Public lands highways (liquidation of contract authorization)

"For payment of obligations incurred in carrying out the provisions of title 23, United States Code, section 209, pursuant to the contract authorization granted by title 23, United States Code, section 203, to remain available until expended, $3,000,000, which sum is the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1961."

On page 10, after line 13, to insert "Senate."

After line 14, to insert:

"Salaries, officers and employees

"For an additional amount for administrative and clerical assistants to Senators, to provide additional clerical assistants for each Senator from the State of California so that the allowances of Senators from said State will be equal to that allowed Senators from States having a population of over fifteen million, the population of said State having exceeded fifteen million inhabitants, $13,200."

After line 22, to insert:

"CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

"Joint Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies of 1961

"For salaries and expenses of conducting the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice President of the United States, January 20, 1961, in accordance with such program as may be adopted by the Joint Committee authorized by concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, $250,000."

On page 11, after line 5, to insert:

"Miscellaneous items

"For an additional amount, fiscal year 1960, for 'Miscellaneous items', $205,640."

After line 18, to strike out:

"ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

"For an amount, additional to amounts heretofore appropriated, for acquisition of property for additions to the United States Capitol Grounds pursuant to section 1202 of Public Law 24, Eighty-fourth Congress, approved April 22, 1955, as approved by the House Office Building Commission, $5,000,000."

And, on page 12, after line 8, to insert:

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

"Subscription to the International Development Association

"For payment of the first installment of the subscription of the United States to the International Development Association, $73,666,700, to remain available until expended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment on page 12 will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, it is proposed to strike out lines 1 through 7.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, may we have action on the amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 12. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the amount in the bill on page 12, line 6, be increased to $5,256,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$225,000" and to insert in lieu thereof $5,256,000".

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to carry out the authorization contained in H.R. 12263, recently passed, for the construction by the United States in Mexico of an international storage dam pursuant to the terms of the Mexican water treaty of 1944. In view of the importance of this project, the committee felt it necessary that financial resources should be made available as quickly as possible.

Five million dollars of the amount was contained in the State, Justice, Judiciary appropriation bill which was passed last evening, carrying an appropriation for the International Boundary and Water Commission. Since that bill is not going to conference, and since there will be considerable delay, we have concluded, after conferring with Members of the House of Representatives, with the distinguished minority leader, and with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. HAYDEN], that it was best to put the item in the supplemental appropriation bill, which will go to conference and will have final action, so as not to delay the work.

This will not increase the amount which will be spent in any regard. It will simply confirm the action taken last night.

In addition, there is an item of $256,000 which involves a matter the very able Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] would like to discuss at this time.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, will my friend yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, last night the able majority leader did accept an amendment which I offered and which is sponsored by the Bureau of the Budget and by the administration, requesting $256,000 for construction of—and I quote from the Bureau of the Budget report—

> Facilities to furnish protection for residents of the United States from the effects of inadequately treated sewage originating in Tijuana, Baja California, Mexico. It is essential that remedial action be taken at the earliest possible date to provide relief from critical health hazards and monetary losses in San Diego County, Calif.
> I recommend that the foregoing proposed supplemental appropriations be transmitted to the Congress.

Under the circumstances there is an urgency to eliminate an extremely hazardous public health problem by the construction of appropriate sewage disposal facilities in San Diego County.

This includes the need to acquire property on which such facilities may be constructed. Once again I am grateful to the majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I think there is merit in what the Senator has said. We accepted his amendment last night, and there is no reason to have it delayed further.

Mr. KUCHEL. I hope the amendment I have proposed will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the veto of the pay bill has been overridden by the Senate and the House and thus becomes law. The committee has been advised that an additional provision in the supplemental appropriation bill will be necessary, in view of the overriding of this veto.

Authority must be granted to apportion funds on a basis indicating the need for supplemental estimates of appropriations to the extent necessary to permit payment of pay increases for employees whose rates of compensation are fixed by administrative action pursuant to law.

I offer an appropriate amendment to take care of this situation, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13 after line 6 it is proposed to insert:

GENERAL PROVISION

Appropriations, authorizations, and funds available to the departments, agencies, corporations, and the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year 1961, may be apportioned pursuant to section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, on a basis indicating the need for supplemental estimates of appropriation to the extent necessary to permit payment of pay increases (not exceeding the corresponding increases provided by the "Postal Employees' Salary Increase Act of 1960" and the "Federal Employees Salary Increase Act of 1960") for employees whose rates of compensation are fixed by administrative action pursuant to law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, though I have not seen it before, it provides for the apportionment of the new pay raise increase so that when we come to the first of the year, the amendment contains the predicate for the supplemental estimates that will be submitted in order to carry out in full the terms of the Pay Increase Act.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator has stated the situation correctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman is familiar with the request of the Department of the Interior, included in the President's proposal to the Congress, recommending $300,000 in Federal matching funds to initiate the cooperative geologic mapping survey of Kentucky. The State has appropriated a total of $900,000 for the biannum.

I had asked the chairman for an opportunity to appear in support of this project before his committee, as I am sure the Department of the Interior also wishes to do. The Lieutenant Governor of my State, the Honorable Wilson W. Wyatt, has written the chairman explaining the need for prompt action to initiate this program, which is vital to the basic development of my State.

I know that the committee is reporting this bill without prejudice to those items which could not be considered because we are recessing, and that additional hearings will be held in August. I ask only if it is correct that at that time there will be an opportunity for Senator MORTON and me to appear, and for the committee to hear Governor Wyatt on this matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Kentucky is entirely correct. It was not possible due to the lateness of the session to hear testimony on all the budget requests, which include the Federal funds for the Kentucky geological mapping survey.

The committee will be glad to hear him at hearings in August, and Governor Wyatt and other officials of the State of Kentucky and others who may be interested.

The bill presented today is recommended without prejudice to the items which remain to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Alaska [Mr. BARTLETT], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LUSK], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. BARTLETT], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LUSK], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 90, nays 2, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 12740) was passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. HART in the chair) appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observes that pursuant to an agreement under which the bill was taken up, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] was to resume the floor following the action on the bill. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania is not in the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the Senate has just passed an appropriation bill upon which hearings were completed only this morning. The approved bill was not even printed. No report was available to the Senate. I doubt that there is a Member of the Senate except members of the committee who knows what is contained in the bill which was just passed. This is an irresponsible way to enact legislation. I think it is time for Congress to adjourn and go home.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the bill was reported by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The bill was reported only an hour ago, and there is no printed bill nor any report.

AMENDMENT OF THE HELIUM ACT OF MARCH 3, 1925—PRINTING OF REPORT

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, last evening there was discussion of the committee report on the so-called helium bill. The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL] had not had an opportunity to study the report. I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Colorado may have 5 days in which to file supplemental views, should he care to do so, with reference to Calendar No. 1884 (H.R. 10548).

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor and he yielded to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARK. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Texas, but I had not intended to yield to every other Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, every Senator who has addressed the Chair has assured me that he had only a simple request to make.

Mr. CLARK. I am in the hands of my friend from Texas, who I know will protect me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] has proposed that the junior Senator from Colorado shall have 5 days in which to file supplemental views. I infer from his request that no effort will be made to get action on the helium bill prior to the recess.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is my thought. It is up to the leadership to make the decision, but I hope the leadership will not call up the bill during the intervening period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New Mexico is agreed to.

PADRE ISLAND NATIONAL SEASHORE PARK IS EMERGENCY LEGISLATION TO KEEP AMERICA'S LONGEST UNMARRED BEACH OPEN TO THE PEOPLE

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, 2 years and 3 days have passed since it was my privilege to introduce my original bill providing for creation of a National Seashore Park on Padre Island. During that period literally hundreds of organizations and tens of thousands of people have joined in support of this proposed project to preserve America's longest, southernmost unmarred beach for all Americans. Because it is a sound project and so many are working together for its completion, considerable progress has been made.

Among Government officials who are supporting establishment of Padre Island National Seashore Park are President Eisenhower, Interior Secretary Seaton, and National Park Service Director Conrad Wirth. And Senate Majority Leader LYNDON JOHNSON, the two Congressmen from that area of the gulf coast, Representatives JOE KILGORE and JOHN YOUNG, and most other Members of the Texas delegation in Washington, have expressed their support in varying degree.

On the State level, Gov. Price Daniel has given his approval and quite recently the Beach Study Committee of the Texas Legislature, headed by Senator Bob Baker, of Houston, and Representative Ben Glusing, of Kleberg County, passed a resolution approving the proposed Padre Island National Seashore Park. During the last session of the Texas Legislature, preliminary enabling legislation was passed to permit establishment of the proposed seashore area, a very necessary step.

Another significant development was public hearings on the proposed project which were held in Corpus Christi late last year by a Senate Subcommittee on Interior and Insular Affairs headed by the able and distinguished Senator from Utah, Senator FRANK MOSS. Park Service Director Wirth described the hearings as one of the most successful he had ever attended. An idea of the overwhelming public support of the project was recorded when more than 40 witnesses and organizations appeared to speak in support of the project and only 3 opposed it, and the opposition was qualified.

Although this effort to establish a national seashore park on Padre Island is only 2 years old, a great deal of work has been put in on the project during that brief span of time. Much of this has come from a grassroots movement organized by a man who I had never had the pleasure of meeting until introducing this bill—an outdoorsman and nature lover from Houston named Armand Yramategui. He and a group working with him formed the Texas Conservation Council, Inc., and they have already devoted many hours to working for interest in and support of the project. For example, they voluntarily circulated petitions supporting Padre Island National Seashore in towns and cities in Texas, and the petitions were signed by more than 12,000 people.

Mr. President, in addition to the Texas Conservation Council, more than 100 other Texas civic, business, municipal, professional, and political organizations have passed resolutions favoring or otherwise expressed support of this project. It has not been possible for me immediately to secure the lists of all these organizations, but I do have the names of 117, which I shall ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, the majority of Texas newspapers, particularly those along the Golden Gulf Coast area and many national magazines and other papers have expressed editorial support of the Padre Island project. Editor Bob Jackson, of the Corpus Christi Caller Times, was a witness at the public hearings and has personally done a great deal of work on the project, as have several key members of his staff. The Houston Press and the Houston Post have taken strong interest in the project, and have given it valuable support; and the Texas Observer, a statewide weekly, was one of the first to urge my support of the project, back in the 85th Congress, when I first introduced a Padre Island bill.

One of the key television stations in Texas—KZTU–TV, of Corpus Christi, headed by Mr. Vann Kennedy, even went so far as to sponsor the making of a special 15-minute television film showing the need and the plans for the project. Copies of the film were also shown as a public service feature by stations KTBC–TV, Austin; KENS–TV, San Antonio; KPRC–TV, Houston; KGBT–TV, Harlingen; KHUU–TV, Houston; and KCOR–TV, San Antonio.

In addition, the film was shown at dozens of civic club meetings and other public meetings along the gulf coast area. I have made at least half a dozen weekly radio reports to Texans on the Padre Island project. It has been my pleasure to address dozens of meetings on the subject of Padre Island National Seashore Park.

Despite the overwhelming public support of Padre Island National Seashore Park and the accord and cooperative effort of State and Federal officials, there was deep danger that the great burden of pending legislation and early adjournment for the national presidential nominating conventions would result in postponement until next year of congressional action. But with the announcement by the distinguished and extremely able majority leader, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], that the Congress will take a recess, instead of adjourning sine die at this time, there is now a chance that the Padre Island bill will have a reprieve. When the Congress returns to session in August, it will give all of us who are interested in this project an opportunity to make an additional effort for the passage of the bill this year. I, for one, am more than willing to return to session following the party conventions, if that will give us a chance to try again for final passage of the bill establishing Padre Island National Seashore Park.

This legislation has taken on special emergency status in the past few weeks, because certain private interests in Texas have opened an apparent all-out effort to try to fence the beaches and break a Texas heritage of free public access to gulf waters and seashores. These private interests already have put up some barriers, by driving railroad ties into the beach, and have launched a court fight to try to close or control public use of some portions of Padre Island.

The sands of time and space are running out for America, so far as preserving our great heritage of open beaches for the people is concerned.

From the rock-ribbed coast of Maine to the sun-drenched sands of southernmost Padre Island is a distance of 3,700 miles. Up to now, only a meager 265 miles of this vast seashore area have been secured for permanent public use, and these 265 miles include Federal, State and county parks. Each year, more and more miles of seashore are fenced off for the fortunate few, behind signs that warn, "Private Beach—Public Keep Out."

Establishment of a national seashore park on Padre Island will preserve the heritage of all Americans to free use of the last great natural stretch of beach in America today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the names of some of the civic, business, professional, municipal and political groups which have approved and are listed as approving the Padre Island National Seashore Park project.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Refugio Lions Club; Refugio Rotary Club; Area Development Committee of Refugio; County Chamber of Commerce of Refugio; Bayshore Rod, Reel, and Gun Club (Baytown, Tex.); Houston Democratic Woman's Club; Beach Study Committee of the Texas Legislature; Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings, and Monuments; Texas Legislature; Izaak Walton League of America; Sam Houston State Teachers College (students and faculty); Texas State Parks Board; Corpus Christi Chamber of Commerce; Board of Park Commissioners of Cameron County.

SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS TAX RETIREMENT ACT OF 1960

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10) to encourage the establishment of voluntary pension plans by self-employed individuals.

RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask for immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1714, House Joint Resolution 397.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State is hereby directed to submit to the Attorney General, prior to January 1, and July 1 of each year, an advisory report indicating the number of refugee escapees, as specified in section 1 of this Act, who within the preceding six months period have availed themselves of resettlement opportunities offered by nations other than the United States.

At the beginning of line 10, to insert:

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of State is hereby directed to submit to the Attorney General, as soon as practicable following the date of the enactment of this Act, an advisory report indicating the number of refugee-escapees, as specified in section 1 of this Act, who within the period beginning July 1, 1959, and ending June 30, 1960, have availed themselves of resettlement opportunities offered by nations other than the United States; and, thereafter, prior to January 1 and July 1 of each year to submit such an advisory report to the Attorney General indicating the number of such refugee-escapees who within the preceding six months period have availed themselves of such resettlement opportunities.

On page 3, at the beginning of line 13, to strike out "secion" and insert "section"; after line 19, to insert:

(b) The Attorney General may, within the numerical limitation prescribed by subsection (a) of this section, parole into the United States pursuant to section 1 of this Act not to exceed five hundred refugee-escapees listed by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as "difficult to resettle": Provided, That no refugee-escapee may be paroled into the United States pursuant to this subsection if he suffers from conditions requiring institutionalization: Provided further, That in the case of each such refugee-escapee, the Attorney General receives and approves a finding by a voluntary relief or welfare organization recognized for this purpose by the Attorney General, that such refugee-escapee can, with some assistance, become self-supporting, or is a member of a family unit capable of becoming self-supporting.

On page 4, at the beginning of line 11, to insert "whose parole has not theretofore been terminated by the Attorney General pursuant to such regulations as he may prescribe under the authority of section 212(d)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act; and"; on page 5, after line 5, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. Section 1 of the Act of September 2, 1958 (72 Stat. 1712), is hereby amended by substituting the words "two thousand" for the words "fifteen hundred" and by substituting the words "total of the annual quota for two years" for the words "annual quota."

After line 10, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. Section 7 of the Act of September 2, 1958 (72 Stat. 1713), is hereby amended by substituting "June 30, 1962" for "June 30, 1960".

After line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. Section 4(a) of the Act of September 11, 1957 (71 Stat. 639–640), as amended by section 2 of the Act of September 9, 1959 (73 Stat. 490), is hereby amended by substituting "June 30, 1961" for "June 30, 1960".

After line 17, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 212(a)(23) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended (66 Stat. 184; 70 Stat. 575; 8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(23)), is further amended by changing the language "narcotic drugs," to read "narcotic drugs or marihuana,".

After line 22, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 9. Section 241(a)(11) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended (66 Stat. 206, 70 Stat. 575; 8 U.S.C. 1251(a)(11)), is further amended by changing the language "narcotic drugs," to read "narcotic drugs or marihuana,".

On page 6, after line 2, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 10. Section 245(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended (66 Stat. 217; 72 Stat. 699; 8 U.S.C. (1255(a)), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) The status of an alien, other than an alien crewman, who was inspected and admitted or paroled into the United States may be adjusted by the Attorney General, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence if (1) the alien makes an application for such adjustment, (2) the alien is eligible to receive an immigrant visa and is admissible to the United States for permanent residence, and (3) an immigrant visa is immediately available to him at the time his application is approved."

And, at the beginning of line 16, to change the section number from "5" to "11".

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, the principal purpose of this joint resolution is to close the refugee camps in Europe. We agree to take 25 percent of the refugees the other countries take. This arrangement has been worked out, as I understand, on an international basis. As a result, if this country does its part, the European refugee problem will be settled.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has indicated the principal purpose of the joint resolution, which is to enable the United States to participate in a worldwide effort to help resolve the world refugee problem. It represents a legislative response to the plea of the United Nations for the assistance of all the nations of the world in a concerted effort to close refugee camps still maintained 15 years since the end of World War II.

The resolution serves an obvious humanitarian purpose. It is most unfortunate that the good will and open heart which it reflects are marred by several undesirable limitations. It is too late in the session to deal constructively with these defects. Furthermore, it has been made absolutely clear that any effort to improve its provisions at this date may jeopardize approval of the entire measure. This is a risk which no one interested in the amelioration of these heartrending conditions can risk. Certainly this bill is far better than none at all, and I support it as the best obtainable under the present circumstances.

This bill will permit the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugee-escapees by granting the Attorney General special authority to parole into the United States refugees who are under the mandate of the UNHC for refugees. A maximum of 25 percent of the number of similarly situated refugees resettled during stated periods of time in countries other than the United States will be permitted to enter this country.

The administration's original proposal—S. 3225—of which I was cosponsor, did not contain the discriminatory provision limiting relief to refugees under the mandate of the High Commissioner, nor did it measure our willingness to extend help to these homeless victims of war and other disorders against the hospitality of other countries. I certainly would have preferred relief which followed the pattern of S. 3225 to the grudging relief allowed under the present resolution. The mandate restriction will serve to exclude large numbers of refugees in non-European areas and is particularly obnoxious. It will have a very undesirable impact on our relations with the peoples of the excluded areas, and there is little justification for its imposition. Such discriminatory provisions are entirely inconsistent with the humanitarian objectives of this kind of legislation.

House Joint Resolution 397 also includes a number of other refugee and immigration provisions. It would make available an additional number of nonquota immigrant visas for nationals or citizens of Portugal and certain nationals or citizens of the Netherlands who, because of national calamity, are out of their usual place of abode and are unable to resettle in their own country. It does not, however, cover many refugees of Italian origin who are now being forced out of Tunisia. Nor does it expressly apply to a number of Jewish refugees who have been forced to flee the United Arab Republic because of a threat of persecution. However, assurances have been given that relief will be administratively available to these groups under the present language of the resolution notwithstanding their technical nationality.

The joint resolution does make limitted provision for the admission of certain difficult-to-resettle cases—500 in number. This provision may also afford a measure of relief to the refugees from Tunisia and the United Arab Republic. However, this limited total number is far from adequate.

Another provision of Senate Joint Resolution 397 would establish a procedure for allowing refugee-escapees admitted on a parole basis to adjust their immigration status to that of aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

It would also extend for another year the alien-orphan adoption program initiated several years ago. This program has made it possible for thousands of young waifs to find hope and homes in America. We should place this program on a permanent basis after provisions are devised to safeguard against abuses. The present extension is merely an interim, stopgap device to prevent its premature expiration.

Our present immigration laws, though containing many fine features, display a distrust, discrimination, and isolationism toward other peoples which are contrary to many of our basic ideals. For several Congresses now, I have been in high hopes that the needed reforms which would liberalize our Immigration and Nationality Act would be forthcoming. My consistent optimism, however, has met with constant frustration, as I have been obliged to wait year after year for overall, comprehensive and needed reform legislation.

Earlier this year, in another of a long series of similar requests, President Eisenhower reiterated his support for legislation which would liberalize our present immigration system. Specifically, the President recommended use of a 1950 or 1960 census in place of the 1920 census which is presently used to determine national quotas. He also recommended that any unused quota be equitably distributed among the various quota areas in proportion to the actual number of immigrants who have come to this country under their respective quotas between July 1, 1924 and July 1, 1959. The concept of race and ethnic classifications within our population, at least for the purposes of the increases given to each quota, would be abandoned and the base for computing the number of immigrants permitted entry would be the number actually accepted from each area between 1924 and 1959. The minimum quota for each minimum quota area would be increased from the present 100 to 200.

These and many other reforms have not been dealt with at all in the present joint resolution.

Despite these shortcomings, I am convinced that this is the best we can hope for at this stage of the session. At the same time it must be obvious that such halfway measures make it imperative to continue our efforts to achieve overall reforms at the very next opportunity. The proposals which the President recommended were moderate and realistic and should have had the attention of this Congress. I am hopeful that the 87th Congress will deal more promptly and compassionately with the problem of extending a helping hand to the needy and desolate people of the world. There can be no more important contribution to humanity's cause and to the future peace of the world than to resolve this most vital problem. To this task we must continue to dedicate ourselves until we achieve success.

The joint resolution has many shortcomings. But we simply cannot and must not permit such matters as the alien-orphan adoption program, our participation in refugee relief projects and the other measures to founder or fail. For these reasons, I urge approval of the joint resolution.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Hawaii will offer an amendment to broaden the provisions of the bill and to remove some of its apparently discriminatory features. I shall certainly support his amendment, when it is offered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President——

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SPARKMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. The Senator from Alabama has yielded on the condition that he be recognized when action on H.J. Res. 39 is concluded.

Mr. CLARK. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. What happened to the unanimous-consent agreement that the Senator from Pennsylvania would resume the floor after the procedures advocated by the majority leader?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair—and the present occupant was in the Chair at the time—when the bill for which the Senator from Pennsylvania yielded was disposed of, announced that there had been an agreement that following disposition of that bill the floor would be held by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania was not in the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Presiding Officer for his explanation. I wonder if my friend, the Senator from Alabama, when he completes his remarks, will yield to me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I stated to the Chair that I understood the arrangement under which the Senator from Pennsylvania was entitled to the floor, but that the Senator was out of the Chamber temporarily and he had agreed to yield to me. I am perfectly willing to proceed under that arrangement. I certainly hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will be recognized.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be happy to follow such a procedure. I hope the Senator from Alabama, before he yields the floor, will yield to me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall be glad to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3076) for the relief of Daisy Pong Hi Tong Li.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3524) for the relief of Sister Carolina (Antonietta Vallo), Sister Noemi (Francesca Carbone), Sister Marta (Sabina Guglielmi), Sister Rafaella (Angela Sisolo), Sister Maria Annunziata (Teresa Carbone) and Sister Marisa (Carolina Nutricati).

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7033) for the relief of Jack Darwin.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7634) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 34, 44, 62, 63, 64, 84, 85, 87, 93, 96, 97, 98, 108, 111, 112, 116, 117, 153, 154, to the bill, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H.R. 1157. An act to provide for promotion of economic and social development in the Ryukyu Islands;

H.J. Res. 778. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that on today, July 1, 1960, he signed the enrolled joint resolution (H.J. Res. 778) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to consideration of the committee amendments?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to be recognized on the joint resolution before any action is taken thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the presentation of this joint resolution at this time and under these conditions follows a pattern with which we have become quite familiar in the Senate with respect to immigration matters.

All of us go around the country and make elaborate speeches about the fact that we favor a comprehensive revision of the immigration laws. The President of the United States sends messages to Congress. Bills are introduced. S. 3225, to which my colleague [Mr. KEATING] has already referred, was sponsored by Senators DIRKSEN, SALTONSTALL, KEATING, JAVITS, CASE of New Jersey, SCOTT, BEALL, PROXMIRE, MAGNUSON, and PASTORE. It represents the carrying out of the administration's message on immigration.

Generally speaking, on the last day or the next to the last days of a session we are presented with a slim bill which does practically nothing. We are told, "Either take this bill or it will be withdrawn or recommitted."

This is a very refined way of holding a pistol at one's head and saying, "Be rough on a few thousand people if you wish. If you do not choose to do that, you have to take the bill. If you wish to be rough on these people, the bill will be withdrawn and they will get nothing."

Mr. President, my reason for taking this time is that I have simply had this "up to my ears". I wish to serve notice now that I am one Senator who will offer amendments to the next immigration bill which comes before the Senate in this fashion, even if it kills the bill. I think it is high time this is done, Mr. President.

I shall not do so with respect to this joint resolution. I know full well what is the situation, and I would not dream of embarrassing those who are for the joint resolution, including the majority leader and the minority leader. Mr. President, I think it is time to give ample notice in advance that this should be, in all fairness and decency and justice, the last time that we are going to be subjected to this kind of procedure on an immigration bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I concur in the views expressed by the Senator from New York. I intend to make a statement on the bill in due time. I am sure both he and I recognize that it is a totally inadequate measure and violates, in my mind, many of the provisions that ought to be in a sound immigration bill. The Senator has expressed not only what I believe is a sense of righteous indignation about these procedures, but also he has served warning that this type of legislation shall be given the kind of consideration on the floor of the Senate that a bill ought to have, namely, that when a Senator disagrees with a part of it, or if he feels that there ought to be changes, he may offer amendments. The trouble in this situation is that we are almost literally served with notice that we must take this bill or have nothing. That kind of shotgun approach is hardly the sort of approach I appreciate.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, to illustrate how truly the Senator from Minnesota has spoken, and in the light of my suggestion, if page 6 of the report is read, there will be found the most eloquent statements about the World Refugee Year and the declaration of World Refugee Year by the United Nations and then in the United States by the President of the United States. In the succeeding pages one will find a whole list of what various tiny countries, with populations of 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, or 10 million people are doing.

In the great United States this joint resolution will let us take 5,000 refugees. Five thousand. Those must be carefully screened. They are restricted to those coming only from Europe. The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG], whose presence in the Senate is an eloquent testimony to the real nature of our country, will propose an amendment with a certain amount of deference to the fact—even though tiny and minuscule in its terms—that perhaps even that will tip the balance and cause this whole legislation to be washed up. I do not see how we can continue with this procedure any further.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. HART], who is our Presiding Officer, and I attended a great dinner in New York, at which we spoke on this subject. What a mockery are our words which echo to us today when we find that this is the immigration measure which will be produced by the Congress.

I am known as one of the least partisan Members of this body. I challenge anyone to prove that is not so. But I say tonight that we see a display of the Democratic leadership of the Congress. The joint resolution is reported by a committee chairman who is a member of the Democratic Party. The majority of the Members on this committee are Democrats. The majority party has no right to go to the country in the coming election campaign and say, "We are going to do nothing about immigration unless it is what I say, and you join me in doing it."

I shall be finished in just a moment. Everyone knows this story. It is not unique to me. By no stretch of the imagination can this be called satisfactory immigration legislation. It does not meet the demands of the platform of either political party.

The Republican Party platform says:

IMMIGRATION

The Republican Party supports an immigration policy which is in keeping with the traditions of America in providing a haven for oppressed peoples, and which is based on equality of treatment, freedom from implications of discrimination between racial, nationality, and religious groups, and flexible enough to conform to changing needs and conditions.

We believe that such a policy serves our self-interest, reflects our responsibility for world leadership and develops maximum cooperation with other nations in resolving problems in this area.

We support the President's program submitted to the 84th Congress to carry out needed modifications in existing law and to take such further steps as may be necessary to carry out our traditional policy.

In this concept, this Republican administration sponsored the Refugee Relief Act to provide asylum for thousands of refugees, expellees and displaced persons, and undertook in the face of Democrat opposition to correct the inequities in existing law and to bring our immigration policies in line with the dynamic needs of the country and principles of equity and justice.

We believe also that the Congress should consider the extension of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 in resolving this difficult refugee problem which resulted from world conflict. To all this we give our wholehearted support.

The Democratic Party platform says:

PROGRESSIVE IMMIGRATION POLICIES

America's long tradition of hospitality and asylum for those seeking freedom, opportunity, and escape from oppression, has been besmirched by the delays, failures, and broken promises of the Republican administration. The Democratic Party favors prompt revision of the immigration and nationality laws to eliminate unfair provisions under which admissions to this country depend upon quotas based on the accident of national origin. Proper safeguards against subversive elements should be provided. Our immigration procedures must reflect the principles of our Bill of Rights.

We favor eliminating the provisions of law which charge displaced persons admitted to our shores against quotas for future years. Through such mortgages of future quotas, thousands of qualified persons are being forced to wait long years before they can hope for admission.

We also favor more liberal admission of relatives to eliminate the unnecessary tragedies of broken families.

We favor elimination of unnecessary distinctions between native-born and naturalized citizens. There should be no second-class citizenship in the United States.

The administration of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 has been a disgrace to our country. Rescue has been denied to innocent, defenseless, and suffering people, the victims of war and the aftermath of wars. The purpose of the act has been defeated by Republican mismanagement.

This measure does not meet anything that the President of the United States requested. It does not meet any of the demands of an immigration policy which is suitable to the leader of the free world forces for peace.

After we have passed the joint resolution, it will still be true that the quota system, which is inherent in our immigration law, archaic as it is, is made even more archaic by the fact that it is based upon the census of 1920—four censuses ago.

When we pass this joint resolution tonight, though we have an opportunity to amend it and change its provisions, we will leave a census 40 years old to be the standard by which we will be guided in respect of the quota aspects of the immigration laws of the United States. We shall leave discrimination against those whose blood is half Asiatic. They are specially set apart in the immigration law and restricted to a minuscule quota, the so-called quota of the Asiatic triangle. We shall leave discrimination against naturalized as compared with natural-born citizens. We will leave discrimination against Negroes from the Caribbean and against Negroes from other parts of the world. We shall leave a bill which does not have what is fundamental under Anglo-Saxon law, that is, a statute of limitations, so that it is possible, as has been done, to pluck from his family a father who has been in this country for many decades and deport him because his status here has not been fixed, notwithstanding the lapse of that period of time.

Every page we shall leave, notwithstanding our opportunity to change the measure here and now, will stand as a crying shame to the protestations which I and almost everyone of us here have been constantly making on immigration.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to associate myself with the comments made by the Senator from New York. We in Pennsylvania feel the same way he does. I hope his point of view will eventually prevail for the progress of the United States.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator. I address this comment to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and many other Senators who are not in the Chamber—for example, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE]. They are Democrats whose sincerity, interest, and compassionate devotion to this problem are fully as great as my own; and they are facing the same hard rock of difficulty which I face tonight.

My colleague from New York [Mr. KEATING], when he was a Member of the other body, was one of the most ardent advocates of fair immigration legislation. As every one of us is, he was frustrated by the situation in which he found himself.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is H.R. 10, which has been set aside temporarily to permit consideration of House Joint Resolution 397. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] holds the floor, having yielded for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 397.

Mr. KERR. The Senator from Alabama has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. KERR. For how long does the Senator from New York expect to speak?

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator from New York will answer that himself. I will conclude in 2 or 3 minutes. There is no limitation of debate on the consideration of this joint resolution, but I am quite confident that it will not take long.

Mr. KERR. I thank the Senator. I wished only to know when I would have an opportunity to ask a Senator to yield so that I might bring up the conference report on the omnibus rivers and harbors bill, in which the Senator from New York has a very great interest.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if it is desired by the leadership, I would have no objection to waiting a few minutes until that is accomplished. I will carry on in the meantime, and the Senator from Oklahoma can stop me later if he desires to do so.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York may be permitted to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for the purpose of submitting a conference report, without losing the right to the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, where do my rights come in? I have yielded for consideration of this joint resolution because the Senator from Mississippi indicated that he needed to get away, and he indicated it would take about 5 minutes. I am prepared to proceed with a talk that I have been hoping to make, and I do not want it interrupted with everything. I would certainly like to talk to the Senator from Oklahoma before the conference report is submitted, and therefore, for the time being, I object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall conclude in 1 minute.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to the joint resolution. I think I shall take about 15 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall conclude and then, of course, the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii will be entirely in order.

This administration has repeatedly introduced legislation to fulfill the pledges spelled out clearly in the Republican Party platform in 1956.

On March 17 of this year, President Eisenhower recommended revisions and modifications which would substantially change the present immigration law.

First, the President urged that the number of quota immigrants be doubled by basing the quota on the population census of 1960 instead of 1920. The use of the outdated 1920 figures is highly illogical and we should at the least utilize the most recent census.

Second, there would also be special provisions for the admission on parole of refugees from persecution and oppression. This would aid greatly in current terms and in the event of an emergency situation.

Third, the President would drop the racial and ethnic classifications in the present law and increase the quota numbers assigned to countries in proportion to their actual immigration to the United States between 1924 and 1959.

Fourth, the unfilled national quota numbers would be pooled within the geographic areas and made available to prospective immigrants from oversubscribed countries in the areas without regard to nationality. This would soften to some degree the discriminatory aspects of the system under which one Englishman equals 12 Italians, 20 Swedes, or 200 Greeks.

I strongly support these recommendations which would go far toward modernizing our antiquated immigration laws and meeting today's immigration needs. In addition, provision should be made for the United States to take its fair share of the 47,000 hard-core cases among the refugees, the socially and physically handicapped, and the institutionalized who still remain in Europe.

We should make the law permanent for the admission of orphans adopted by American families and place it under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. We should establish a statute of limitations under our immigration law to prevent the sudden deportation of men and women who have spent their lives in this country and raised families here notwithstanding that prosecution for their alleged violations would be outlawed if they were crimes.

Other free world nations are making major efforts to admit considerable portions of the world's refugees and we should not fail to do the same. Because we have not substantially overhauled our discriminatory and outdated immigration laws, we have failed in one aspect of the inescapable responsibility of U.S. peace leadership. There are an estimated 2½ million refugees in the world who need international help. Among the most pressing problems are the Iron Curtain escapees and the hard core still in European camps. The escapees are living witnesses to the fact that the Communist system has fallen far short of its promises, and that men love liberty and are willing to sacrifice everything they own in order to be free. We must give them a helping hand.

The steady flow of refugees from the Iron Curtain countries advertises the tremendous attraction that the free world has for the daring and vigorous elements in the Communist lands, and it hurts Communist economy and morale. These elements present a worthwhile cause in the American spirit, but Congress has yet to act on a scale commensurate with the clearly established need. We must offer a ray of hope to sustain the 100 million people in the Soviet satellite countries who want to be free but whose situation demonstrates the prison-like character of Soviet practice which makes emigration virtually impossible.

The United States has admitted for resettlement since 1945 more than 750,000 displaced persons, refugees, and escapees. Our Government has contributed more than a billion dollars for refugee aid in that period. Our annual contribution to various United Nations and other programs to aid refugees in Europe, the Near East, and Asia totals about $40 million. Yet these are not enough. The World Refugee Year and the demands of our own foreign policy position make it necessary for us to continue our aid along the lines of the policy we established in the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 and the Refugee Relief Act later. Under these laws over 600,000 refugees and escapees were admitted. These laws saw the full participation of the "fair share" formula which in a few short years cleared Western Europe's displaced persons camps.

S. 1919, which I introduced last year with Senators CASE, SALTONSTALL, and KEATING, was an effort to modernize the Immigration and Nationality Act and provide for the admission annually of about 60,000 refugee-escapees fleeing racial, religious and political persecution in Communist and other totalitarian countries.

Also, the bill eliminated various procedural injustices in administration of the present immigration law and it attempted to reshape the existing national quota system.

Under the present immigration law, the largest quotas are assigned to countries in which pressures to emigrate to America are light.

It is high time we adopted a more mature immigration policy, one that would be more in keeping with the American tradition of judging a man by what he does rather than by factors of race, color, and country of birth. Our failure to admit the thousands of escapees from the Iron Curtain and to modernize our immigration laws operates against the best interest of our foreign policy as well as our domestic, economic and social well-being. The wealth of a nation lies as much in its people as in its natural resources, and the United States, with its rich tradition of refuge for the homeless and oppressed should be in the forefront of the nations of the world in taking its fair share and thereby helping to resettle the refugees from Communist oppression. No one is recommending opening the flood gates wide, but we must strive for a new immigration policy that will show progressive recognition of the need. Wise modernization of our immigration laws with particular reference to the constructive aspects of the U.S. leadership for peace and freedom in the world and for the demands of our own modern domestic society is absolutely essential. In this presidential election year there is a real chance to get platform and candidate pledges for basically revising the immigration laws. It is for this reason that I have stated the case again today.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DODD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. JAVITS. I have already made clear my attitude on amendments and why, although I have amendments—and most important ones—I am unable, unless I want to be unfair to everything so many people had to say, to present them tonight. However, I will on the next occasion do so, as I promised I would.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HART. The senior Senator from New York has quite correctly stated that he and I shared the platform in New York some weeks ago in celebration of Refugee Year as it approached its conclusion. At that time, the senior Senator from New York made very clear his determination to announce, as he has tonight, his conviction that the approach confronting us tonight was not entirely desirable, and that the circumstances under which we are considering the joint resolution are not desirable.

I wish to make only this one point, namely, that following the New York visit I returned to Washington, and when the bill was brought before the Committee on the Judiciary, I offered an amendment which would strike one of the most offensive features of the bill, namely, the provision that American generosity shall be conditioned upon the attitude of other nations, and that we shall admit 25 percent of the total of the refugees taken by them. This is no way to celebrate Refugee Year.

I am delighted to join the senior Senator from New York in his assertion that hereafter we will stand fast, even under the gun, so to speak, and insist that the basic provision be met. I recall also that in that meeting in New York, the motion was also supported by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING]. We were in a rather hopeless minority, as the Senator will remember.

Mr. KEATING. The same weapon was in use.

Mr. HART. That would be one way of putting it.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleagues. I yield the floor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I shall ask for recognition for only about 1 minute, with the hope that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG] can then offer his amendment.

I wish to say for the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], that he recognizes that legislation is the art of the possible.

I believe my record stands up pretty well in this whole field of immigration. I sponsored the general immigration bill at the last session, when we finally moved it through the Senate and it faltered in the House. We must remember that legislation must have approval of both Houses before it goes to the President. Here we are on the threshold of a recess, and we have had this discussion. I have conferred with Members on both sides of the aisle to see what we could get appropriately done, and then have an understanding with the chairman that we would go no further than that.

The House has passed H.R. 2807, H.R. 9385, H.R. 10419, and House Joint Resolution 397. These four proposals contain some objectionable items which have been discussed time and again. I have conferred with Representative WALTER, of Pennsylvania, on this subject. We know just about how much we can get, if we want to get it. On that basis I had conferences with Senators on both sides of the aisle.

The bill before the Senate represents our joint thinking on the subject. I am quite sympathetic toward the distinguished Senators from New York [Mr. JAVITS and Mr. KEATING]. I am deeply sympathetic toward the distinguished Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG]. However at the end of the trail is this residual question: Do we get some bread or no bread at all? That is the question before us. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has been entirely fair in the matter. He has appraised the situation realistically. On that basis I suggested that no amendments be offered at this time, mainly because this is International Refugee Year, and there is an opportunity to get something done in this field.

I would be less than candid if I did not say that I talked with the distinguished Senator from Hawaii about this matter, and it is entirely agreeable that he submit his amendment. I am in duty bound to say, unless I wish to put myself in the position of being in a state of breach of faith with the chairman, that I shall have to oppose the amendment.

Others may have other views on the subject. However, I would have to oppose it. The chairman of the committee, I am sure, if he felt the bill was going to be encumbered with any amendments which would put the bill on the hook in the House of Representatives, would feel duty bound to make a motion to recommit.

That is the situation that confronts us. I am certainly hopeful, inasmuch as this is Refugee Year, that we can get this much done.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. HART] knows that I talked to him about it, because he had an amendment. He advanced the matter very persuasively in committee. I sought in my feeble way to dissuade him from developing too much controversy on the floor, in the hope that we could at least enact in part most of the provisions in the four bills which had been approved by the House.

That is the whole situation. At this point I leave it so that my distinguished friend from Hawaii can be recognized to advance his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the committee amendments en bloc? The Chair hears none, and the committee amendments are agreed to en bloc.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DODD. The Senator from Illinois has explained the bill very well. I do not believe that the Senator from Illinois or I need to apologize for our present position with reference to the bill. All of us try to do the best we can, and the bill before the Senate now represents, I am convinced, the best we can do this year. I would like to have a stronger bill, as the Senator knows.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. DODD. I introduced such a bill. Several of my proposals were incorporated in House Joint Resolution 397; several were not. But there is no sense in making big speeches and not getting anything. It would be better to try to get something within reach; and I believe we can get it. We are making progress. The bill before us is good legislation.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I seek some information from the members of the committee with respect to the number of refugees that are in the camps in Europe.

Mr. EASTLAND. There are less than 28,000 in the camps.

Mr. LAUSCHE. As I understand, 28,000 are seeking a place in which to settle.

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. According to the provisions of the pending measure, the United States will admit one-fourth of the aggregate number admitted by other nations in any calendar year.

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. What is the number of admissions which have been made by other countries in the past several years?

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not know what the figures are with respect to the past several years. Seventeen thousand, seven hundred and forty-four have been resettled. But that is not the point here. An agreement has been reached with other nations whereby, when the United States takes 25 percent of the aggregate number admitted by other nations, the problem will have washed out, and the camps will be closed.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In what period of time will that occur?

Mr. EASTLAND. Two years.

Mr. LAUSCHE. If there are 27,000 refugees, and the problem is to be cleared up in 2 years, that means that 13,500 a year would be moved. One-fourth would mean that the United States would take about 3,800.

Mr. EASTLAND. We will follow the agreement which has been reached on the international level. That means that the United States will take 25 percent of the number which other countries take. The problem then will be settled.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In 2 years?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I note that the State Department, through Mr. William B. Macomber, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State, recommended that provisions be written into the joint resolution which would admit 10,000 refugees annually, generally under parole. Beneath that statement by Mr. Macomber, on page 19 of the report, the committee made this statement:

> The committee is of the opinion that the enlargement of the scope of this legislation as suggested by the Department of State will not be conducive to the achievement of the primary aim of House Joint Resolution 397, as amended.

Will the Senator from Mississippi elaborate on that issue?

Mr. EASTLAND. This is not a general refugee measure. The primary purpose of the joint resolution is to enable the United States to participate in World Refugee Year and to make a concerted effort to close the refugee camps which are still maintained in Europe, and have been since the close of World War II.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Yes.

Mr. EASTLAND. The whole purpose of the joint resolution is to close those camps. That is what will happen if we pass the joint resolution.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I ask whether any consideration was given to the Yugoslav escapees or fugitives who are being sent back to Yugoslavia on the ground that they are not political fugitives, but that they have escaped merely because of economic difficulties?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yugoslavs are in the camps. They will be provided for under this agreement.

Mr. LAUSCHE. What I have in mind is the study which was made about 2 years ago, arising from complaints that the countries in Europe which had refugee camps were sending the Yugoslavs to Yugoslavia on the ground that they were not fugitives from political oppression, but were trying to find economic improvement in other countries.

Mr. EASTLAND. Of course, that is a political matter in Europe. However, the fact is that Yugoslavs are in those camps tonight, and they will be taken care of just as all other refugees will be.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is it fair, then, to conclude that if the joint resolution is passed one-fourth of the refugees now in the camps in Europe will be brought into our country, and the remainder, three-fourths, will be taken into other countries?

Mr. EASTLAND. The whole purpose of the joint resolution is to settle that problem, and to settle it once and for all.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Has there been any dispute as to whether or not all the refugees will be resettled? Is the number adequate? Is it generally understood that that objective will be achieved?

Mr. EASTLAND. It is the general understanding that that objective will be achieved. It is the hope that it will be achieved.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator answer another factual question?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I notice that the bill provides for 500 so-called hard-core refugees. Will the Senator tell us how many of them there are in Europe?

Mr. EASTLAND. Fourteen thousand handicapped refugees are in the camps.

Mr. JAVITS. It is my information that 47,000 so-called hard-core refugees are in the camps. Is the figure 14,000?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes. The correct figure is 14,000.

Mr. JAVITS. 14,000 so-called hard-core refugees.

Mr. EASTLAND. They are handicapped refugees. I do not know what "hard-core" means.

Mr. JAVITS. "Hard-core" means persons who have not been settled because of illnesses and various types of disabilities.

Mr. EASTLAND. The fact is that there are 14,000.

Mr. JAVITS. Is my understanding correct that of the 14,000, the United States will take 500?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. As I say, we understand the situation, but I do not want the Senator from Ohio to go away with any idea that this figure represents 25 percent across the board. It excludes all refugees in the Far East and Middle East.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does "hard core" mean difficulty of resettlement?

Mr. JAVITS. If the Senator will allow me to state my position, I do not know what the definition given by the Senator from Mississippi means. He has figures for a certain category. At least, we know that there are 500 out of 14,000.

Mr. LAUSCHE. But the 500 are included in the 25 percent. It does not mean that we take 25 percent and, in addition, 500 of the additional cases of resettlement.

Mr. JAVITS. Among the 47,000, there is another category, the category with 14,000, also, out of which we are taking only 500, even in Europe. The 500 is in the 25 percent.

Mr. LAUSCHE. A statement was made about the moral responsibility of the United States to try to settle this problem. I should like to join in whatever movement is necessary to achieve that objective. We would feel shameful in this year of 1960 unless the passed legislation which would correspond to the objective of refugee resettlement year.

Mr. JAVITS. World Refugee Year.

Mr. EASTLAND. The joint resolution will settle the whole problem. I do not understand what the controversy is about.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield a generous minute to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I intend to vote for House Joint Resolution 397 although I have grave misgivings about its effectiveness as a piece of refugee-admission legislation and even more serious misgivings about its foreign policy implications. However, I believe that we must have a refugee admission bill in this World Refugee Year, even if the proposal is only a token demonstration of American interest in the world's homeless as is House Joint Resolution 397.

Mr. President, I wish to make clear I object strongly to certain provisions and limitations in House Joint Resolution 397.

I had hoped, as had the majority of the American people, that in this World Refugee Year the Congress would fully and forthrightly accept its responsibilities for the courageous men and women who were willing to risk everything for freedom—the tens of thousands of refugees in Europe, the Middle East and Asia.

Instead, Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 397 substitutes a concept of "followship," which I have never read in a single page of American history up to this time, for the concept of leadership which has been our tradition.

For the first time in the history of American refugee legislation, the present proposal would make U.S. admissions of refugees proportionate to the efforts of other nations.

Mr. President, I am convinced after careful reflection that this formula of approach is unworthy of our Nation's heritage and totally at variance with the generous, open-hearted response of the American people to the goals of World Refugee Year. Furthermore I believe that this formula—25 percent of what the rest of the world accomplishes—opens untold possibilities for erroneous but damaging exploitation by the Communist bloc to whom every single refugee who flees to freedom is, to paraphrase Mr. Khrushchev, "a bone in the throat."

Mr. President, as we all know, the American people have responded with their usual generosity to appeals for funds for assistance and camp clearance projects during this World Refugee Year. The American Government under the present administration has responded, though only one-half so well as I had envisioned in my amendment to the Mutual Security Act of 1959, with funds for training and transportation of refugees now in camps and with grants to voluntary agencies who have written an extraordinary record of charity and devotion to individual freedom and dignity. The American people have to date in World Refugee Year given $7 million above the normal private agency refugee assistance budgets of $50 million annually. The agencies estimate that the Americans may well give another $7 million before the close of World Refugee Year.

But these funds—private or governmental—do not provide the magic document of our century which recognizes a person's very existence—a passport.

As one refugee bitterly describes his desperation, "Twentieth century man is a body and a soul—and a passport."

I find it most difficult to believe that the same American people who could so effectively imagine the needs and hopes of refugee men, women, and children tens of thousands of miles across the world would refuse to welcome these same refugees into their neighborhoods, or their plants or their churches.

Many words have been spoken by this administration and previous Democratic administrations and by all of us in this Chamber about the overwhelming sympathy of the American people with the peoples of the captive nations. These expressions, I know, from my own observations in the great free city of Berlin, have kept the spark of freedom and the hope of eventual release from enslavement alive in the hearts of millions.

But, I would remind Senators that even through the Iron Curtain a contrast between words and deeds can penetrate. Even through that barrier of secrecy and censorship and because of the possibilities for exploitation by the Communist propaganda machine of the fact that we Americans speak so strongly and eloquently of our sympathy for the oppressed can be unhappily contrasted with any hesitations in our willingness to accept into our Nation as our fellow citizens—the world's refugees.

I am convinced that any American who stopped for a moment to examine his belief in democratic society would reject the notion that our American responsibility for maintenance of freedom is a question of a percentage of what the rest of the world does. Even if every other nation in this world refused or were unable to come to freedom's defense—America's responsibility to act would remain.

Mr. President, besides my objections to the "proportional responsibility" idea of this proposal and the fact that actually only a handful of the 32,500 refugees—desiring to immigrate from Western Europe—will ever be admitted under this measure, I have a further objection in terms of our overall foreign policy.

The joint resolution would authorize the admission only of those refugees under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Now I am sure that one argument advanced for this is that we do have a particular responsibility for those remaining European refugees who are still suffering from the aftermath of World War II. I fully agree that this is a special item of unfinished business for the free world. I agree that it should be given priority.

But it should not be our exclusive concern—particularly where such exclusiveness will undoubtedly be interpreted as another form of exclusiveness—racial prejudice—by the peoples of the nonwhite world.

Mr. President, at least 1 million refugees from the brutal communes of Red China are now in Hong Kong. They are not within the mandate of the U.N. High Commissioner by an accident of timing and the intricate power relationships of world politics.

But they are no less a part of the world's responsibility to any human being who is suffering and in need. They are no less a symbol of freedom than the courageous Freedom Fighters of Hungary. The present proposal does not even recognize the existence of Chinese refugees in Hong Kong. Nor does the present proposal recognize the existence of the Tibetan refugees who sought haven in India from the ruthless repression and denial of their religious liberty by Red China.

Mr. President, only because I do not wish to sacrifice at least a limited recognition that we in America are brothers of all who choose and love freedom and because I do not wish to jeopardize a program such as the orphan adoption program to be continued under H.J. Res. 397 will I vote for this measure. But I deplore the aspects of the measure which I have outlined and the fact that to save its useful provisions I am forced to accept its grave weaknesses.

I do not wish to jeopardize any program such as the orphan adoption program.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have only only one observation to make before I yield to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG].

Some years ago I cosponsored the original Refugee-Escapee Act under which 105,000, and subsequently 120,000, came in. The problem was very simple: When the President of the United States would say to other countries, "Why don't you take some of these refugees, and let us get this European problem solved?" the rejoinder was simply, "Why don't you take some?"

The net result was that we enacted legislation to that effect; and for quite some time we have been working it out. This job must be done on a progressive basis, rather than to attempt to do the entire job overnight.

So, out of the 28,000 cases presented to the committee, we agreed during the International Refugee Year to take 25 percent, or 7,000.

In dealing with this problem, we are confronted with provisions in regard to orphans, spouses, and so forth; but this measure is recognition of the fact that we wish to get the job done.

In attempting to get the job done, we have been confronted with certain provisions which have been adopted by the House of Representatives. Finally, Mr. President, when one is confronted with the realization that he cannot obtain a whole loaf, it becomes apparent that he had better get as much bread as he can. We have been through all this before, of course.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the joint resolution, as reported from the committee, and without further amendment, will be passed and sent to conference, and that it will be possible to secure the concurrence of the House. We believe that the House will concur.

Therefore, Mr. President, in order to get the job done, I take it that the Senate will pass the joint resolution.

At this time I yield the floor. I ask that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG] be recognized.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I submit my amendment, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(c) Notwithstanding the numerical limitations prescribed by subsection (a) of this section, the Attorney General may parole into the United States pursuant to section 1 of this joint resolution during each of the 2 fiscal years beginning July 1 1960, and July 1, 1961, two thousand two hundred and fifty refugee-escapees who are unable to comply with the requirement of such section that refugee-escapees be aliens within the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I am loath to disagree with the distinguished minority leader [Mr. DIRKSEN], who said that if one cannot get a whole loaf, he might well take a few pieces of bread. But in this case we should not do that, Mr. President, especially when we know that if we take a few pieces of bread, we shall be losing friends in a large part of the world; I refer to the large group of people who live in the great Asiatic-Pacific triangle. They constitute probably one-half of the world's population. By taking a few pieces of bread, we shall be telling these people that they are not good enough to associate with us; that all the good things we have been telling them, we do not really mean; and that we do not practice what we preach.

Mr. President, the amendment I have proposed will eliminate discrimination and bias from our approach in helping to solve partially the world's refugee problem. This amendment will tell all the people of the world that we are a fair and a just Nation, and that when we say we want to be friends to all people, regardless of color, creed, or race, we really mean what we say, and that we do not say things that we do not mean.

This amendment will prevent anyone from accusing us of not being equitable or fair in the laws we enact.

House Joint Resolution 397, as now before the Senate, discriminates against refugees of the Middle East and the Far East. It says to them, "We do not want any of you—not even a single one of you—to come to the United States to live."

Yet, Mr. President, at the same time House Joint Resolution 397 says to the refugees in European refugee camps, "Every fourth one of you is welcome to come to the United States to live, if other nations will take the other three." The joint resolution will allow one-fourth of the number of European refugees who are resettled in other countries to be settled in the United States.

But the resolution will not allow any refugees from the Far East or from the Middle East to come into the United States, for in the joint resolution it is stated that a refugee who will be allowed to come to the United States under this measure must be a refugee within the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The State Department, in its letter to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, states, in regard to this restriction on the eligibility of refugees to those who fall under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, that—in the opinion of the Department this limitation would discriminate against certain classes of refugees, principally in the Middle East and Far East, who have not been determined as falling under the aforementioned mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

My amendment would allow the Attorney General to parole into the United States a total of 4,500 refugees, or 2,250 refugees a year for a 2-year period, beginning July 1, 1960, and ending June 30, 1962, from areas not within the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This amendment will allow the Attorney General to parole into the United States, at his discretion—and mind you, Mr. President, the amendment is discretionary, not mandatory—refugees from the Middle East and the Far East, up to 4,500 in number over a 2-year period. The Attorney General will thus be allowed, in his discretion, to allocate the number to come in from these areas. He will not be mandated to select all of them from one area or to divide the number equally among the various areas. Instead, he will be allowed to make the allocation strictly in accordance with his discretion.

Mr. President, what is the background of this measure? In proclamation No. 3292, dated May 19, 1959, the President of the United States has stated as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: A PROCLAMATION

(No. 3292)

Whereas the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 5, 1958, adopted a resolution for a World Refugee Year—

And, Mr. President, this is World Refugee Year—to begin in June 1959, and urged members of the United Nations and of its specialized agencies to cooperate, in accordance with the national wishes and needs of each country and from a humanitarian point of view, in promoting a World Refugee Year as a practical means of securing increased assistance for refugees throughout the world; and

Whereas the United States, consistent with its traditional principles of humanity, sympathy, and interest in the welfare of other peoples of the world, cosponsored and supported the resolution for a World Refugee Year—

And, Mr. President, if this joint resolution is enacted as it has been reported to the Senate, and as it now stands, it will make a mockery of this paragraph of the proclamation—

and

Whereas the aims of the World Refugee Year are to focus interest on the refugee problem; to encourage additional financial contributions from governments, voluntary agencies, and the general public for solution of the problem; and to provide additional opportunities for permanent refugee solutions, through voluntary repatriation, resettlement or integration, with due regard for humanitarian considerations and in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the refugees themselves; and

Whereas there has been established recently a U.S. Committee for Refugees, composed of prominent citizens and representatives of American voluntary welfare agencies, which has expressed a willingness to assume major responsibility for organizing and assisting in the plans for participation of U.S. citizens in the World Refugee Year:

Now, therefore, I, Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States of America, do proclaim the period from July 1, 1959, to June 30, 1960, as World Refugee Year; and I invite all of our citizens to support generously, either through the voluntary welfare agencies or the U.S. Committee for Refugees, the programs developed in furtherance of that year for the assistance of refugees.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 19th day of May in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-nine, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eighty-third.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

By the President:

DOUGLAS DILLON,

Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. President, the United States as a nation, together with eight other nations, cosponsored the resolution in the United Nations to proclaim World Refugee Year beginning July 1, 1959. The purpose is twofold: To focus interest in the refugee problem, and to encourage additional opportunity for permitting refugee solution on a purely humanitarian basis and in accordance with the clearly expressed wishes of the refugees themselves.

Let us look at the numbers. What are the figures? How many refugees are there in the world? How many are proposed to be brought in? There are 360,000 refugees under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Of these, about one-half are Algerians who are not within the terms of House Joint Resolution 397. There are 1 million refugees in the Middle East and 1 million refugees in the Far East.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if he yielded on the figures?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I would like to straighten out the figures given us by the Senator from Mississippi, because they tie in with what the Senator from Hawaii has just said. He gave us estimates of 180,000 refugees who were outside of the Algerians and under the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner for Refugees.

The reason for that difference is this: The Senator from Mississippi is talking about refugees in camps, and he has given us a figure of 28,000; but there are 100,000 refugees—and this fact is reported by the U.S. Committee on Refugees, the Zellerbach Commission, and the International Rescue Committee—who are outside of tents; and they are miserable, and they need to have something done about them. This bill does not touch them.

Then, as to the hard core cases, the tubercular cases, the old, the institutionalized, we have the same problem. They too, are dispersed in the economy. They are suffering nonetheless. They are refugees nonetheless. But they do not come into the sharply limited and sharply defined category we are talking about. It is nobody's fault.

I am grateful to my colleague for letting us at one time and place put these figures and statements into the RECORD so that we may get an idea of the ambit of the problem.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator from New York has said there are refugees out of camps. What is the truth about it? The truth is that they have worked themselves into the economy of those countries and they are no longer refugees. We have an agreement that is international in scope to settle the refugee problems in Europe.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. It happens that the U.S. Refugee Committee, the Zellerbach Commission, and the International Rescue Committee do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not care about that.

Mr. JAVITS. I do.

Mr. EASTLAND. Here are the figures. Those people are not in camps, and they have worked themselves into the economy of those countries. Why should they be admitted to this country? The Senator has talked about their suffering and their starving. They are prosperous. Europe is prosperous. They have worked themselves into the economy of those countries, and they are happy. I do not think we should let the immigration bars down.

Mr. JAVITS. I think the Senator's attitude is keyed to the last sentence, and I will let it go at that.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, this information is very revealing to me. The Senator from Mississippi gets his information from the same sources that I get mine. If there are new sources of information, that is what we need. Until I heard the very able discussion of the Senator from Hawaii, I was led to believe that this was really, in a sense, a very minor problem. If it is a major problem, we should know. Let us find out what the facts are. Perhaps, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I was wrongly led to believe, as the Senator from New York has expressed himself, that we were making a step forward. We want to get this information. It is what the Congress and the Senate are entitled to.

I commend the able Senator from Hawaii and the Senator from New York for making their statements. Perhaps we need more information, because the Senate Judiciary Committee is necessarily bound by the information it gets.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The argument over the figures relates to the European sector.

Mr. FONG. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is the argument between the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from New York.

Mr. FONG. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I must say, from my limited knowledge of the International Rescue Committee, the Zellerbach Commission, and the U.S. Refugees Committee, that the information which has been presented indicates that there are a number of refugees outside of camps who may, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, have worked themselves into the economy, but they are not established in the economy. They are there by grace, so to speak. The responsibility, and the worldwide responsibility, rests upon the United States as much as or more than it does upon others.

But the point the Senator from Hawaii is making is this, and I want to compliment him on his address. I am proud he is here to make his speech, because what the Senator from Hawaii is saying is that if we were to pursue a policy that excludes—and I underscore the word "excludes"—the Pacific triangle, so to speak, and had we pursued that policy all the way through, the Senator from Hawaii would not be here. And I am glad that he is here.

Mr. FONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I say, from the standpoint of our foreign policy, the Senator from Hawaii has made an argument that no one can touch—that the future of this country will rest upon the friendships we shall have in the Pacific triangle, which means the great population centers of the world. This matter goes beyond partisanship. We are talking about national security. More important, we are talking about simple, elemental justice and decency.

I say to the Senator that I am going to support his amendment. I think it is a matter of principle. His amendment is moderate, reasonable, just, and long overdue.

What the Senator from Hawaii is doing is merely saying that we are not going to write into law outright discrimination. He is saying we will give to the Attorney General the discretionary power, as to admission, up to a figure, but we are not going to write into this law, by omission, reference to people in the Middle East and in the Far East.

Mr. President, we cannot buy enough guns, we cannot buy enough security, to overcome the insult that we would write into legislation by omission. I want to thank the Senator from Hawaii. I think this is one of the finest demonstrations had in the Senate. I am proud of the Senator from Hawaii. I am going to vote for his amendment. I think we ought to start demonstrating that we mean what we say when we talk about human equality and democracy.

I hope every Senator will read this speech, and if it takes all night and tomorrow, too, to understand it, we ought to get it done.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. I desire to associate myself with the able remarks of the Senator from Minnesota. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I want to be very frank with the Senator from Hawaii. I was thinking in terms of my service in World War II, when there were about 7 million people displaced by that war. As we received the report from the House, I was thinking also in terms, as the able minority leader said, of what we could get through. I think this it what he meant. He said we could get a few pieces of bread from the loaf.

We have problems in the House of Representatives.

As I sat here this evening and listened to the able Senator from Hawaii, the Senator opened up new avenues of thinking for me. The able Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] opened up new avenues of information. This is what we need in the Senate. As the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] said, we must move forward in this field.

I do not take a position opposite to that of the chairman of the committee. We must begin to look into the problems we shall face. I have not fully explored the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii, but as I have listened this evening I have been much impressed. I commend the Senator for his able presentation.

Mr. FONG. I thank the Senator for his very kindly and encouraging words.

Mr. President, from June 30, 1946, to June 30, 1959, displaced persons, refugees and parolees who were admitted to the United States numbered 711,212, of which 678,690 were admitted from Europe and 28,923 admitted from Asia. In "Asia" are included India, Israel, Japan, Palestine, the Philippines, China, and other countries of Asia.

The 28,923 who were from Asia represent only 4 percent of the total number of 711,212 people who were admitted.

I digress, Mr. President, to talk about the Asiatic-Pacific triangle, which has a quota of 2,000 immigrants. Every year we bring in 154,000 immigrants, according to law. The President has asked that the formula be increased to one-sixth of 1 percent, which would make it approximately 300,000 immigrants.

Out of the 154,000 immigrants, we allow the Asiatic-Pacific triangle 2,000 immigrants. What is the Asiatic-Pacific triangle? The Asiatic-Pacific triangle consists of India, Indonesia, the Philippines, all of Polynesia, Korea, Japan, China, Taiwan and all these countries. That is known as the Asiatic-Pacific triangle.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, which passed upon the joint resolution, I will say that if my memory serves me correctly we did not fully consider the Asiatic-Pacific triangle. I think, therefore, we should not be bound by the report of the committee.

The junior Senator from Colorado did not fully comprehend the problems which have been presented tonight by the able Senator from Hawaii. Therefore, I repeat, it is most important that we have debate on the floor of the Senate and that we not be bound by committee action or by committee reports.

This is a new avenue of approach. As I say, the able Senator from Hawaii has aided us in our thinking. Perhaps, as is true of all of us, as we grow older, that we think of the war in which we served. There are new facts, new ideas, moving in the world.

I cannot too heartily commend the Senator from Hawaii for raising this point tonight. I intend to support his amendment.

Mr. FONG. I thank the very distinguished Senator for his very kind words.

The Asiatic-Pacific triangle has 2,000 of the 154,000 immigrants. In other words, in this part of the world, which controls over one-half of the world's population, we say that out of 154,000 immigrants we will allow 1⅓ percent from this area.

Mr. President, that is 1⅓ percent of the great Asiatic-Pacific triangle, which constitutes more than one-half of the world's population.

Then we say to each country that it will get a quota of only 100 immigrants, and if there are more than 20 quota areas each will not even be given a quota of 100 immigrants.

When we talk about the riots in Japan, and the anti-American feeling in these areas, we are talking about things such as this. This is deep down in the hearts of the people.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Hawaii yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. Is there anything in the reports—reports of the United Nations or of the Refugee Commission—to indicate the nature of the refugee problem in the Asiatic-Pacific triangle, from which we could learn valuable information?

Mr. FONG. I think there are numerous reports on the refugee problem in the Far East and in the Middle East.

Mr. CARROLL. What would the Attorney General, or any agency of the Government do? I ask the question in all sincerity. How can we approach the problem intelligently?

I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's speech. Does the Senator intend to cover that point? We have been thinking mostly of Europe and of the Middle East. What can we do with regard to the Asiatic-Pacific triangle?

Mr. FONG. I simply present the problem. I recognize the social and political and cultural pattern of America. It is not my intent to open up the floodgates, but I say that we should open the gates sufficiently so that we will not insult these people.

Mr. CARROLL. Should we say, therefore, that we should not provide a numerical limitation? How can we meet the problem

Mr. FONG. I will answer the Senator's question in this way: When we talk about the immigration problem in America, immediately two questions arise. The first is, Will it disturb the population pattern of the United States? The second is, Is it good for international relations?

I wish to attack the first problem, as to whether it is going to disturb the population pattern in the United States.

We have a nation of 180 million people. Of the 180 million people, 10 percent, or 18 million people, have, in part at least, Negro ancestry.

The people from the Asiatic Pacific triangle are as follows: 122,000 Filipinos, approximately 139,000 Chinese, 326,000 Japanese, and 66,000 of all other Asiatics, including Indonesians, Koreans, and Polynesians.

Approximately one-half of those 600,000 or 700,000 people from the Asiatic Pacific triangle are in the State of Hawaii. When we relate the 700,000 people who trace their ancestry to the Asiatic Pacific triangle, what do we have? We have a figure of one-half of 1 percent. One-half of 1 percent of the people of the United States—for there are 180 million people in the United States—trace their ancestry to the Asiatic Pacific triangle.

If we added 1 percent to the population, would we be disturbing the population pattern of this country?

Mr. CARROLL. My answer to the Senator from Hawaii would be, "Clearly, no."

Mr. FONG. This I leave with Senators.

Mr. CARROLL. In the joint resolution under debate, are we considering a quota?

Mr. FONG. This is not a joint resolution to establish a quota.

Mr. CARROLL. Does the joint resolution deal with refugees?

Mr. FONG. It is a refugee joint resolution, integrated with an orphans joint resolution and other matters.

Mr. CARROLL. I agree with that designation. That is what I assumed.

I fully agree with the Senator from Hawaii. I served in the Philippines in World War I. There are Filipinos in Colorado. There are second- and third-generation Japanese in Colorado. There are some Chinese in Colorado. These are all respectable, honorable citizens, who make a contribution to our society.

This is not really the point I desired to raise. I agree with the Senator. I would favor the increase in the immigration quota. I say this publicly and for the record because I agree with the Senator from Hawaii. Can we meet the quota problem? Is this a refugee problem we face?

I asked the question because I have not been informed about the question of the refugees in the Asiatic-Pacific triangle.

Mr. FONG. I have alluded to the immigration problem because it sort of colors the whole picture.

Mr. CARROLL. Yes.

Mr. FONG. When we talk about bringing refugees to America, immediately some people throw up their arms and think, "We will be flooded with a whole group of alien people."

When we talk about the refugee problem, we have to discuss it in terms of numbers. In the joint resolution before the Senate we are talking in terms of approximately 40,000 people. As I understand the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives, there are approximately 130,000 refugees under the mandate of the High Commissioner. Of the 130,000 refugees who are not settled, there are 41,000 refugees who desire to emigrate. In the joint resolution we say that we will take one-fourth as many of the people as will emigrate to other countries.

So, therefore, of the 40,000 immigrants, we would take one-quarter, which would be 10,000, leaving 30,000 to go elsewhere. We shall take 10,000 people, and we shall eliminate the 40,000 in the camps. If the figures which I have before me are correct, that is true. I do not know that they are correct, but I have to use them.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. Not so long ago I saw a documentary film of some of the conditions in Italy. Some of the refugees have been in that country for 15 years since the war. Children have been born in those camps. A similar condition must exist in many areas of Europe. I thought, in a sense, it was a condition worse than prison.

One of the reasons I favor this joint resolution is that it will help eliminate this social cancer that has come upon that nation, and not only that nation, but the whole Continent of Europe. It will help eliminate those refugee camps. However, I do not like the 25-percent provision. Sometimes I think we have not asserted our leadership in this field. But the real question, which is new to me—I say frankly to the Senator from Hawaii I had not thought about it—is in respect to the Asiatic triangle. Are there refugees in the Asiatic triangle who come under United Nations jurisdiction and who desire to come into this country; and if so, how many?

Mr. FONG. There are a million refugees in the Asiatic-Pacific triangle.

Mr. CARROLL. I refer to those who come under the jurisdiction of the United Nations.

Mr. FONG. No; not one of those comes under the jurisdiction of the United Nations.

Mr. CARROLL. How many seek to come into America?

Mr. FONG. I do not know.

Mr. CARROLL. I am not trying to confuse the speech of the Senator, because it was a brilliant speech. These are problems which we have to meet. How many of those people desire to come to America? What can we do about it?

Mr. FONG. The question strikes at the very core of our foreign policy. It strikes at the very core of our relationship between the peoples of the United States and the people of the Asiatic-Pacific triangle. It is the gist of world unity. It is the gist of amity and understanding. It is because of that very fundamental idea that I refuse to let this joint resolution go through without speaking on it.

Mr. CARROLL. I agree with the Senator from Hawaii. It is a refugee problem; whether it is a quota problem is another issue. The Senator's address has been most informative, and we must meet this problem in the future. What does the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii seek to accomplish?

Mr. FONG. The amendment permits 2,250 refugees from the Middle East and the Far East to come in betwen now and 1962.

Mr. CARROLL. In whom would the amendment repose the authority to make that determination?

Mr. FONG. It is discretionary with the Attorney General. He has the power to bring in 2,250 a year. If he does not wish to bring in a single one, he does not have to do so. It is in his discretion.

Mr. CARROLL. I see the able Senator from New York standing close by the able Senator from Hawaii. Has the Senator from New York studied the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Of course, I favor the amendment completely. I am sorry that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], who has been a stalwart figure in consideration of this subject, were not on the floor when I spoke on my own time. I pointed out that all of us know the situation. We know that the joint resolution is before the Senate, and only hangs by a thin hair. If it is amended as it should be amended, it will be snapped out, and there will be no joint resolution at all.

I pledged myself—and I was joined by other Senators—that this is the last time I am going to take it. Hereafter, when a measure of this kind comes before the Senate, I shall do what my conscience dictates in terms of making it a decent immigration bill.

While I am on my feet, I have the reference to the Zellerbach Commission, which is composed of a group of very distinguished people, including Hon. Eugenie Anderson, former U.S. Ambassador to Denmark, the Right Reverend James A. Pike, the bishop of California, Protestant Episcopal Church of California, and Mr. Harold L. Zellerbach, president, Crown Zellerbach Corp. as Chairman of the Commission.

These distinguished people say that the plight of the in-camp and out-of-camp refugees is just about the same. The out-of-camp refugees are, if anything, worse off than those in the camp, and the Commission makes the estimate that for everyone in the camp there are 2½ outside the camp. These are only European refugees, and not refugees in the Pacific triangle and other parts of the world.

We all know the situation. We know it well, and I think the time has come to call a halt.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may respond quickly?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. As a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I understand the statements of the able Senator from New York. We were told in substance that, "You will take this or you will get nothing." I agree with the Senator from New York. Somewhere along the line we must take a firm stand in an attempt to solve this very important question.

Mr. FONG. I wish to say to the Senator that I was willing to take nothing because this bill is grossly discriminatory.

Mr. CARROLL. I wish to say to the able Senator from Hawaii that I felt the same way. But as I look upon some of those areas, I thought if we could give some measure of relief to some of those people, even though I know it is under most restrictive conditions, we should do so. This evening, I heard his speech, which was very informative to me; before that the Asiatic triangle was never discussed. That is why I wish to pay special tribute to the Senator from Hawaii. We must meet these problems head on. We cannot begin to compartmentalize little groups of people to satisfy certain folks in our own country who wish to restrict and interfere and obstruct the great problems with which the world is confronted, whether it be in Italy, the Middle East or the Asiatic triangle. There are sad, tragic cases throughout the world, and I again commend the Senator from Hawaii. I will support the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, the junior Senator from South Dakota has listened to the remarks of the Senator from Hawaii tonight with great interest and appreciation. Earlier during the evening I spoke with the distinguished minority leader. I said that I felt, from having talked with the Senator from Hawaii, that he had something on his heart that he felt should be said here tonight, and I hoped that nothing would be permitted to take place which would deny him the opportunity to make the speech to the Senate that he desired. I think from the comment that has already been made it is clear that he has justified his right to get his message to the American people.

The Senator a short time ago said there were two points he was seeking to make or to deal with. One was the question of whether or not some amelioration of the situation would change the population pattern of the United States. He has already pointed out that an insignificant change would be made if his amendment were to be agreed to.

The second point to which he alluded was that which had to do with the self-interest of the United States as this whole matter relates to our foreign policy.

As one who has not had the privilege of traveling in the Far East as much as I should like, but as one who has been there a couple of times, I think a real understanding of the population problem in the Asiatic triangle would do a great deal more to solve some of our international problems than many orations or speeches declaiming about what the Communists are doing in the Far East. It is my own feeling that we do not solve the problems of the Far East, in Japan, or elsewhere, by saying that the Communists are trying to stir up trouble. It may be that the Communists are taking advantage of situations, but we bear the responsibility if we perpetuate or create the situations which make it possible for the Communists to fish in such troubled waters.

I know that we cannot in one piece of legislation deal with the situation adequately. I know that no more change can come overnight. But at a time when we are being judged in the minds and in the hearts of the people of the Far East and the Middle East—and I would not forget the Middle East, for I was greatly impressed by some of the situations I saw in the Middle East last December—that is the time to build our relations on a firmer and better foundation than presently exists.

To the extent that we have been able to get people to understand the true spirit of America—that we are not seeking conquests, that we want to treat other countries as we would like other countries to treat us—there lies the possibility of a foreign policy which will solve some of the problems in the Far East, rather than creating problems or, to use the Senator's phrase, intensifying the insult which American policy sometimes has indicated toward certain portions of the rest of the world.

I wish to join in the commendation that has been voiced for the Senator from Hawaii. I hope before he takes his seat he will dwell a little longer on the second facet of his two points, as it relates to the security of the United States and our foreign policy.

Mr. FONG. I thank the Senator from South Dakota for his very kind words. Three years ago I made a trip to southeast Asia. After I was elected last autumn I though I would like to retrace my steps out there and learn for myself what I could do as a Senator of the United States. I went from Hawaii to Japan and to South Korea. I addressed the troops at the front. I flew to the 38th parallel. I addressed the assembly at Seoul. Then I went to Taiwan, where I talked to a gathering which was attended by 700 officials and their friends. I was questioned on foreign aid and on immigration problems. I went from Taiwan to the Philippines, from the Philippines to Vietnam, then to Cambodia and on to Laos. From Laos I went to Thailand, and from Thailand to Burma. Then I went to Okinawa. At Okinawa General Boothe told me that I had done more in half a day there than he had done in 2 months in trying to get the people to understand what he was doing.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. It was my privilege to be in the Far East immediately following the visit of our distinguished colleague. I did not cover more than one or two of the countries he has mentioned. However, while I was there and also after my return to this country I was constantly made aware of the great service which our colleague, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG], had performed for our country in his visits to the Far East.

It was a wonderful thing to have had an American Senator of Chinese ancestry visit lands where so much un-American propaganda is spread and thus give the lie to much of that propaganda. He proved that we in this country are not discriminatory but actively live the principles upon which our Founding Fathers established this country.

It would be regrettable if we did not adopt the amendment which the Senator has offered tonight. As I said in my opening remarks, I shall support the Senator's amendment. We are talking about a permissive admission, which would give the Attorney General authority to accept up to 2,250 people from the more than a million such desolate and homeless refugees in the Far and Middle East. The Attorney General would not have to take any but it would permit him to offer refuge to this limited number. Under the present bill we would take in roughly six or seven thousand out of the 27,000 refugees remaining in camps in Europe. Certainly we can and undoubtedly will be charged with discrimination if we decline to give the Attorney General authority to permit these deserving people to come into the country. With the very small number that is involved, the Attorney General obviously will use his power sparingly and will choose those who are really refugees, and who can make outstanding contributions to this country's culture and development. There are many in the Middle East from whom this choice could be made.

The Senator has performed a great service, and I support him wholeheartedly.

Mr. FONG. I thank the Senator from New York. The figure of 2,250 represents a little more than 1 percent of the number of immigrants who come into this country every year. We allow 154,000 immigrants to come in every year. The proposal that I am making would allow only a little more than 1 percent of that number to come in. In my travels in the Far East I talked with officials and presidents and kings, and with the people in the streets. I especially went on the streets to ask the people whether they knew that the United States was contributing foreign aid to their countries. Everywhere I went people realized that the United States was a generous Nation, that it was a great Nation, and that it contributed to their welfare, and to their military might. But they always threw this question at me: "I do not seem to understand your immigration policy. Why do you restrict us to a quota of 100 a year?" I could not answer that question.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Looking at the Senator from Hawaii and listening to him speak with the fervor that he possesses and expresses here tonight, I thrill to my very fingertips. He sounds a call to conscience and to courage. The road that the distinguished Senator is traveling tonight is the road that I have traveled in the Senate for the past 10 years. I hope he does not become discouraged. I quite agree with him that many, many people believe that self-respect and pride of a nation are much more precious than a full breadbasket; that to some people human dignity is a greater driving force than human hunger.

Unless we realize that America in her role of leadership must set an example to the rest of the world, unless we begin to show to southeast Europe and to Asia and to all the Far East that the people of every skin are just as good and just as wholesome and just as respectable as we are, and until we begin to break down this design of discrimination, I am afraid America will woefully fail in her role of leadership in decency and dignity throughout the world.

I am afraid that Congress has not learned the lesson. I ask my distinguished colleague from Hawaii not to become discouraged. His amendment may not be adopted. It is likely to be overwhelmingly defeated. I know that can happen. I have trod the same path. I have achieved no better success. I hope the Senator will not compromise his conscience or abandon the crusade. I say that because America is beginning to awaken. If Congress is not aroused, I know the American people are. The American people want the mark of leadership asserted in the world. They do not feel that there are other people in the world who are inferior to us, and they wish to demonstrate this concept of the dignity of man. I congratulate the Senator from Hawaii. I ask him not to take the attitude, if he does not win tonight with his amendment, that he will vote to defeat the legislation. Whatever we have accomplished we have achieved only step by step. We have not reached the millenium. We will not reach it for a long time to come.

The Senator from Hawaii tonight is sounding the hearts of the Members of Congress and, I hope, awakening the hearts of all America to the fact that this is a problem which must be met. It must be met with tolerance, with understanding, and with a good faith. The idea that we can buy friendship and prestige with money and foreign aid alone is a fallacy. We can win it only if we begin to prove to the rest of the world that we believe that other people, no matter whence they come, have the same aspirations, the same hopes, and the same dreams as we have; that we believe they are just as good in the sight of their God as any other living person. The sooner we impress them with the sincerity of that belief, the better we will demonstrate the leadership of America.

I know the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii will not be agreed to. I hope we will not take the position that if we cannot win this amendment tonight—and I agree with the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS]—we will not allow other good proposed legislation to fail.

The Senator from Rhode Island, if, God willing, he is back here in January, will fight shoulder to shoulder with his colleague from Hawaii. The Senator from Rhode Island is refreshed and strengthened tonight in this crusade to bring about a better understanding of our world relationship because he has a new ally, a new friend, the distinguished Senator from the great State of Hawaii [Mr. FONG].

Mr. FONG. I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Hawaii yield?

Mr. FONG. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is the Senator about to conclude his remarks?

Mr. FONG. In about 3 minutes.

Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his most inspiring message. I know he has stated the case more eloquently than I could do it. He has said what I wanted to say. I am happy to air the whole immigration problem, so that the Senate can see the picture and chart the course it will follow. I would feel remiss if I did not bring this problem to the attention of the Senate, so that we may all see the picture which confronts us as it concerns our friends in other parts of the world. I hope the Senate will be able to chart a course which will enable our friends to stay with us.

The committee's argument for this discriminatory bill is as follows: That the primary aim of the bill is to contribute to the closing of the remaining displaced person and refugee camps in Europe, such aim coinciding with the determined camp liquidation program of the United Nations High Commissioner for refugees.

This is a most laudable aim. But can we convince the man in the Far East and the man in the Middle East that this is the fact? Back of this argument is the thought that he is not wanted; that he is not as good as the refugee from Europe. This is not only a reflection on the refugee, but it will be regarded by all those of the same ethnic group that they are not wanted; that they are not as good as the people of Europe.

My amendment will promote good international relationships. The President of the United States has said:

> The strength of this Nation may be measured in many ways—military might, industrial productivity, scientific contributions, its system of justice, its freedom from autocracy, the fertility of its land, and the prowess of its people * * *. Those who have struggled for the right of American citizenship have, in countless ways, shown a deep appreciation of its responsibilities. The names of those who make important contributions in the fields of science, law, and almost every other field of endeavor indicate that there has been no period in which the immigrants to this country have not richly rewarded it for its liberality in receiving them.

Mr. President, we must realize that we are fighting an ideological battle for men's minds. This great battle has been in progress throughout Asia for quite a long time. It is not so much a battle between capitalism and socialism as it is a battle between human freedom and human slavery. In that human freedom are contained the elements of dignity, respect, and equality.

Human beings want to be treated as human beings, and they are willing to give respect when they receive respect. They want to be friends if they are treated as friends. When we say that we will do something for one group of friends but will not do the same thing for another group, we are discriminating against the second group. Such discrimination is the cause of much misunderstanding between men and nations.

We are aware of the millions of dollars we are spending overseas in foreign aid. We have given material assistance to newly developing nations, and we have bolstered the economies of the more politically matured nations. Our President has visited many of these countries on good will missions. He told the people of Asia—in the Philippines, in Okinawa, and in Taiwan—that they are just as good as the other people of the world, and that we want to be friends with them, just as we are friendly with the people of Europe. As a result of these actions, we have many friends among the nations of the Middle East and the Far East.

Mr. President, it would be extremely unfortunate if this kind of proposed legislation, which could wreck mutual understanding and destroy the good will which the men of these nations feel toward us, were to be passed. The United States has spent billions of dollars to create good will. Let us not spoil it.

I do not approve of legislation which accepts one group of friends but, in effect, tells another group that they cannot expect equal treatment. An American minister in Japan recently wrote to me, stating that fair treatment on immigration matters for the people of Asia would create more good will than all the foreign aid we can offer. I believe there is food for thought in his words.

The President of the United States says that we should abandon the concept of race and ethnic classifications, so far as they deal with immigrant quotas. This is in the interest of good international relationships. In return for the admittance of the small number of 2,250 refugees a year, we will reap big dividends in the form of good will and friendly relations.

Mr. President, on my amendment I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii. A division has been requested.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii has just made a very interesting and inspiring speech. He is one of the ablest Members of the Senate. He has raised some interesting questions which will have the full study of the Subcommittee on Immigration.

The joint resolution had been agreed upon before we received a letter, on May 19, 1960, from the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

The purpose of the joint resolution is to cure the European refugee problem. That is all it does. There are a million refugees in Hong Kong. If we were to take a million refugees from Hong Kong, a million additional refugees would take their places.

It is the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi that the oriental people are a great people. They are an intelligent people. They are a fine people. We wholeheartedly desire their friendship. I deny any implication that the United States has not been good, in immigration matters, to the people of the Orient.

From 1931 to 1940, the total immigration from Asia was approximately 15,000 persons. Leaving out the war years and those immediately following, 42,000 orientals were admitted to the United States for permanent residence in the first 5 years of the McCarran-Walter Act.

In the past several years, 116,000 persons from the Orient have been admitted to the United States. No one can say that we have not been good to the people of the Orient.

The distinguished Senator from Hawaii has raised some very important and interesting questions. They will have the full consideration of the Subcommittee on Immigration.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, it was nearly 2 hours ago that I yielded the floor, in order to make possible the consideration of this joint resolution. I did so with the understanding that its consideration would probably take not more than 5 minutes.

I hesitate to break into the proceedings in connection with the joint resolution; but I feel that I cannot wait any longer, for I have an urgent matter to present to the Senate.

I would be glad to yield in order to permit a vote on the joint resolution to be taken, if I may do so subject to a time limitation; but I do not intend to yield generally, as I did a while ago, when I yielded with the understanding that the proceedings in connection with the joint resolution now pending would take not to exceed 5 minutes. I would be glad to yield the floor for 5 minutes longer, with the definite understanding that at the end of 5 more minutes, I may resume the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGEE in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that 5 minutes is not adequate. I, myself, wish to speak for 2 or 3 minutes, and other Senators may wish to speak.

This measure relates to the immigration policy of the United States.

I thoroughly sympathize with the Senator from Alabama. He very properly wishes to address the Senate, and of course he may do so.

But I see no reason why the pending joint resolution must be bobtailed. If the Senator from Illinois can give me a reason why this measure must be bobtailed, very well.

But I see no reason why it must be bobtailed, and that is why I feel that I must object.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. President, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request, and I shall deliver my speech.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield for 5 minutes, but not for longer than 5 minutes. I have been sitting here all evening, waiting to deliver my speech, and I have not been to dinner.

Mr. President, I yielded with the understanding that it would take only 5 minutes to dispose of the joint resolution. At this time I am willing to yield for only 5 minutes more.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, let me ask the nature of the subject matter in which the Senator from Alabama is interested.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not know that it matters to some senators—[Laughter]—but I wish to discuss a statement which has been issued, and it relates to the Republicans' claims in regard to their accomplishments in the housing field.

Let me say that I hope the Senator from Illinois will remain in the Chamber and will listen to what I say.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 5 minutes, the vote on the Fong amendment be taken; and that in allocating the 5 minutes, 3 minutes be allowed the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] and 2 minutes be allowed the chairman of the subcommittee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPARKMAN. And with the further understanding that the vote be a voice vote or that the action be taken by a division, but that there not be a yea-and-nay vote, as I understand.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no control over that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I shall yield for 5 minutes, then, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senator from New York will be recognized for 3 minutes, and the chairman of the subcommittee will be recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think it has become crystal clear, from the debate which has been carried on so eloquently by the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG], to whom I pay homage, what our situation is: We are not doing anything about the immigration problems to which he has referred, and we are not doing anything substantial, through immigration, about the foreign policy of the country.

I, too, will support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Hawaii. Yet both of us know that we are still not doing the job that needs to be done.

Last year the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], who is just as sincere as I am, I know, said a study would be made. But it took some months to get out this little measure.

So, with all due deference and respect to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I repeat what I said before—and I use my time to say this now: The next time we face a similar situation, we will, if I have anything to say about the matter, adopt the amendments and finally we will ascertain the sentiment of the Senate about the promises made publicly and openly, in and out of the conventions, and both in the party platforms and outside the party platforms, and certainly in the party platforms which will be adopted in 1960, as well as in the party platforms which were adopted in 1956, about immigration.

It is high time for us to go on record; and I shall do my best to see that we do.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have control of 2 minutes, for the presentation in opposition; and if it is agreeable to the distinguished chairman of the committee, I yield myself the remaining 2 minutes.

Mr. FONG. May I have 1 minute?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator half a minute.

Mr. FONG. May I have half a minute in which to close?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. President, for at least 10 years I served on the Immigration Committee of the House of Representatives. I am no novice in this field. When we encounter reality, I know what we must do in order to get some of these measures through. Ours is a bicameral legislative system, and we have to obtain the concurrence of the House of Representatives in regard to any measure we pass.

I have introduced bill after bill. I introduced the administration bill to modify the Nationality Act, and I need not apologize for my record in that field.

But I recognize that we cannot get a whole loaf; and I do not want to see this session conclude before the taking of the recess without our having taken some action in this field.

For that reason, I am afraid that the amendment, notwithstanding its merits, could very well jeopardize any legislation in this field. That is the reason why I have taken this position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time available to the Senator from Illinois has expired.

The Senator from Hawaii is recognized for one-half a minute.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, the amendment calls for the admission of only 4,500 refugees for 2 years; this measure does not call for admitting all the 2 million refugees in the Middle East and the Far East. I repeat that under this measure only 4,500 refugees would be admitted during a period of 2 years.

Mr. President, I am asking for equity. If a measure in this field is to be enacted, let it be equitable, fair, and just.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Hawaii yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Hawaii has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Hawaii may have another one-half minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. EASTLAND. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I only arose to say that I heartily agree with the Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG]. On this question, a division has been requested; and the Senate will now proceed to divide.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 397) was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to enable the United States to participate in the resettlement of certain refugees, and for other purposes."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, how did I lose the floor? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rescinds the order for the call of the roll, for the Chair is frank to state that the Senator from Alabama had unanimous consent to resume his speech at the end of the last 5 minutes of procedure on House Joint Resolution 397.

Does the Senator from Alabama yield for a quorum call?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from Texas did not understand that I had the floor, and that I have been in the process of trying to make a speech relating to some claims which have been made by the Republicans as to their record in the field of housing.

If the majority leader wishes to have a quorum call had at this time, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose. But having waited so long——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I did not understand that the result of the vote on House Joint Resolution 397 had been announced; and I asked for a quorum call in order that the chairman of the committee could ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that the joint resolution, as amended, was passed; and the Chair is advised that the only parliamentary procedure now in order in connection with the joint resolution is to move that the vote by which the joint resolution was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the joint resolution was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I do not yield at this time. I have lost 2 hours by yielding for 5 minutes, and I wish to make my statement.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe the majority leader was on his feet, seeking recognition, before the result of the last vote was announced by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that he announced the vote; and the Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, continuing from where I left off some time ago——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; I want to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If my position will be protected, I shall be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Without the Senator from Alabama losing the floor, I propound the following question to the Chair: Was the third reading of the bill requested?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of the third reading was not propounded.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then, the bill is still open. Action on the bill cannot be completed without the third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that the question had been put as to whether there were further amendments, on the final passage of the bill. There were no further amendments, and the bill was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the rule is pretty specific that the Chair must announce the third reading of the bill before there can be final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that if there is insistence on the third reading, it is in order; but there was no insistence on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe a Senator on the floor has to insist on the third reading of the bill. I think under the rule the Chair must put the question on the third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is further advised that while that would be true ordinarily, the Chair had, whatever steps may have been omitted in the procedure, announced the passage of the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What is so extraordinary or unusual about this matter that the third reading was not requested by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it was not done, but certainly it can be open to reconsideration, which will give ample opportunity for the vote, whenever a vote is desired on this measure.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We can reach the problem by a motion to reconsider, but there is an anterior problem here, and it is the question of the third reading, that I would like to have resolved; and, if necessary, there must be an appeal from the ruling of the Chair as to whether or not the Chair can avoid putting the question of third reading before final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that when no one invokes the rule as to third reading, the passage may be announced.

Mr. DIRKSEN. From that ruling I must appeal.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Is it necessary to determine the appeal at this time, or can it be deferred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider can be deferred until after the Senator from Alabama completes his speech.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am referring to the proposal to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal from the decision of the Chair can be deferred.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Without losing the floor, I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I hope we will permit the Senator from Alabama to go ahead and get whatever important speech he has out of the way. Then we will straighten out this matter.

I want to state to the Parliamentarian and the Chair, however, that I was addressing the Chair. I was doing everything except jump to get a quorum call. I do not think the Chair announced it, but if the Parliamentarian is of the opinion that he announced the vote, very well. I know he did not announce the third reading before the vote. It may be we ought to reconsider the vote in order to ascertain the views of Senators, when we are doing all we can physically to get them to hear. I was on my feet. I was asking for a quorum call. I did not hear the Chair announce the vote. I do not think he did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not soft voiced. However, there was some confusion on the floor; and the Senator from Alabama does have the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I claim the floor.

I shall address myself to the report which was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 22, at page 13778, entitled "Housing Record of the Republican Administration, 1953–1960, A Statistical Review in Summary Form."

I have just dealt with the claim that the Republicans made on the question of college housing——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true that the Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor 3 hours ago and yielded in order for various Members of the Senate to say various things? The Senator from Alabama was one. The Senator from Pennsylvania would like to regain the floor 3 hours later, just as much as the Senator from Alabama would like to regain it 2½ hours later.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct in that statement.

I am now moving into the field of urban renewal, relating to the Republican claim.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As the Senator knows, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is hoping to bring up the report on the omnibus rivers and harbors bill. Will the Senator from Alabama give us some idea as to how long he will occupy the floor?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should say about 10 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That would be my estimate. However, someone else made an estimate of 5 minutes, and it took over 2 hours, as I recall.

CORRECTION OF CLAIMS MADE ABOUT A REPUBLICAN RECORD IN HOUSING, 1953–60

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, beginning on page 13778 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 22, 1960, there is a report entitled "The Housing Record of the Republican Administration, 1953–60—A Statistical Review in Summary Form."

To the best of my knowledge this report, as written, is letter perfect and technically correct. It is couched in carefully selected words and most carefully placed phrases. However, I do not believe the report was intended to reflect the versatility of the English language or the sharpness of the quill. I believe, to the contrary, it was intended to portray the present administration as a champion of housing. To this extent the report is a hoax—it is misleading and gives the reader the opportunity to draw false or mistaken conclusions.

I cannot blame the present administration for trying to take credit in this field, for I know of few things that are as essential to our people as adequate, safe, and decent housing. I, as well as many of my colleagues, have contended for a long time—much longer than 7½ years— that decent shelter is just as important to the human being as is food, clothing, and proper medical care. Consequently, I am delighted to learn that the present administration, after some 7½ years, has finally begun to recognize this fact and is now trying to take credit for the progress made in the field of housing during the period that it has been in control of the executive branch of the Government.

Just prior to the 7½-year period in discussion, one of the most significant housing bills in our history was enacted. This was the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Act, more commonly known as the Housing Act of 1949. This act, along with the Housing Act of 1950 and others which had been on the statute books for many years, provided the fundamentals of Federal support to housing, which made the prospects for progress during the fifties seem excellent.

Despite the great expectations of the Housing Act of 1949 with its goal of "a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family," we have made little progress since 1953.

The Housing and Home Finance Agency, in its latest annual report, estimates that there are 3.4 million dilapidated nonfarm homes still in use, almost exactly the same number that existed at the time of the 1950 census. The Census Bureau's latest report published in 1957 showed over 13 million substandard units in the United States. This is an improvement over previous reports but hardly anything to be satisfied with when it means that one out of every four dwelling units in the United States was substandard.

The 1960 census figures should show a further reduction in the count of substandard units, but it is not expected to show much change in the number of families living in rundown, overcrowded, and blighted neighborhoods.

What is the reason for this?

I think it is obvious that the supply of decent housing is not adequate to meet the need. The construction program in this country has failed to meet the needs of a growing Nation and, at the same time, provide enough reasonably priced houses for occupancy by families now being forced to live in substandard units which should have been torn down long ago. New residential construction has done little more than keep up with the population growth of the 1950's and, in some respects, it has lagged behind the increase in nonfarm population.

In the mid-1920's, the homebuilding industry produced 111 homes for every 10,000 persons in the Nation at that time. It was not until 1950 that this average was momentarily reached, only to slip below it again. In 1959, the ratio was 89 nonfarm housing starts per 10,000 nonfarm population and, in recent months, it has fallen to only 77. If the industry today were producing at the 1925 or 1950 rate, the number of nonfarm housing starts would be well over 1.7 million instead of barely 1.2 million.

But let us now turn to the housing record of the Republican administration 1953–60.

The report claims:

> More housing for college students than any similar period in history—more than 37,000 dormitory units for students, teachers, and nurses in training, financed with loans, compared to 13,000 units before 1953.

Quite frankly, I view with some pride, as I am sure my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas does, the fact that progress has been made under the college housing program. In 1950, I introduced the legislation which established this program, and in 1955 my colleague from Arkansas was responsible for legislation which removed the crippling amendments passed by the Republican-controlled 83d Congress as part of the President's program.

No wonder that it is humorous to me that the present administration now wishes to be a champion of the college housing program. There is overwhelming evidence to show that administration efforts to kill the program by insisting upon a high interest rate formula were defeated again and again by Congress. A number of attempts to increase the interest rate charged for college housing loans were made, even though the majority of educators addressing themselves to the subject testified time and again that an increased rate as proposed by the administration would preclude many educational institutions from participating in the programs.

And after several years, when the Congress remained adamant on this point, the administration proposed an entirely new program—that is, the College Facilities Act of 1959. Thus far, practically every educator who has testified upon this proposal has opposed it.

But let us look further to the record. In taking credit for the needed student housing produced by this program, perhaps the administration failed to remember the veto message which accompanied S. 57, the proposed Housing Act of 1959. This message stated:

> The college housing loan program would be continued with increased authorization at interest rates below the cost of money to the Treasury. * * * To the extent that these and other programs merely displace private financing, they lead to Federal spending that is entirely unnecessary.

But we need not dig back into the past to show the administration's opposition to this program. We only need look at the President's budget message to this session of the Congress, in which he opposed the continuation of the college housing program when he said:

> I have accordingly recommended the termination of the college housing program and the enactment of legislation authorizing a new program of grants and loan guarantees for college facilities, to be administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, I yield to the Senator from Illinois, who is a member of the Subcommittee on Housing, and who knows the struggles we have had with the administration merely to keep going a decent housing program.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The statements of the Senator from Alabama are correct. I have served on the House subcommittee for 12 years.

So far as college housing is concerned, is not the attitude of the administration this: that, having opposed the Democratic Party on every effort we have made to provide for college housing, and when, after their opposition, we have been successful in getting a program through, the administration now tries to take credit for the program which it has fought and tried to sabotage at every turn?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. That is the point I am trying to make—in the face of the fact, as I am sure the Senator knows, that many, many colleges throughout this country are having to turn students away because of lack of dormitory space. I do not know whether the Senator saw it in the press, but in one of the Washington newspapers there was a statement that the University of Maryland was having to turn away this fall, for that semester, 1,000 students because the university did not have dormitory space for them.

I recall being at the State land grant college in my State last October, Auburn University, and at that time I was told by the officials of Auburn University that the facilities were already full for September 1960 and that they would have to turn away hundreds of persons because of lack of dormitory space.

The Senator from Illinois will recall that some of the leading educators of the country were before our committee in connection with this legislation, and all of them told us this was a condition which was confronting our colleges throughout the country. In the face of that condition, the President, at the beginning of this year, recommended that the college housing program be discontinued. Yet, in this political "poop sheet" which they are issuing, they claim credit for college housing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, was it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, at page 13778.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And it will undoubtedly be franked out all over the country, in enormous quantities, to make black appear to be white.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not know about that, but it has been reproduced in leaflet form, "Senate Republican Memo." That is one of the special articles in this issue. There are three special articles.

By the way, I hope someone else will check some of the other claims they are making—for example, the Republican record on veterans' affairs, the Republican record on housing, to which I have referred, and the accomplishments of the development loan fund under the Republican administration. Those will bear exploring. There are also other fields in which they are claiming credit—agriculture, social security, and others.

I have not yet looked over the one dealing with veterans' affairs, but a little later in my talk I intend to say something about the attitude of the administration with reference to housing for veterans, the guaranteed loan program, and the direct loan program.

The report in the RECORD also claims unwarranted credit in the field of urban renewal. For example, the report states:

> More American cities engaged in urban renewal than any similar period in history—436 communities—more than double the previous number—have 750 renewal projects under way—4 times as many as before 1953.

The Housing Act of 1949 established what is now technically known as the urban renewal program. In 1954, some changes were made, including the change in the title from "Slum Clearance and Urban Redevelopment" to "Urban Renewal." To make a comparison of the progress made in urban renewal prior to 1953 with the 7½ years since that time, borders on being absurd. However, to perfect the record, let me point out these facts.

In the first 3 years after enactment of the 1949 act, that is, 1950, 1951, and 1952, a greater amount of funds was reserved for urban renewal projects than during the first 3 years under the present administration. This is significant. It shows how the present administration immediately began to put the brakes on this program.

One need only look at the legislative proposals made since 1954 to understand the administration's position. For example, as early as the 2d session of the 84th Congress, the administration used all the resources at its command to block legislation providing for continuity of this program. In addition, the administration has continually pressed for a reduction of the two-thirds Federal share provided by the 1949 act. Such a proposal has been made in the face of overwhelming opposition from local officials who are, after all, the working forces that carry out the urban renewal program.

Need I point out that providing the minimum amount of funds to carry the program forward has been an uphill battle for the Congress. Yet, this report would have one believe that "at the President's recommendation, the Congress has authorized since 1953 $1½ billion in Federal grant funds to aid towns and cities to redevelop and rehabilitate their slum and blighted areas."

Witness after witness appearing before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, as well as the Subcommittee on Housing, has stated that the authorization for this program should be fixed for a 6- to 10-year period, at minimums of $450 to $600 million per year. Yet, the administration has continuously opposed any such provision. For example, S. 57, one of the proposed Housing Acts of 1959, would have provided for a 2-year program with an authorization of $900 million—$500 million upon enactment, and $400 million on July 1, 1960. In vetoing this bill, the President said:

> Its (S. 57) authorization of $900 million for urban renewal—telescoped into 2 years—is excessive.

And when vetoing the second proposed Housing Act of 1959, the President said:

> The bill would also authorize $650 million of Federal grants to cities for urban renewal projects. This sum considerably exceeds the first-year amount recommended by the administration for these purposes.

The debates in this Chamber over the last 7½ years contain ample evidence of the administration's opposition to an adequate urban renewal program.

Perhaps the strangest item in the report concerns low-rent public housing. As we all know, the administration does not support this program. I will not deny that some public housing units have been placed under construction during the tenure of the present administration, but the number has been so few as to have no practical impact on the large backlog of need. In the 7-year period, 1953–59, 127,000 units have been started. This is less than 19,000 units per year—a token showing only. As you well know, the administration has certain obligations to carry out the laws passed by the Congress, but there is no way in which the Congress can force the administration to act. Time and time again, the Congress has provided new authority only to learn later that a disinterested administration has given the program only token support.

Let me give an example of the lackadaisical attitude by which the public housing program has been carried out by the present administration. In July 1959, the Housing Administrator testified that there were pending applications for a total of 58,000 low-rent public housing units which, through attrition and normal withdrawals of applications, would probably be reduced by approximately one-third. Thus, when a 1959 Housing Act finally was signed into law on September 23, 1959, it contained provisions for an authorization of an additional 37,000 public housing units to be placed under contract. On May 13, 1960—over 8 months after enactment of the 1959 act—only 70 of the 37,000 units had been placed under contract.

Mr. President, the record on low-rent public housing speaks for itself. The Eisenhower administration has not requested additional authority for public housing since 1956.

I noted with some humor that one of the proudest achievements of the present administration is that it inaugurated the first Federal measures to help elderly people to get good housing. Though I do not mean to be facetious, I should like to ask who, besides the Federal Housing Administration, which was required by law to administer the program, would inaugurate this program, after it was enacted by the Congress?

Furthermore, the report claims that this program was sponsored by the administration. I should like to state that I first introduced legislation to provide a program of housing for low-income elderly persons in 1955.

The first work done in the field of housing for elderly persons was done by the staff of our committee and subcommittee as a staff study. I have in my hand the report made on May 21, 1956, entitled, "Housing for the Aged." This was done long before the administration even showed any interest whatsoever in the cause of housing for the elderly.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true that the administration strenuously opposed the effort of the Senator from Alabama, the Senator from Illinois, myself, and other Senators to create a new special category of housing for the elderly, and that this was passed over their opposition in the Housing Act of 1959?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true that whereas there was a $50 million authorization for that program, the administration recommended only $5 million to carry it out? Or did the administration recommend any money?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The administration recommended not a single cent. There was not a cent carried in the President's budget or in the recommendation of the administration for that program. The House provided $5 million, and the Senate provided $50 million instead.

Mr. CLARK. And it was compromised at the figure of $20 million?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The conference compromised at $20 million.

Mr. CLARK. Which was $20 million more than the administration was willing to ask to have appropriated?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. Not only did the administration not recommend that any funds be provided, but after the House had provided $5 million the administration witnesses appeared before the committee in the Senate and testified against the $5 million.

Mr. CLARK. As a matter of fact, the witnesses said they would not spend the money, did they not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No, I will not say that. As a matter of fact, it happened that I testified in behalf of the money immediately following the administration witnesses. Mr. Mason said, after I concluded my testimony, that while they testified against the proposal, if the money were made available by Congress they would try to use it properly. I will give Mr. Mason credit for saying that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. My understanding was that the witnesses had affirmatively said they would not use the $5 million. I believe on prior occasions I have stated my understanding that such was the fact. Perhaps I am mistaken.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is entirely possible. I am simply relating my experience in the Senate committee hearings, when I testified. The administration witnesses had testified against the proposal, and I testified for it. Then Mr. Mason added that if the money were made available by Congress they would try to use it properly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. The administration's sins of yesterday could be purged to some degree by putting the $20 million which has been appropriated to earnest and vigorous use; is that not true?

Mr. SPARKMAN. They could get a good program going, yes, before we have this tremendous load piled on us. The load is growing year by year.

The Senator from New Jersey is correct. The Senator has devoted a great deal of time and attention to this problem of the aged and the aging. I commend the Senator for the work he has done.

Mr. President, because the administration wanted time to study the proposal, nothing was done in 1955. In 1956, after an extensive study by the Subcommittee on Housing, I introduced S. 2790, which would have established a comprehensive program to aid in the housing of elderly persons through the FHA insurance program and the PHA low-rent program. The administration also introduced a bill that year which incorporated part of my proposal. This was subsequently included in the 1956 omnibus bill which was enacted into law.

Last year I was pleased to see the administration submit for consideration a proposal, almost identical with my 1956 amendments, to establish a separate program for the FHA to insure mortgages on housing for the elderly sponsored by both nonprofit and profitmaking organizations. We accepted these proposals and included them in the Housing Act of 1959, which was finally enacted into law last September.

In reserving so much credit for itself in the field of housing for the elderly, I noted with interest, this report is completely silent in regard to the direct loan program for elderly persons housing, as was contained in the Housing Act of 1959. From recent testimony before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, it is plainly evident that the administration does not believe in this program, and thus far has made no attempt to implement the law.

In addition, I am unable to identify any legislative proposal made by the administration to establish a mortgage insurance program for nursing homes. I do, however, note on page 111 of the hearings entitled "Housing Act of 1959" before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, an official of the administration stated on January 22, 1959:

> In addition, S. 57 provides for nursing home mortgage insurance. The administration is currently studying a similar proposal. The administration's position on this matter will be made known as soon as the study is completed.

May I invite attention to the fact that I introduced S. 57 on January 9, 1959, and the provisions therein were ultimately enacted as an insurance program for nursing homes. So far, only one nursing home loan has been insured under this new program.

A new program of rehabilitation and conservation was initiated by the Housing Act of 1954. The passage of this legislation was hailed as a great milestone which would put the Federal Government in the position of "restoring and preserving good areas" of our cities rather than just the clearing of slums. Also along with this were instituted the new FHA programs under section 220 and section 221 of the National Housing Act, the so-called FHA urban renewal programs to help provide housing for families affected by urban renewal. These appeared to be sound new ideas at the time. Six years later, however, they have turned out to be ideas only. To my knowledge, 6 years later, there are only a handful of rehabilitation project areas, and not a single conservation project area approved by the Urban Renewal Administration in the entire United States. Only 64 mortgages have been insured under the FHA section 220 rehabilitation program, and only 3,000 existing units have been rehabilitated under the FHA section 221 program from 1954 to April 1960. A program receiving so much praise should have more successful performance than this.

The Republican report boasts about the 105,378 units certified as eligible for section 221 insurance since 1954. This sounds like a large number of units. But what does it mean? Certification is an authority issued by the Administrator to the local FHA office to insure mortgages under section 221. It carries with it not a single commitment nor approval to insure. Unless local builders and lenders can use this authority, nothing will be done. In fact, relatively nothing has been done. In March of this year, 5 years after enactment, less than 19,000 units had been insured under section 221. This is another example of the Madison Avenue approach of the present administration. They know section 221 certifications do not produce housing. Why do they try to fool the public with meaningless statistics?

Furthermore, the 105,000 unit figure was current as of last January. As of May 31, 1960, this number had been arbitrarily reduced to about 99,000. In the face of this fact, the 105,000 figure was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 22, 1960. This is a blatant misrepresentation of the truth.

One of the most flagrant examples of misrepresentation may be found in the administration's claim that its policies have controlled increases in housing costs. The report states that "construction costs in the last 7 years have risen only 16 percent, compared to 66 percent in the preceding 7 years."

A quick look at housing costs, as reported by any of a number of qualified analysts, reveals a steady rise in construction costs for residential and other buildings since the end of World War II. The published data are by years, and it is easy to note those years in which costs increased most sharply. By far the greatest increases occurred from 1945 to 1948 when, according to E. H. Boeckh & Associates, a reputable firm in this field, the index of residential construction costs rose from 70.1 to 104.8, or 50 percent in 3 years.

Senators will recall that these years included actions by the 80th Congress which our President at that time called the do-nothing 80th Congress. Our President was wrong in one respect. This Congress did do something—in a negative way at least—when it permitted the abrupt removal of price controls resulting in the sharpest price increases of all time.

According to this index, a house which cost $10,000 to construct in 1945 would have cost $15,000 in 1948. Almost 50 of the 66 percent price rise in the preceding 7 years, referred to above, occurred during these 3 postwar years.

The administration is sensitive on price increases—and it should be. Never before in this century have prices consistently moved upward during peacetime as they have during the last 7 years. In an attempt to justify this embarrassing trend, an unfair comparison was made between this peacetime price rise and the late 1940 rise caused by the greatest war in our history, and the untimely removal of price controls.

I could continue going down the line of administration housing achievements, as contained in the report, and repudiate each of them. However, I do not wish to indulge the Senate further when the record is so eminently clear on the points contained in this report.

In all fairness, however, I do believe that it would be proper for me to mention one of the "achievements" which the administration may claim in the field of housing. This has to do with interest rates.

The interest rate on FHA-insured mortgages was increased from 4¼ percent to 5¾ percent in the period from 1952 to 1959. The effect of this higher rate is to increase the cost of housing to the purchaser by $3,000 on a $15,000—20-year loan, or by nearly $5,000 on a $15,000—30-year loan, over the life of the mortgage. This increase in cost to the purchaser does not add any more quality, size, or livability to the house.

On this point of interest charges, not only are these new buyers paying a higher rate of interest on the loan itself, resulting in higher costs mentioned above, but they are also paying discount fees amounting in some instances to $1,000. I notice that the report of administration accomplishments is silent on this very serious development in recent years.

To show the effect of rising interest rates on the cost of housing, I should like to read into the RECORD a table on interest charges on home mortgages under varying interest rates.

Interest charges on home mortgages with maturities of 20 and 30 years

INTEREST CHARGES ON A $10,000 MORTGAGE

Interest rate (percent)	Amortization period
	20 years	30 years
4 (1952 VA rate)	$4,544	$7,172
4¼ (1952 FHA rate)	4,880	7,712

Mr. President, if it were not so late in the session, I would be inclined to invite officials of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to appear and justify the extravagant and misleading claims contained in the report entitled "The Housing Record of the Republican Administration, 1953–60—A Statistical Review in Summary Form." Members of the Senate will recall the unfortunate experience in 1959 when the President's veto message could not be justified, and when that document was revealed to be an advertisement to conceal inattention to the housing needs of the Nation. It may be possible to consider this subject further in a hearing before the Subcommittee on Housing or the Committee on Banking and Currency, after the Congress returns in August.

Mr. President, I move to another item. I invite the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH].

I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the Republican Senate committee has put out a publication with a special feature in it.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield in a minute. There is a special feature with regard to the Republican record on veterans' affairs. If the Senator will look at page 10 of the report first, under "Home Loans" he will find this statement, bragging about what they have done:

Between 1953 and 1958 a total of 2,639,140 loans to veterans were guaranteed or insured by the VA.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall in a moment.

Republicans are appraising this great and tremendous program. Yet it is of record that the President this year recommended that the program be allowed to die on July 25, 1960. That is the recommendation which is before us at the present time.

I yield now to the junior Senator from Texas.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Was the distinguished Senator from Alabama present on the floor yesterday when we passed the bill to extend a direct home loan program to veterans?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Did the Senator from Alabama hear the distinguished junior Senator from Arizona when he argued that the program ought to be allowed to die because no homes were being built under it?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. At the same time, Republicans are issuing a document showing that it is a great program because of the millions of homes that are being built under it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wonder if I may interrupt to invite the attention of the Senator from Texas, first, to the fact that I heard the Senator from Arizona. If I recall correctly, he is chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee that has published this memorandum bragging about what the loan guarantee program has done.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Alabama yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I will not charge the Senator with knowledge of Republican plans, but I should like to direct an inquiry to him about the document labeled "Senate Republican Menu."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Did the Senator say "menu"?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I stand corrected. It is properly labeled "Senate Republican Memo." I was misled because I thought the Republicans intended to eat this program.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I wish to proceed to one other item in the veterans report. I refer to page 12, under "Direct Loans." The record shows that when the Republicans took over there was a total of $346 million in direct loans outstanding. Now how many are there? They are bragging; $1,525 million. Every time the subject relating to direct loans to veterans has arisen, President Eisenhower has recommended that the program be dropped. To keep it going and to get the administration to put out the money, has been an uphill fight. Yet in this report they boast of what they have done with the direct loan program to veterans, a program that they have fought every year.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I ask the distinguished Senator from Alabama this question, because he has been the foremost proponent of housing in Congress and I think he has more knowledge on this subject than has any other American and is entitled to more credit. He is one Senator who has been fighting for housing for veterans and others year after year. My question to the informed Senator is this. Has not the veterans' home bill been slowed down, and is not the reason for the slowdown in recent years not the failure of veterans to want houses, but to high Republican interest rates which have priced them out of the markets, making mortgage money unavailable?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The program has eliminated many veterans because their income is not high enough to pay those increased payments.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. They must earn a certain percentage of the value of their homes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. High interest rates are pricing them out of the market, so that we still have 9 million veterans of World War II without homes and who still desire homes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. There is one particular housing program about which I do not find a single word of bragging in this housing report. Perhaps it will come in another phase. Perhaps when they write their agricultural program it will appear. However, there is not a word in the report about farm housing.

I am proud to say that in 1950 I introduced a bill that became title V of the Housing Act, and concerned farm housing. The legislation did a remarkable job, one of the finest jobs that have been accomplished. It has been relatively small, but at least it has given farm families a reasonable opportunity to share in the privilege of getting and enjoying a decent, safe, and sanitary home on farms. Yet I do not find a word in the report on that subject. Certainly they ought not to put it in their agriculture report. Why? Because every year since President Eisenhower has been in the White House, or at least every time the legislation had to be renewed, the President has recommended that the farm housing program under title V be dropped. That is the recommendation now. It is before us right now. I am glad to say that Congress has never acted on his recommendation. Congress has extended it each time, just as Congress has extended veterans' direct loans and veterans' guaranteed loans. Therefore we have been able to keep it going, but it has been an uphill fight.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I ask the distinguished Senator from Alabama if it is not a fact that within the past 2 years the Senator from Alabama has stood on the floor of the Senate and pleaded for modest appropriations to carry on research in rural housing. Has he not pointed out that the rural slums are now worse than the city slums? When the Senator requested a modest appropriation, which I recall was less than $100,000, not for boondoggling, but grants to great universities to research into the kinds of homes which would fit the American farm family, was that request for appropriation not fought almost unanimously from the other side of the aisle? Did they not succeed in having it stricken out of the bill on the request of the administration and on the insistence of the minority in the Senate?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. They did not want research into modern housing; is that not correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. They would not permit, as I recall, even an appropriation of less than $100,000 that the distinguished Senator from Alabama fought for hour after hour on the Senate floor, is that not correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I recall, it was over $50,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I find this discussion interesting. It seems that the document the Senator refers to has many virtues, or at least it has many qualities. Let us not call them virtues. For example, it permits Republican speakers, when they appear before the American Bankers Association, to talk of economy.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is carried all through the report.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then when they appear before a veterans organization and talk of government with a heart, they work both sides of the street—the high road, the low road, the economic road, and then the spending road. It depends upon where they are.

This has worked fine, if it worked, for men like the Senator from Alabama. Republicans forget that the legislation they have tried to defeat is the legislation that has had the active support and sponsorship of some of the most able Members on this side of the aisle. I would say when they get out in the hustings and try to sell this document that they have, which is of dubious quality, it will be thoroughly ventilated and exposed. It will be found as wanting and as void as the housing program of the administration itself. Believe me, there would have been plenty of people ill housed had we relied upon the recommendations of the administration. Thank goodness for the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate those remarks from the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I would like to make an observation on the comments of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota when he spoke of the Republicans working both sides of the street. I assume he refers to Madison Avenue.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the Senator permit me to make a correction? Both sides of the avenue.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I accept the correction. I wish to comment also that in Texas, when I was a boy, before the modern highway departments were set up, the roadwork was performed by able-bodied persons between 18 and 45 years of age. They were sent out to keep up the roads in the county. When I reached 18, I was sent out. I thought the work would not be as hard as farmwork.

Everybody got a shovel and they got into the wagons and rode up and down the road in the wagons, and when they came to a little gully they got out of the wagon and scratched the road and planted a little grass in the gully. That is the way the Republicans have been scratching both sides of the street. When it comes to actual work in government doing something for the people, the Republicans are just scratching the grass.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield the floor.

THE RULES MUST BE REFORMED

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, let me assure all Senators that I will not take long.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I have been trying to get recognition for 3 hours and 10 minutes. I promise I will not take more than 10 minutes. While I recognize the position of the senior Senator from Oklahoma, I wonder whether he would be good enough to let me proceed for 10 minutes. I promise not to take longer than that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for 1 minute?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to apologize to the Senator from Pennsylvania. He asked me to protect him when he yielded the floor so that he would not lose it by yielding it to another Senator. I thought that had been done. I came back to the floor and saw the Senator sitting in his seat. It was my error, and I am very sorry for it. I had no knowledge that there was going to be this delay.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator need not apologize. It was purely inadvertent. I am certain that the Senator intended to keep his promise.

The great difficulty which the Congress is having in passing needed legislation before adjournment calls attention once again to the archaic and undemocratic rules and procedures under which we on Capitol Hill attempt to legislate.

The harsh fact is that the present rules and methods of operation of the Senate and of the House are stacked against the people of the United States. They penalize those who seek action in the national interest in a time of world crisis. They reward those who cling to an outmoded status quo which threatens our very survival.

We in the Congress have been critical of the Eisenhower administration for not running a tight ship. Our willingness to extract the mote from the President's eye has, however, not been accompanied by any desire to remove the beam from our own.

Actually, we have organized ourselves so sloppily that we may well be unable to meet the critical challenge to pass effective legislation in the national interest which will confront us next January. It is bad enough to have dilly-dallied through the 8 years of the Eisenhower administration. We will be playing Russian roulette with our national survival if we do not set our house in order before the next President presents his state of the Union message.

We must leave to the other body the task of solving its own procedural problems in a way which will no longer permit a small group of ultraconservatives to block the will of a large majority of the House. We will have enough trouble modernizing our own Senate rules. In my judgment, there is no other legislative body in the free world as incapable of action, when action is desired by a large majority but strongly resisted by a minority, as the Senate of the United States.

Yet before turning to these difficult problems of our own, it must be noted in all candor that we in the Senate have legislated throughout the present session in the shadow, not only of the House Rules Committee but of the House Ways and Means Committee. We are continually being told by our leadership, by our committee chairmen and by our Senate conferees that we should neither pass nor insist on the liberal legislation we believe necessary to the country's well-being because the House Rules Committee will not permit the bill to go to conference or, if taxes are involved, the House Ways and Means Committee will permit needed taxes and the temporary increased ceiling on the national debt to expire rather than yield to Senate efforts to close notorious and discreditable tax loopholes.

Thus, the House Rules Committee pickled the Senate-passed depressed areas bill for over a year; and when the House liberals finally, with the assistance of the Speaker, got their own less adequate bill on the floor and through the House, we were told that we dare not change as much as a syllable of the House bill—for if we did the Rules Committee would never permit the proposed legislation to go to conference.

So we were forced to forgo our independent legislative judgment and swallow the House bill.

Then came the education bill. Again we were told we dare not include teachers' salaries in the coverage, for the House would not agree and the Rules Committee would block a conference. This time we rejected the advice and voted our convictions. It now appears our leaders were right—the House Rules Committee has so far refused to permit a conference. So now we are in the humiliating position of having to promise the Rules Committee in advance—informally, to be sure, but nonetheless effectively—that we will strike out the House-passed Powell amendment and forget about teachers' salaries. If we do not, the Rules Committee is said to be adamant. They will not permit a conference on the Federal aid-to-education bills, which reflect the untrammeled judgment of the Members of the House and the Senate. No compromise acceptable to conferees will be permitted to come to the floor for a vote. The House Rules Committee will decide what the education bill will contain.

Next came civil rights. For day after day, and night after night, we were told in the Senate we dare not pass an effective civil rights bill, for, if we did, the House Rules Committee would pickle the legislation for the rest of the session. This threat was, in my judgment, a real influence in persuading the Senate to table the more effective parts of proposed civil rights legislation: part III, a really effective voting-registrar procedure, FEPC legislation, and legislative assistance to school integration. Again the Senate yielded and passed an ineffective measure; so ineffective that our southern friends hardly bothered to oppose it in the end.

Next came the housing bill. I was told that if I pressed the public housing amendment as I had pressed the teachers' salary amendment to the education bill the House Rules Committee would find a way to kill the whole housing bill. As these words are spoken, the Rules Committee has refused to permit even the House's own bill to go to the floor. The Senate did pass, despite the threat, a ridiculously inadequate public housing amendment—about one-quarter of what is needed—thus continuing in pallid form the tradition of trying to provide a decent home for every American family, regardless of income. And now we must recess and come back in August because, among other reasons, the House Rules Committee will not permit comprehensive housing legislation to come to a vote on the floor.

Finally, we find the House Ways and Means Committee standing adamant against Senate amendments to the tax extension bill and apparently taking the position that the House's constitutional right to initiate tax legislation includes an implied right to reject Senate amendments. To be sure, this position was somewhat tempered by acceptance of the Gore amendment dealing with depletion, yet that amendment was so noncontroversial that it passed the Senate by a vote of 87 to 0, and it would have been practically impossible for the House's conferees to reject it.

I repeat, the House is the sole judge of its own rules and procedures. Nevertheless, I believe the general public is entitled to know the effect of the House rules on the legislative process in the Senate.

It seems clear to me that the program of the next President of the United States will founder on the rocks of House Rules Committee opposition unless the other body takes steps to change its rules and procedures before the 87th Congress gets down to business.

But the program of the next President will also be wrecked in this body unless we make major changes in our own rules and procedures. Let me summarize the major difficulties with our present Senate procedures and then consider each subject in greater detail, suggesting the possible remedy.

First. The Senate wastes a great deal of time—time which could be spent more effectively in the legislative process.

Second. Senate procedures make prompt and careful consideration of legislation by committees unduly difficult.

Third. The Senate rules make it easy to defeat a measure opposed by a majority, but almost impossible to pass a measure opposed by a determined minority, no matter how small.

Fourth. The Senate, in violation of its own precedents, has slipped into the habit of appointing conferees who disapprove of Senate action, thus weakening the will of the Senate in conference.

Fifth. Rule XIX, Sections 2 and 4 of the Senate, requiring a Senator to take his seat without a ruling by the chair that he has spoken disparagingly of another Senator is a deterrent to frank and free debate.

Sixth. The habit of passing legislation under unanimous consent agreements is damaging to free debate.

1. THE SENATE WASTES A GREAT DEAL OF TIME—TIME WHICH COULD BE SPENT MORE EFFECTIVELY IN THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

In the early months of each session the Senate customarily convenes at noon and adjourns around 5, sometimes an hour or two later. In the first session of each Congress there is no legislation ready to bring to the floor because committees have not had an opportunity to hold hearings. Thus, floor action is confined to making speeches and introducing bills, resolutions, and the like.

Would it not be better to schedule fewer sessions during the early months of the year, permitting committees to sit all day in order to bring a mass of legislation to the floor by the middle of February?

This year the situation was even worse than usual because of the civil rights hippodrome, which inhibited Senate action from February 15, and immobilized the Senate from February 28 until April 11. During most of this period committees were not even permitted to meet because of the ridiculous rule that committees may meet while the Senate is in session only by unanimous consent.

And this was the 2d session, not the 1st, of the 86th Congress. A great deal of the legislation constituting the present logjam could have been passed months ago had it not been for civil rights.

A study made in my office, based on copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the two periods January 5 to February 28, inclusive, and April 11 to June 18, inclusive, reveals that two simple changes in the rules could have made 126 hours of additional time available for floor action on legislation. Roughly, this would mean 21 legislative days of 6 hours each, or three precious weeks. Perhaps another 3 weeks or more could have been saved had the civil rights debate followed the more civilized procedures of other legislative bodies.

This same study shows that the Senate spent only 61 percent of its time in session considering pending legislation.

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN SENATE RULES TO SAVE WASTED TIME

I suggest the following changes in Senate rules:

First. All speeches on the floor of the Senate shall be germane to the pending business; provided that, on motion, a majority of the Senators present may set aside, from time to time, periods during which the foregoing rules shall not apply.

Second. A speech may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, whether or not delivered, in the same print as if made on the floor.

The study above referred to reveals that, exclusive of morning-hour business, 1,263 columns in the RECORD were taken up by speeches and colloquy not germane to pending legislation. An additional 491 columns were required to report nongermane speeches where there was no colloquy. Miscellaneous nongermane matter, exclusive of morning-hour business—mostly insertions made after the morning hour—took up 382½ columns of the RECORD. The three categories total 2,136½ columns, exclusive of insertions. In other words, these columns reported the spoken word. It further appears that nongermane material occupies 33⅓ percent of the entire CONGRESSIONAL RECORD devoted to the report of the Senate proceedings, exclusive of insertions.

The study shows that the average time required to speak a column in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is 3 minutes.

If we add to this nongermane category 363 columns of long speeches to which, it seems clear, practically no Senators listened—determined by the floor situation, plus the subject matter of the speech—we find that the Senate spent only 61 percent of its time actually debating pending legislation.

The results of this study must, of course, be taken with a grain of salt. Frequently, Senators read speeches in the RECORD they do not find time to listen to. A certain amount of nongermane discussion is desirable in the interest of freedom of speech. The Senate should be a forum where any Member can sound off on any subject he desires at certain times. Nevertheless, it is believed that adoption of the foregoing suggestion would enable the Senate to conduct its business in far more expeditious fashion than at present. Moreover, it would result in many a matter coming to a vote much more quickly than at present, thus resulting in action rather than inaction on much legislation.

I do not suggest that the Senate could or should spend its entire time in the legislative process. What I do suggest is that when a bill has been motioned up for floor action, the Senate should consider nothing else until the bill is passed or otherwise disposed of. The rule of germaneness would help enormously in this regard.

The rule that speeches may be printed in the RECORD whether delivered or not, will make it possible for Senators to get their remarks to the press and in the RECORD without taking the time of the Senate to read them—valuable time which could be devoted to other purposes.

It is interesting to note that many a Senator, including this one, has taken advantage of an informal custom by which a long speech is placed in its entirety in the RECORD in normal type although only the first and last lines are read. Some Senators are not willing to engage in this subterfuge.

Would it not be better to adopt the suggested rule and avoid the hypocrisy. Surely no one can seriously contend that the reading of a long speech to an empty Chamber is an appropriate part of either the legislative process or debate.

2. SENATE PROCEDURES MAKE PROMPT AND CAREFUL CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION BY COMMITTEES UNDULY DIFFICULT

There are some committees in the Senate where parliamentary devices are frequently used to prevent the prompt and orderly consideration of proposed legislation. Among these devices are:

First. The refusal of committee chairmen to call meetings to act on pending legislation.

Second. The custom of refusing unanimous consent for a committee to meet while the Senate is in session.

Third. Using delaying tactics while the committee is in session in order to force adjournment under the rule as soon as the Senate meets.

While the Judiciary Committee is the most glaring example of these procedures, it certainly is not alone in this regard.

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN SENATE RULES TO EXPEDITE COMMITTEE ACTION

I suggest the following changes in the Senate rules:

First. Committees may meet at any time upon the request of a majority of the members of the committee.

Second. Committees may meet whether or not the Senate is in session.

Third. Upon motion concurred in by a majority of the members of a committee at any time, the chairman shall put to a vote any bill or amendment thereto, or substitute therefor, which has been called up before the committee for action, either by the chairman or a majority of the members thereof.

These suggested changes are sufficiently self-explanatory so that further discussion seems unnecessary. Either the Senate will wish to expedite committee action or it will not. My plea is that Senators be given a prompt opportunity to determine what changes, if any, they desire to make in committee procedures.

3. THE SENATE RULES MAKE IT EASY TO DEFEAT A MEASURE OPPOSED BY A MAJORITY, BUT ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE TO PASS A MEASURE OPPOSED BY A DETERMINED MINORITY, NO MATTER HOW SMALL

If Senators have learned one thing from the 2d session of the 86th Congress, it is the efficacy of the motion to table, used with such devastating effect by the minority leader during discussion of the civil rights bill. Personally, I have no objection to the present custom with respect to a motion to table. I do not think it has been abused. My plea is for a countervailing rule to require a vote on the merits of a pending matter after reasonable debate—debate no longer than that permitted by the leadership, both majority and minority, before utilizing the motion to table to defeat a measure.

The Senate has thoroughly explored, during both the 85th and 86th Congresses, amendments to rule XXII dealing with limitation of debate. In my judgment, tinkering with this rule will get us nowhere.

I believe the proper course is to restore the custom of moving the previous question.

This motion is explained in section XXXIV of Jefferson's Manual, which appears on page 383 of the 1959 edition of the Senate Manual. It reads as follows:

When any question is before the House, any member may move a previous question whether that question [called the main question] shall now be put. If it pass in the affirmative, then the main question is to be put immediately, and no man may speak anything further to it, either to add or alter.

The previous question being moved and seconded, the question from the chair shall be, Shall the main question be now put?

Jefferson's Manual points out this kind of question was first introduced into parliamentary procedure as long ago as 1604. Certainly it cannot be considered as a practice alien to Anglo-Saxon parliamentary procedure. Actually, it was used a good many times during the early years of the Republic. While it is true that originally the motion was utilized in connection with the subject of a delicate nature involving high personages, or to prevent the discussion of matters which might call forth observations which could have injurious consequences, I submit that this ancient device is the proper method of dealing with the interminable delays which prevent Senate action on matters of great import to our country and, indeed, to the entire free world.

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN SENATE RULES TO EXPEDITE A VOTE ON MERITS OF A PROPOSITION

First. Any Senator may move the previous question whenever any pending matter has been before the Senate in session for a total of more than 15 hours. Once the previous question is moved, the Senate shall proceed to vote thereon without further debate. An affirmative vote on the previous question: "Shall the matter pending before the Senate be approved?" shall dispose of the pending matter.

Second. No Senator shall hold the floor of the Senate for more than 2 hours except by unanimous consent.

The first suggested change in the rules has been discussed above. It is submitted that no matter to come before the Senate for action requires more than 2 hours to explain fully. Where a Senator is interrupted by a colloquy, the Senate can be relied upon to grant unanimous consent for the Senator to continue beyond the 2-hour period unless the colloquy is obviously engaged in for the purpose of further delay.

4. THE SENATE, IN VIOLATION OF ITS OWN PRECEDENTS, HAS SLIPPED INTO THE HABIT OF APPOINTING CONFEREES WHO DISAPPROVE OF SENATE ACTION, THUS WEAKENING THE WILL OF THE SENATE IN CONFERENCE

The latest instance of this unfortunate habit was in connection with the corporation and excise tax bill extension. It concerned the adoption of two amendments closing notorious tax loopholes passed on the floor of the Senate over the objection of the senior members of the Finance Committee, who then headed the conference committee which yielded to the House on both amendments in conference.

Over a year ago, I offered a change in the rule to read as follows:

A majority of the Senate members of a committee of conference shall have indicated by their votes their sympathy with the bill as passed and their concurrence in the prevailing opinion of the Senate on the matters of disagreement with the House of Representatives which occasion the appointment of the committee.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a memorandum, which has been distributed to all Senators.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PROPOSED RULE RELATING TO SELECTION OF SENATE MEMBERS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES

This memorandum summarizes the arguments in support of a resolution to add the following paragraph at the conclusion of rule XXIV of the Standing Rules of the Senate:

"3. A majority of the Senate members of a committee of conference shall have indicated by their votes their sympathy with the bill as passed and their concurrence in the prevailing opinion of the Senate on the matters of disagreement with the House of Representatives which occasion the appointment of the committee."

A RULE IS NEEDED

The Standing Rules of the Senate are virtually silent on the subject of appointment of the Senate members of committees of conference, the applicable rule (rule XXIV) merely stating:

"All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint."

In practice, the members have been elected only once in modern times (on the Muscle Shoals bill in 1925). In all other instances, the Chair has been authorized to make the appointments, and it is the practice for the Presiding Officer to have the Senators suggested to him by the chairman of the appropriate committee or other member in charge of the bill.

Since before the time of Jefferson, the principle has been acknowledged that the majority of conferees should represent the prevailing view of the body on the bill to be considered. The current manuals state that this is Senate practice. Yet in the routine handling of bills, the alternative practice has grown up of appointing the senior members of either the committee or the subcommittee which considered the legislation.

Necessarily, the prevailing-view principle and the seniority practice come into conflict on some bills, and at such times either the principle or the practice must give way. If on such an occasion no Senator makes an issue of the appointment of conferees—as is usually the case—the seniority practice is routinely followed, resulting in the appointment of conferees unsympathetic to the prevailing view of the Senate.

The most recent such instance occurred on March 25 of this year, when four of the five Senate conferees on H.R. 5640, the temporary unemployment compensation bill, had voted against the Senate version, and in favor of the House version, of the bill to be considered by the conference.

When, on the other hand, an issue has been made of the conflict between principle and practice, the prevailing-view principle has usually been adhered to, but often only after cumbersome and embarrassing maneuvers. Ordinarily, the maneuvering has taken place behind the scenes, but sometimes it has broken out into acrimonious controversy on the Senate floor. Friends of the measure have found themselves in the embarrassing position of appearing to challenge the integrity of senior Senators. The senior Senators have found themselves in the equally embarrassing position of having to choose between resigning under protest or subjecting themselves to criticism for insisting upon representing a Senate position with which they were out of sympathy.

To write into rule the recognized prevailing-view principle would provide an orderly procedure for the future and obviate further controversy on the question.

THE PREVAILING-VIEW PRINCIPLE HAS LONG BEEN ACKNOWLEDGED

1. The manuals recognize the principle:

Cleaves' Manual, which was reported to the Senate pursuant to a Senate resolution in 1900, and which is incorporated in the Senate Manual, states in section 17:

"In the selection of the managers * * *. Of course the majority party and the prevailing opinion have the majority of the managers. It is also almost the invariable practice to select managers from the members of the committee which considered the bill. But sometimes in order to give representation to a strong or prevailing sentiment in the House the Speaker goes outside the ranks of the committee.

This section of Cleaves' Manual is taken from section 1383 of Hinds' "Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives of the U.S.", published by authority of a joint resolution of the Congress approved in 1898.

The current House Manual and Rules contains even stronger language on this point (sec. 536).

2. Presiding officers have asserted the principle:

In 1896, when Senator Hill, of New York, objected to the Chair's going outside the ranks of the committee which had considered the bill in naming a conferee, the Presiding Officer stated that "no new precedent has been established by the Chair. It has been the custom of the Senate for a great many years to appoint other than a member of the committee reporting a bill on the conference committee" (54th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3857).

In 1935, Vice President Garner announced that "hereafter the present occupant of the chair expects to exercise some discretion in the matter of selecting conferees when the Senate authorizes him to make the appointments." The minority leader said his understanding of the rule was that "the majority, at least, of the conferees must be sympathetic with the prevailing opinion, which must be the majority of the Senate who support the measure." Vice President Garner replied, "That will certainly be the policy of the present occupant of the chair" (73d Cong., 1st sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 5296).

3. Many individual Senators have cited and supported the principle:

During consideration of the Oklahoma statehood bill, in 1905 and 1906, Senator Teller said:

"The rule has been in parliamentary bodies, not only in this country, but in others, particularly in Great Britain, that when a measure comes from another body, the friends of the measure as it passed the body [and it is true in the other House as well as this] take charge of it from that time on. When we shall have reached the point that there is to be a conference, they are entitled to a majority in the conference" (58th Cong., 3d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 2815).

"Whenever a conference committee is created, it is created to bring the mind of the other body to that of this body, and to bring them together. It is not to represent the view of the minority, but to represent, if possible, the majority. Upon that theory the majority of the proposition that passes this body is entitled by custom and usage and on principle to name the committee. A majority only of this body can pass a bill, this body then is entitled to have a friendly committee.

"So far have the English authorities gone on this subject in Parliament that they have declared that it was the duty, when a man was put on a conference committee or on any other committee to deal with a subject to which he was hostile, to refuse to become a member of the conference committee or any other committee. As was said by a distinguished English writer on parliamentary law, and as is quoted approvingly in Jefferson's Manual, 'the child is not to be put to a nurse that cares not for it.' It is only in modern times—that the custom has grown up to allow the chairman of the committee, however hostile he may be to the bill as it passes the Senate, to designate who shall deal with the House in the effort by a conference to bring the House to the sentiments of the Senate. Everyone can see that logically the friends of the measure are the proper ones to represent the matter to the conferees on the part of the House and win them to the senatorial mind" (59th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4155).

During the 1906 debate on the same question, Senator Foraker, of Ohio, said:

"The rule of the Senate which I evoke in this instance would but give us the benefit of the general rule that obtains, laid down by all parliamentary writers, that those who are the friends of a proposition should go to the conference to represent it" only (59th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4155).

During consideration of the Army appropriation bill in 1888, Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, asserted that the rules required "that two of the conferees shall be Senators friendly to the action of the Senate." The Chair thereupon stated that, in practice, conferees "are designated by the friends of the measure" (50th Cong., 1st sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7223).

During consideration of the Cuban intervention resolution in 1898, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, said:

"I remember that until quite recently in making selection of conferees, the Chair always has in view the idea of representing the majority of the Senate upon that particular question where there is a difference, and those constituting the majority in favor of the measure, are entitled to have a majority of the committee to represent their views. That has been the rule; and I have never known an exception to it until 1890. It was stated frequently by the older members 30 years ago that that was binding in all cases" (55th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 4027–4028).

On the same occasion, Senator Frye, of Maine, said:

"In my judgment, in my place as conferee there should be appointed some Senator on the committee who holds views diametrically opposite to mine. The Senator from Ohio, Mr. Foraker, is the real father of the proposition to recognize the Cuban Republic now. He was persistent in committee, has been persistent since, and if I were Presiding Officer of the Senate, I would appoint Senator Foraker as one of the conferees on that committee" (55th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4030).

During consideration of the Muscle Shoals bill in 1925 (68th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 2552–2563), Senator Underwood, of Alabama, moved for election of conferees in order to avert the appointment of the senior members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, saying:

"According to the rules and the precedents I think we are entitled to conferees who reflect the last vote of the Senate in passing the bill" (id., p. 2552).

And Senator Norris, of Nebraska, who was the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who would be bypassed, said:

"We ought to appoint conferees who believe in the action the Senate has taken and are in sympathy with it. This bill that was passed by the Senate—the Coolidge-Underwood bill—was opposed by me almost in its entirety. If we follow what I think we should follow—the right kind of an honest rule—then when the conferees are appointed I should not be on the conference committee from the Senate. I had determined, even before any suggestions had been made, that I would not accept appointment on the conference committee, because, to my mind, I would almost have to stultify myself. I did not believe in the bill; I had no faith in the action taken by the Senate; I was sincerely bitterly opposed to it, and it seemed to me that I should eliminate myself and ought to stay off the committee. I think the fundamental proposition that those friendly to legislation should be appointed on conference committees is correct" (id., p. 2555).

On the same occasion, Senator Smith, of South Carolina, said:

"I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that when the majority have expressed themselves touching the principle of any legislation, those in sympathy with it ought, if possible, to go on the conference committee to meet the objections to that principle which come from the other House" (id., p. 2559).

On the same occasion, Senator Edge, of New Jersey, said:

"Speaking entirely apart from the legislation at issue, it appears to me that the rule of seniority, so far as it applies to the naming of conferees, is a very unfortunate one. I believe conferees appointed on any measure should be Senators convinced that the measure they are to consider in conference is correct and is right. They should go into conference with the enthusiasm of believing the measure should become a law" (id., p. 2560).

On the same occasion, Senator Heflin, of Alabama, said:

"There is no doubt that the dominant thought of the Senate is entitled to be represented on the conference committee, and when we seek to get Senators who represent that thought and have to disregard Senators who are bitterly antagonistic to the view of the Senate we make no reflection upon those latter Senators" (id., p. 2561).

SENIORITY PRACTICES HAVE FREQUENTLY BEEN ABANDONED IN ORDER TO REFLECT THE PREVAILING VIEW

Ada Chenoweth McCown, whose study of conference practice in the first 70 Congresses ("The Congressional Conference Committee," Columbia University Press, 1927) is the authoritative work on this subject, wrote that seniority and committee membership had little to do with the selection of managers for conferences during the first 30 Congresses. By 1848, she noted that seniority standing on committees appeared to have some influence on choice of managers by the House, but was still not the general practice of that Chamber. In the Senate there was no evidence of a seniority practice by that date (pp. 61–63).

During the last half of the 19th century and during the 20th century, the seniority practice grew, but on occasions when the issue was raised that the "prevailing view" principle was being violated the seniority practice was repeatedly abandoned to permit the majority of the Senate to have the majority of the Senate conferees.

In some such cases the original appointments were made without strict adherence to seniority. In others, the original appointments were made according to seniority but were followed by resignations—sometimes promised in advance—to permit substitution of Senators favorable to the Senate view.

Examples of both procedures follow:

1. Departure from seniority in original appointments:

Federal Reserve Act (1913): Every Democratic member of the Banking and Currently Committee was appointed except Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, second-ranking Democrat (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 13, 1913, p. 1230).

Chinese Exclusion Act (1902): Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, was passed over in favor of more junior committee members (57th Cong., 1st sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4424).

Cuban Intervention (1898): After a protest had been voiced by Senator Foraker, of Ohio, that a majority of the prospective conferees did not support the Senate position, Senator Frye, of Maine, who would have been a conferee had the seniority rule been followed suggested that the Chair appoint Senator Foraker in his place. The Chair adopted this suggestion (55th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 4027–32).

Displaced Persons Act Amendment (1950): An objection was voiced to the original slate of seven conferees proposed by Senator McCarran, of Nevada, on the ground that four of them had opposed a substitute amendment which was adopted by the Senate. Senator McCarran thereupon withdrew his proposed names and moved that the Chair appoint conferees. The Vice President then appointed five conferees, including only three of the original group proposed by Senator McCarran, giving a majority of 4 to 1 in favor of the majority view of the Senate (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 96, pt. 4, pp. 4802–03).

2. Resignations of senior members to permit substitutions:

Muscle Shoals (1925): All three of the Senators elected by the Senate to the conference committee (Norris of Nebraska, McNary of Oregon, and Smith of South Carolina) resigned following their election because they were opposed to the measure which passed the Senate. Following their resignation, other appointments were made in order from the committee and three other Senators (Keyes of New Hampshire, Capper of Kansas, and Ransdell of Louisiana) resigned for the same reason, thus making possible a majority of conferees favorable to the measure.

Federal Revenue Act (1936): Senators Couzens, of Michigan, and Keyes, of New Hampshire, resigned immediately after appointment, insisting they were out of sympathy with the bill (74th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 10266).

Agricultural Adjustment Act (1938): Senators Norris, of Nebraska, and McNary, of Oregon, resigned after appointment, the latter explaining that it had been "an unbroken rule of mine that when I oppose a bill I refuse to act as a conferee" (75th Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1768). They were replaced by Senators Frazier, of North Dakota, and Capper, of Kansas.

Submerged Lands Act (1952): After conferees were appointed on the submerged lands act bill, Senator LONG, of Louisiana, protested that three of the five had voted against the so-called Holland-Connally substitute which had been approved by the Senate. Senator LONG contended the provision of Cleaves' Manual, quoted above, had been violated. He entered a motion that the Senate reconsider the appointment of conferees (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 98, pt. 3, p. 3580).

On the following day, Senator O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, announced that one of the conferees, Senator McFarland, of Arizona, had asked to be excused from service on the committee and that the next two senior men on the committee, Senators ANDERSON, of New Mexico, and Lehman, of New York, had made like requests because they too had opposed the substitute amendment which had prevailed. The next Senator in order, Senator LONG, accepted appointment and withdrew his motion to reconsider (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 98, pt. 3, p. 3678).

On other occasions, protests at the appointment of conferees not in sympathy with the prevailing Senate opinion have been registered, but withdrawn upon assurance by the conferees that they would faithfully support the Senate position despite their own divergent views. Yet the necessity for such demeaning public assurances would not arise were it not for the doubt that inevitably exists when "the child is put to a nurse that cares not for it."

Whenever the question of abandoning the seniority system is raised on a particular bill, the issue becomes one of personalities. As was so notably the case in the lengthy and harsh debate on appointment of conferees on the Muscle Shoals bill, Senators seeking to assert the right of the majority to select the Senate managers are accused of impugning the integrity and honor of the senior Senators. At the same time, the senior Senators who would be bypassed are placed in a bad light if in other cases other committee chairmen and ranking members have been trusted to handle bills with which they were not in agreement.

If the proposed rule is adopted, then the selection of conferees in sympathy with the bill in question will be automatic. The issue will not have to be raised on the Senate floor, as in the past, giving rise to divisive debate and recriminations. And the principle of the prevailing view, which has been so often violated, will be regularly honored.

5. RULE XIX, SECTIONS 2 AND 4 OF THE SENATE HAVE BEEN INTERPRETED IMPROPERLY AND, AS SO INTERPRETED, ARE A DETERRENT TO FRANK AND FREE DEBATE

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, rule XIX, sections 2 and 4, lifted from Jefferson's Manual, section 17, read:

2. No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

* * * * *

4. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order, which motion shall be determined without debate.

This rule, sensibly interpreted, is quite unobjectionable. However, it has been widely abused in practice. A Senator has been permitted at any time to interrupt another Senator, raise a point of order and require that Senator to take his seat without any ruling on the part of either the Presiding Officer or the Senate that the Senator called to order has violated section 2 of the rule.

All Senators will recall the several instances of abuse of the rule which have occurred during this session of Congress.

In the second half of the 20th century, the courtly procedures of the late 18th century frequently seem out of place. Ordinary courtesy, however, is still the rule of conduct between mature individuals. In the heat of debate, Senators may violate rule XIX, section 2, and, if they do, should properly be required to take their seats. However, I submit this should never be done unilaterally entirely upon motion of another Senator who takes affront. In each instance the Chair should state whether, in its opinion, the rule has, in fact, been violated. If the Chair's ruling is in the negative, the Senator should be permitted to proceed without taking his seat, subject to an appeal from a ruling of the Chair. Similarly, if the Chair rules adversely to the Senator holding the floor, the latter should have the right to appeal from the ruling of the Chair before being required to take his seat.

The present custom is, of course, a minor abuse, but if the Senate is in the mood to revise other and more important rules of procedure, it would be a good time to take care of this one too.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO RULE XIX, SECTION 4

This section of the rule should be amended to read as follows. The new matter is enclosed in brackets:

If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, [in the opinion of the Presiding Officer,] transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, [either on his own motion at the request of any other Senator], call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order, which motion shall be determined without debate: [Provided, however, That any Senator directed by the Presiding Officer to sit down, or any Senator requesting the Presiding Officer to require a Senator to sit down, may appeal from the ruling of the chair, which appeal shall be open to debate].

6. THE HABIT OF PASSING LEGISLATION UNDER UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENTS IS DAMAGING TO FREE DEBATE

Every Senator is aware of what happens when a unanimous-consent agreement is entered into. Senators rush from the floor, leaving a mere handful to conduct the debate under the agreement. If the unanimous-consent agreement calls for more than a very limited amount of time, the proponents do not bother to stay to hear the opponents and vice versa.

Practically the only way to assure even a limited debate on a matter subject to a unanimous-consent agreement is to yield back all time except 5 or 10 minutes on either side, require a live quorum and assure all Senators a vote will be had within 10 or 20 minutes of the conclusion of the quorum.

Under these circumstances, I submit that unanimous consent agreements should be the exception, rather than the rule, in the Senate. If the other reforms outlined above are successful in curtailing debate within reasonable limits, the need for legislating under unanimous consent agreements will largely disappear.

CONCLUSION

It is the contention of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the present rules of the Senate are obsolete, unworkable in the modern world, and a real danger to our American form of Government at the Federal level. The political lag in reforming these rules which we have permitted ourselves should promptly be brought to an end.

The next President of the United States, who I believe will be a Democrat, will present to the Senate in his state of the Union message and other messages during the early days of January, a comprehensive legislative program which the Senate majority should be eager to adopt after a reasonable consideration. In fact, it is not too much to state that we should have another 100 days, starting next January, similar to the first 3⅓ months of the first administration of Franklin Roosevelt in 1933. The international situation is as critical today as domestic conditions were then. There is a huge logjam of needed domestic legislation piled up behind the indifferent and conservative outlook of the Eisenhower administration. That logjam will break in January. The Senate should be prepared to guide the logs on their way down the stream toward a better America.

RIVERS AND HARBORS AND FLOOD CONTROL ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7634) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today, pp. 15462–15468, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, after extended negotiations with the Bureau of the Budget and sessions in conference with the House conferees, we are happy to bring to the Senate the conference report, which has already been accepted by the House, on a bill for a great program of flood control, navigation projects, and water resource development programs. It has been accepted in principle by representatives of the Bureau of the Budget, who made it quite clear that they were not speaking for the President. Insofar as they were concerned, we made amendments and changes, both as to the projects that were included and with reference to included projects, which gave us the assurance that if the bill were passed it would be accepted at the White House.

I yield to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], the ranking Republican member on the Committee on Public Works, who has rendered such heroic service in the development of this bill and who has been with me all the way through the committee and the Senate and the conference.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, at the outset, let me say that the bill represents a landmark in the handling and treatment of omnibus rivers and harbors bills. I say "landmark" because the conferees returned to the Senate a bill, in the form of a conference report, with the rough spots worked out in advance. We do not expect a veto of this bill when it goes to the White House. We do not anticipate, as we anticipated a couple of years ago, that the bill will be vetoed. Senators will remember that we went up the hill, came down the hill, went up the hill again, came down the hill again, and finally went up the hill again before we got an acceptable bill. In this instance, we have tried to get over the rough spots in advance. I think we have done that.

The chairman of the subcommittee, who handled the bill for the subcommittee and for the full committee, both in the hearings and in the full committee, and on the floor of the Senate, and who served as chairman of the conference, is the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. He did masterful work. If I was able to contribute by following his lead, I was glad to do so. But to him belongs the major credit for the successful form of the bill at this time.

There are two or three things in the bill, which is presented in the form of a conference report, to which attention should be called. First, the bill as now presented includes a considerable number of projects which were not in the bill when it originally passed the House. But those who comment or reflect upon the bill should bear in mind that the bill which originally passed the House passed that body in July 1959.

It is true that when the bill was presented to the Senate, there were many projects which were not in the bill as it passed the House. On paper, it is going to make the bill presented by the Senate committee much larger in the number of projects, much larger in total dollar authorizations, than the bill the House had presented. But anyone who knows the procedure with respect to surveying and reporting on studies by the Corps of Army Engineers will know that in the past year many projects have been reported on. Many projects which had been reported on at the time the House passed the bill, but had not cleared the Bureau of the Budget, have cleared the Bureau of the Budget within the past year. So the bill, even as it passed the Senate, had many projects which were cleared; that had been cleared at the time the bill passed the House earlier.

When we went to conference, the Bureau of the Budget had major objections to about $149 million worth of projects. I may say, to the credit of the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the minority leader, that when he pointed out, in the consideration of the bill before it went to conference, that in carrying the flag, he had to carry the flag even though it hurt some of his projects, he gave a clue to the conference which we accepted, and the conference deleted the Illinois Waterway project which was marked for $114 million in its authorization. The deletion of that single project, with a price tag of $114 million, went a long way toward curing objections to the $149 million worth of projects which the Bureau of the Budget questioned.

At the same time, in deleting that project, we were deleting a project which had a favorable benefit-cost ratio. It is a project which probably will be authorized in time. However, the evidence before the committee—the evidence brought to the conferees—was that it was a project which could be deferred for some years, at least, without material injury to the value, or without great injury to the public value, convenience, or necessity. When we deleted that project, which we did with the implied approval of the Senator from Illinois, we went a long way toward meeting the objections of the Bureau of the Budget.

Finally, I invite the attention of the Senate to what is a landmark in legislative development, so far as public works projects are concerned. I call attention to the presence in the bill now, as it proceeds to enactment, with the adoption of the conference report, of what will be known as the Land Acquisition Policy Act of 1960. It is title 3 of the bill as it now appears. The Committee on Public Works has made history with title 3 of the omnibus rivers and harbors bill in the last two instances. Two years ago, in 1958, the Senator from Oklahoma took the lead in fighting for a title in the bill which would deal with water supply. The omnibus rivers and harbors bill of 1958 contained a title 3, dealing with water supply. It already has made history, and will make more.

The bill before the Senate contained a title 3, which would have established a recreation policy with respect to public works projects. That policy was contained in title 3 as it passed the Senate originally. However, we were not able to secure the concurrence of the House conferees on the title 3 dealing with recreation in the original bill passed by the Senate. We had, however, a title

4 in the bill as it passed the Senate, which now becomes title 3. It is entitled "Land Acquisition Policy Act of 1960."

Again, this title 3 writes history, so far as public works projects are concerned. In the form in which it passed the Senate, the bill contained two major parts. The first part dealt with a declaration of policy and a requirement for public hearings. The second part would have created a study commission to study land acquisition policies of the several Federal agencies.

In order that the land study commission would not result in a deferment of justice in cases already under review by the Corps of Engineers or the Department of Justice, it was provided that an interim payment could be made for the values not covered in a fair-value appraisal, by payments not to exceed 20 percent of the appraised value.

The House conferees objected strenuously to that part of the title. As a result the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to drop the provisions of what is now title 3, which would have created a study commission, with the proviso for the interim payments up to 20 percent.

However, there remains in title 3 the declaration of policy and the requirement for the dissemination of information. The declaration of policy creates and establishes authority for the Secretary of the Army, or his designees, in negotiation for the purchase of property for public works projects, to pay a purchase price which will take into consideration a policy of a just and reasonable consideration. I shall read the declaration of policy, because, if I do not, I fear Senators will pass it over in the RECORD. I think Senators should know about it, for the bill now provides

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 301. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that owners and tenants whose property is acquired for public works projects of the United States of America shall be paid a just and reasonable consideration therefor. In order to facilitate the acquisition of land and interests therein by negotiation with property owners, to avoid litigation and to relieve congestion in the courts, the Secretary of the Army (or such other officers of the Department of the Army as he may designate) is authorized in any negotiation for the purchase of such property to pay a purchase price which will take into consideration the policy set forth in this section.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the next section of the bill, section 302, entitled "Dissemination of information," may be printed at this point in the RECORD, so that the entire Land Policy Acquisition Act, title 3 of the bill will appear at one place in the RECORD.

There being no objection, section 302 was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

SEC. 302. Within six months after the date that Congress authorizes construction of a water resource development project under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Army, the Corps of Engineers shall make reasonable effort to advise owners and occupants in and adjacent to the project area as to the probable timing for the acquisition of lands for the project and for incidental rights-of-way, relocations, and any other requirements affecting owners and occupants. Within a reasonable time after initial appropriations are made for land acquisition or construction, including relocations, the Corps of Engineers shall conduct public meetings at locations convenient to owners and tenants to be displaced by the project in order to advise them of the proposed plans for acquisition and to afford them an opportunity to comment. To carry out the provisions of this section, the Chief of Engineers shall issue regulations to provide, among other things, dissemination of the following information to those affected: (1) factors considered in making the appraisals; (2) desire to purchase property without going to court; (3) legal right to submit to condemnation proceedings; (4) payments for moving expenses or other losses not covered by appraised market value; (5) occupancy during construction; (6) removal of improvements; (7) payments required from occupants of Government acquired land; (8) withdrawals by owners of deposits made in court by Government, and (9) use of land by owner when easement is acquired. The provisions of this section shall not subject the United States to any liability nor affect the validity of any acquisitions by purchase or condemnation and shall be exempt from the operations of the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, as amended (60 Stat. 237).

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, title 3 is the outgrowth of complaints which have come to the attention of members of the Committee on Public Works that in many instances acquisitions were being made which were unfair to the landowners, and that a policy was being followed of getting the appraisals which would be the bare physical value of the property based upon an examination of court records and sales in which there were a willing seller and a willing buyer.

But we found that the following of that policy was throwing a heavy burden on the Federal courts. Persons whose homes were being taken for large public works projects, and who did not wish to sell their homes, and who had invested their life savings in that land, were being required to turn their property over to the Federal Government for amounts for which they would not willingly sell their property. We found that in many instances such persons were losing their homes and were losing their incomes and were losing their farms, and were receiving cash allowances which, although they might conform to bare market values, were not sufficient to enable those persons to become rehabilitated. We found that those persons were being dispossessed of their homes, and of their farms on which they were making a livelihood, and perhaps were required to pay a capital gains tax which would leave them in much worse financial condition than they had been in, and were left without funds with which to purchase replacement homes, much less with sufficient funds to be able to be guaranteed a livelihood.

We found that as a result of that policy—and it was true to a very marked degree in my State—when large areas were being taken for huge reservoirs, hundreds of cases were coming up in the Federal courts, and the courts were clogged, even after the appointment of an additional Federal judge and the appointment of commissioners to handle these cases; and in many instances there were long delays in taking the land and in making settlement for the land.

The committee held hearings. Several witnesses came from Oklahoma, several came from Kentucky, and several came from South Dakota. They testified in such a manner that the committee was convinced that something must be done about this situation. The Corps of Engineers agreed to review the cases in which final settlements had not been achieved. The Department of Justice was consulted.

I can state for the record—and I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma will concur—that the language embodied in title 3 as the land acquisition policy was prepared for us, at our request, in consultation with the Department of Justice. Both the House conferees and the Senate conferees were advised that the Department of Justice welcomed this language of title 3, believing that it would lead to relief of the congestion in the courts, and would save money for the Government, and would save money for the people whose property was being taken, by making it possible to negotiate the settlements in many of these cases and to achieve justice for the landowners more quickly and without the delay involved by having cases taken to court.

I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will confirm my statement about this matter and my statement that this language was acceptable and was prepared by the Department of Justice.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota is correct. The language was worked out after extensive consultation with the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Justice, and after working out what all Senators concerned felt was a very much needed improvement in the land acquisition policy, and it was not only acceptable to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Department of Justice, but it was also urged upon the conference committee by the Department of Justice.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, in concluding my remarks, I desire to thank the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] and the other Senate conferees for the diligent work they did. The chairman of the full committee, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], was of immense help to the Senate conferees in carrying forward the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors. Also, I particularly appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], who served with us as Senate conferees on this measure.

I think the result is a good one, and one which we can commend to the Senate, believing that the projects will add to the total wealth of the country and will be of aid to all the States, and that the new features written into the bill will make the projects more worth while and of greater benefit and greater acceptance to all concerned.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr.

CASE] for what he has said; and again I acknowledge his distinguished leadership in the development of this bill and this program.

Mr. President, I ask that the conference report be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with the report.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I desire to make other statements about the report; therefore, I ask that the Senator from Connecticut be permitted to make his statement, without causing me to lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I wish to state that, particularly in recent years, since the very damaging floods in Connecticut in 1955, the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the chairman of the full committee [Mr. CHAVEZ], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] have shown very compassionate interest in the problems created in our section of the country by those terrible floods. I appreciate very much the consideration they have shown me this year when I have presented certain projects which have been incorporated in the bill. I am very grateful to them for that consideration and courtesy and cooperation.

Mr. President, I wish to have the RECORD show that I am opposed to House amendment No. 64 and to the other House amendments concerning cost-sharing, for reasons which I have previously stated in the RECORD. These amendments compound the inequities involved in present cost-sharing arrangements for flood control, instead of eliminating such inequities, as I have advocated.

Mr. President, let me state that I am very grateful to my friend, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], for the courtesy he has accorded me tonight.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to join in the commendations of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] for the work he has done on this program year after year. I know that the people of my State appreciate very much, indeed, the leadership the Senator from Oklahoma has given in this field.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 7634, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S.,
July 1, 1960.

Resolved, That the House agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7634) entitled "An Act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 15 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Pascagoula Harbor, Mississippi: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the project authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1954 (Public Law 790, Eighty-third Congress), House Document Numbered 98, Eighty-sixth Congress, to determine if further modification is warranted, and further modification of the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 34 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Hilo Harbor, Hawaii: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of a sea-wall to protect against tidal waves and excessive high tides, and the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 44 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 105. The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the project for improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, Iowa, and the mouth, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved March 2, 1945, to determine if modification is warranted to provide for a lake in the abandoned river channel of the Missouri River between river miles 710 and 715 for recreational purposes, by means of: (a) Construction of a levee extending along the left bank of the new channel to be constructed in the Middle Decatur Bend area of the Missouri River; and (b) construction of hydraulic-fill closures at both ends of the old channel, and such modification is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 62 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The plan for flood protection on the Chicopee River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 434, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $5,180,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 63 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for flood protection on the Westfield River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 109, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $3,240,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 64 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The plan for flood control and related purposes on the Farmington River, Connecticut and Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 443, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $12,052,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 84 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) East Point, Louisiana: House Document Numbered 406, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $273,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 85 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(d) Garland City, Arkansas: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of emergency bank protection at Garland City, Arkansas, and the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 87 and agree to the some with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Modification of the existing flood protection project for Village Creek, White River, and Mayberry Levee Districts, White River, Arkansas, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with plan I as contained in House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $294,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause a restudy to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of plan III as contained in the House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, and to report to Congress his findings thereon."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 93 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for the Coralville Reservoir on Iowa River in Iowa, as authorized by the Act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1215), is hereby modified in order to provide for a highway bridge across Coralville Reservoir at or near the Mehaffy site, such site to be mutually satisfactory to the Secretary of the Army, the chief engineer, Iowa State Highway Commission, and the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, Iowa, to replace the previously existing bridge crossing of Johnson County on County Road Y. Such bridge shall be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of the Army and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the chief engineer, Iowa State Highway Commission: Provided, That prior to the award of any contract for the construction of the bridge or the approach roads authorized by this paragraph, local interests, acting through the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, Iowa, shall contribute toward the cost of the construction of such bridge and approach roads such amounts as the Secretary of the Army shall determine to be equitable, and the United States shall pay all other costs of such bridge and approach roads."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 96 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for flood protection in the Gering and Mitchell Valleys, Nebraska, authorized by the Flood Control Act of July 3, 1958 (Public Law 500, Eighty-fifth Congress), in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 139, 84th Congress, is hereby modified to provide for such revisions in project scope and purposes due to changed conditions as may be found necessary by the Chief of Engineers, to provide needed protection in Gering Valley: Provided, That construction shall not be initiated until the Chief of Engineers shall submit a feasibility report, which shall be coordinated with the Soil Conservation Service, for the approval of the President which shall set forth the plan of improvement, its economic justification, and his recommendations for local cooperation except that construction shall not be initiated until the expiration of the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress following the date on which such report is transmitted to it but only if between the date of transmittal and the expiration of such 60-day period such report is not disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 97 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the project for flood protection at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, authorized by the Flood Control Act approved September 3, 1954, Public Law 780, Eighty-third Congress, in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 133, Eighty-fourth Congress, to determine whether extension of the authorized project to include flood protection in the reach between Western Avenue and Cherry Rock Dam is justified, and such modification is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 98 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for flood protection on Vermillion River, South Dakota, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 426, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $6,010,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 108 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for flood protection on Loyalhanna Creek, at Latrobe, Pennsylvania, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 383, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $2,568,300. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 111 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"GILA RIVER BASIN

"The plan of improvement for flood protection and allied purposes on the Gila and Salt Rivers, Gillespie Dam to McDowell Dam site, Arizona, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 279, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated Federal cost of $3,300,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 112 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"WHITEWATER RIVER BASIN, CALIFORNIA

"The project for flood protection on Tahchevah Creek at and in the vicinity of Palm Springs, California, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 171, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated Federal cost of $1,105,000: Provided, That non-Federal interests shall bear 50 percent of the cost of the project including the cost of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and relocations."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 116 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"GLEASON CREEK, NEVADA

"The project for flood protection on Gleason Creek, Nevada, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 388, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $450,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 117 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"GREAT SALT BASIN, UTAH

"The project for flood protection on the Salt Lake City streams, Jordan River Basin, Utah, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 213, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $6,060,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 153 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 301. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that owners and tenants whose property is acquired for public works projects of the United States of America shall be paid a just and reasonable consideration therefor. In order to facilitate the acquisition of land and interests therein by negotiation with property owners, to avoid litigation and to relieve congestion in the courts, the Secretary of the Army (or such other officers of the Department of the Army as he may designate) is authorized in any negotiation for the purchase of such property to pay a purchase price which will take into consideration the policy set forth in this section."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 154 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

"SEC. 302. Within six months after the date that Congress authorizes construction of a water resource development project under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Army, the Corps of Engineers shall make reasonable effort to advise owners and occupants in and adjacent to the project area as to the probable timing for the acquisition of lands for the project and for incidental rights-of-way, relocations, and any other requirements affecting owners and occupants. Within a reasonable time after initial appropriations are made for land acquisition or construction, including relocations, the Corps of Engineers shall conduct public meetings at locations convenient to owners and tenants to be displaced by the project in order to advise them of the proposed plans for acquisition and to afford them an opportunity to comment. To carry out the provisions of this section, the Chief of Engineers shall issue regulations to provide, among other things, dissemination of the following information to those affected: (1) factors considered in making the appraisals; (2) desire to purchase property without going to court; (3) legal right to submit to condemnation proceedings; (4) payments for moving expenses or other losses not covered by appraised market value; (5) occupancy during construction; (6) removal of improvements; (7) payments required from occupants of Government acquired land; (8) withdrawals by owners of deposits made in court by Government, and (9) use of land by owner when easement is acquired. The provisions of this section shall not subject the United States to any liability nor affect the validity of any acquisitions by purchase or condemnation and shall be exempt from the operations of the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, as amended (60 Stat. 237)."

On page 10 of the House engrossed bill, line 14, strike out "Numbered —," and insert in lieu thereof "Numbered 41,".

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 34, 44, 62, 63, 64, 84, 85, 87, 93, 96, 97, 98, 108, 111, 112, 116, 117, 153, and 154.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I move that the action whereby the conference report was approved and the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate were accepted be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF U.S. OFFICE OF AGING

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators BARTLETT, CLARK, RANDOLPH, LONG of Hawaii, MCCARTHY, HART, HUMPHREY, MURRAY, YARBOROUGH, and ENGLE, I send a bill to the desk, and ask that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3793) to establish the U.S. Office of Aging, introduced by Mr. MCNAMARA (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, it is one of the great achievements of history that there are now 16 million Americans over age 65, and 20 million will be over 65 just 15 years from now. We are faced with a population explosion at the far end of life's cycle.

Instead of boasting of machines and gimmicks, let us boast of human beings. Let us boast that while once even the wealth of monarchs could not prevent early mortality, people of every income and social level now can expect long lives. Of all the revolutions wrought in this revolutionary 20th century, this is one of the most profound.

It brings us to a new frontier in the history of man's development, a frontier roughly comparable to the human territory opened up by the invention of psychology and psychiatry.

Living longer means that the entire territory of innate resources must be explored minutely. Insight and perception, imagination and creativity must be cultivated to their fullest. They must be given the setting and climate in which to flower.

Let us bend some of the ingenuity which has devised so many marvelous machines—electronic brains, stereophonic phonographs, weather satellites—to the greater task of making life worth living for the millions of us who are reaching retirement age.

A DECLARATION OF OBJECTIVES FOR SENIOR AMERICANS

What objectives should the Nation seek for and with its senior citizens? An adequate income; the best possible physical and mental health; suitable housing, independently selected; full restorative services for those who require institutional care; opportunity for employment with no discrimination because of age; retirement in health, honor and dignity; pursuit of meaningful activity; efficient community services when needed; immediate benefits from proven research knowledge; and freedom, independence and the free exercise of individual initiative.

In other words, America's senior citizens want and need society's recognition that they are people like the rest of us, with problems like ours which differ only in degree, not in kind.

UNITED STATES OFFICE OF THE AGING

I propose today that we establish an agency in the Federal Government dedicated to working toward the accomplishment of these objectives as a matter of basic national concern. We are ready for and we require a high-level agency, created and backed by the Congress, to serve as an eloquent spokesman for senior citizens everywhere.

When the Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging published its report in January 1960, we pointed out that:

A major need of America's aged and aging is a central agency in the Federal establishment to represent them and their problems. As of now there is no single office legislatively authorized to serve as a clear point of contact for expressing the views, needs, grievances, and desires of the elderly.

We therefore recommended that:

Legislation be considered in 1960 to establish a U.S. Office of the Aging concerned full time with the full range of problems of America's senior citizens.

What would be the functions of the Office?

It would serve as a Federal clearinghouse for information from all the public and private groups which concern themselves with the problems of the elderly.

It would stimulate programs for the elderly on the Federal, State, and local levels and would assist the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, to make recommendations in this field.

It would promote research and demonstration projects, such as senior centers, counseling programs, and studies of what social, recreational, and training programs and facilities are needed in the field.

It would make possible the coordination of the many isolated programs for the elderly now being carried on by such independent agencies as the Veterans' Administration and the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Each of the 50 States has its own programs for the elderly, but assessing the work and using the information acquired by the other 49 States is virtually impossible because of the lack of a coordinating agency.

It would provide stimulation, guidance and assistance to States and localities, to organizations and groups working in the field of aging through technical, professional advice and conferences.

It would administer grants to public and nonprofit groups to establish and evaluate demonstration programs of various kinds to enlarge the civic contributions of our senior citizens and to enhance their personal growth.

It would identify unmet needs and formulate plans for dealing with them.

It could work with industry, labor, farm and other groups for greater utilization of the potentials of older citizens.

As the subcommittee commented in its report, "The creation of a U.S. Office of Aging will not automatically solve the problems of senior citizens." But setting up an Office, providing it with funds, personnel and the authority necessary to give full attention to those problems would be a major advance in devising the means of dealing with them.

Right now, we are without a central core of direction and coordination in this field. The U.S. Office of Aging would constitute that core.

The executive branch of the Federal Government recognizes and represents within its departments a multitude of interests and activities important to this Nation.

There is an Assistant Secretary of Interior for Fish and Wildlife, and one for Mineral Resources, and one for Public Land Management, and still another for Water and Power. In the Bureau of Mines, there is a Division of Minerals, a Division of Petroleum, a Division of Anthracite, and a Division of Bituminous Coal.

I use these examples not because there is any question in my mind that the services they perform are essential, but to give a picture of how carefully represented are many of our national interests which do not match in depth and scope the problems of the elderly.

The proposed Office of Aging is not a suggestion to add more desks, telephones and offices in Washington. But after years of reports, studies and conferences, it is now certain that unless a specific agency is created with power and responsibility to seek action, very little will be done. These problems are not going to diminish or oblige those who would rather talk than act. They are with us now; they will be even more with us in the future.

Someone has to have full-time responsibility, backed by professional knowledge and ability and the strong desire to represent effectively in the Federal Government a group now buffeted about from agency to agency in fragmented fashion.

There are currently many bits and pieces of programs for older persons in the Federal Government. More than two dozen agencies each try to deal with some isolated aspect of aging. The U.S. Office of Aging would not assume any of these functions; it would stimulate, consult and provide a means of coordination, but it would not function as a direct operating agency.

A background paper on Federal organizations and programs has been prepared for the 1961 White House Conference on Aging, which shows the scattering of approaches within the Federal Government to problems of older persons. Five separate departments have functions dealing with the older persons, and five additional independent agencies are concerned within their specific fields.

It is asserted by this administration that the Federal Council on Aging is already performing the stimulating, coordinating functions of an Office of Aging.

Let me set this matter straight. The Council is a part-time interdepartmental committee which merely reviews existing programs. Its members are the Secretaries of the departments and the heads of the independent agencies mentioned above. The Office of Defense Mobilization and the National Science Foundation are also represented.

The Council meets infrequently, and in its 4 years of existence has never recommended a single piece of legislation. In fact, its members have difficulty even agreeing to an agenda for its meetings.

Because its members necessarily consider the Council just one more peripheral activity, easily shouldered out of the way by more critical matters, it has neither the inclination nor the ability to formulate broad national policy. No matter how sincere their intentions, the Secretaries and agency heads cannot but consider the Council—which, because of its ex officio status, is easily embroiled in conflicts of jurisdiction and prerogative—little more than a nuisance.

Is the special staff on aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare authorized to formulate national policy? No. It is simply a means of organizing committee discussion groups within the Department to exchange information and to stimulate activity as a latent byproduct.

With only 12 employees—including secretaries and clerical staff—the special staff has provided communities with information which it can readily collect or compile from published material. It issues a news bulletin, cooperates with newsmen, and publishes a bibliography—functions which need to be performed. But it is not an agency which can represent the older persons of this country and assist in forming national policy concerning them.

When Oveta Culp Hobby was the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare some 5 years ago, she admitted that her Department was 10 years behind in its work on the problems of the aging. The Department had nine employees working in this field. Three years later, there were 10 employees; by the end of 1959, the staff had reached a dozen.

It is clear that the functions and purposes of the proposed U.S. Office of Aging are not being fulfilled by agencies. Quite the reverse is true. The functions which it would perform are now going begging.

AN ANALOGY: THE CHILDREN'S BUREAU

In many ways the proposal to create the U.S. Office of Aging is similar to the establishment of the Children's Bureau in 1912. In a period of almost 50 years it has made incalculable contributions to the health, welfare, and long life expectancy of America's children. It marked a major milestone in recognizing that the welfare of children is an appropriate concern of the Federal Government.

The purpose of the Children's Bureau "is to serve all children" everywhere. It is concerned with their health problems, employment, housing, adoption, social services—all interrelated and requiring a view of the child not as fragmented pieces, but as a whole person. Its great contributions have been based on the concept of preventing problems rather than having to deal with them in their acute stages.

It is specifically in these areas that the U.S. Office of Aging will fulfill its essential role. It will provide a focal point for consideration of the needs of older persons as whole people. The problems of the Nation's senior citizens are emerging problems now reaching the scope where national attention and therefore a national agency is required.

Just as the Children's Bureau found that:

> The principle that the best type of treatment for a handicapped child requires a team of professional workers became more and more the rule * * * ("Four Decades of Action for Children," p. 72).

So the Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging concluded that the solution to the health problems of the elderly—> lies not in a picemeal attack on any one of the many facets of the problem, but rather in coming to grips with as many of the facets as can be identified.

We cannot separate the housing needs of the elderly from the health needs of the elderly.

We cannot isolate their employment problems from their recreation problems.

We cannot propose solutions to their medical care problems in a vacuum; nor can we devise retraining programs for them without awareness of their health problems.

The anxieties and needs of the elderly, in short, are circular. They cannot be dealt with simply or simplemindedly.

For the individual elderly person, the lack of coordination and focus is one of the most persistent aggravations of existing problems. When in trouble or in doubt, where does he go? Perhaps to half a dozen agencies, none of which may be able to give him a whole answer to all the facets of his problem. An Office of the Aging would perform this role and in so doing remove a burden from departments and agencies with limited personnel and competencies.

In 1950, President Harry S. Truman called the First National Conference on Aging. On that occasion, he pointed to the need to create opportunities for older citizens "to stand on their own feet and live their lives in self-respect and freedom from fear and want." He called for—

> Imaginative thinking about the special problems of health, housing, and recreation that older people face. Our modern way of life has created conditions that too often deprive older people of the place in the community that they used to have.

A decade has passed, and little has been done in the executive branch to move beyond the recommendations of the 1950 Conference. The present special staff on aging at the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—an outgrowth of the 1950 Conference—has, as I have indicated, done little to delineate Federal responsibility in this area.

In the States, there has been considerable activity, though solid accomplishment has been forthcoming in only a few.

In the Congress, 49 bills have been introduced in the past decade proposing a Bureau of Older Persons within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare or a U.S. Commission on Aging and Aged. Since 1950, when former Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas proposed a select committee to investigate and study problems of older persons, there has been a steady growth of interest in a Federal agency. A Senate bill in the 84th Congress for establishment of a U.S. Commission on Aging and Aged had 54 cosponsors.

Hearings on a Bureau of Older Persons were held in 1958 by the House Education and Labor Committee, and a number of House Members have been actively supporting this proposal since that time.

I do not need to point out the extensive work which the Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging has done in 1959 and 1960—though I think my pride in that work is pardonable. I believe that no other body has taken such a broad view of the field, collected such reliable data or made such important proposals. It will be sore disappointment to me if the work we have done does not culminate in the establishment of a U.S. Office of the Aging.

I would not want our achievement to be relegated to the category of "just one more study."

A witness at our Grand Rapids hearing said:

> Possibly the Government has pamphlets on aging and in the line of what foods to eat and what kind of exercise and I would like to get hold of some of the pamphlets. * * * I have written and I have a couple of pamphlets but it doesn't cover very much. * * * They have farmer bulletins out and they cover everything the farmer wants to know about feeding animals * * * but there is nothing about feeding a human like me.

I think his statement needs no embellishment from me.

Place it beside the Declaration of Objectives for Senior Americans, with which I began, and you will have a picture of what the Federal Government can and should be doing for its senior citizens.

When we establish the U.S. Office for the Aging, we should also create the post of Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the Aging. The fact that this will be a top-level post will make clear the magnitude of the job we hope to do in this field.

I propose that the Office of the Aging shall administer a program of grants for: (a) Planning assistance to each State to conduct studies, develop plans for new programs, and improve and coordinate existing programs; (b) project grants to the States to initiate and operate demonstration programs to further the implementing of the Declaration of Objectives for Senior Americans; (c) assistance to nonprofit institutions and organizations to conduct research and training programs in the field.

I propose, also, the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the Aged and Aging, composed of professional and public members, to keep the Assistant Secretary and the Office abreast of what is happening in local communities.

In addition, I suggest the creation of an Interdepartmental Committee on Aging, composed of the Secretaries and Administrators of Federal agencies in the field, to strengthen existing programs in the departments, keep the President informed of executive and legislative action, and to encourage and facilitate Federal, State and local relationships.

The aim of this new establishment would be to see to it that the Federal Government does not continue to fail its elderly citizens, as it has done for all too long.

We have had proof in every area of human activity that not only do we not suddenly lose our talents and faculties, but that, indeed, many of us enter a truly golden period of life after 65, or 70, 80, and 90. President Harry Truman, Winston Churchill, Bernard Baruch, Grandma Moses, Senator Theodore Green, Senator James Murray, Senator Joseph O'Mahoney, Senator Carl Hayden, Robert Frost, Carl Sandburg, Dean Roscoe Pound and Eleanor Roosevelt—these are just a few of the names that come to mind when we begin to call the honor roll of our distinguished senior statesmen. All of them prove that the old saw about teaching an old dog new tricks is outmoded—if it were ever true.

None of us has realized all his gifts and talents. None of us has fulfilled all his promise.

The golden age ought to be the opportunity to reach one's outer limits. The latter half of life ought to be a time when we are freed of fetters and have the chance to soar to whatever heights we are capable of reaching.

What I propose today is a means to help all of us grasp that chance when it comes.

I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the summary and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BILL TO ESTABLISH THE U.S. OFFICE OF AGING

A major recommendation of the Senate Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging, in its report of February 1960, called for legislation to establish the U.S. Office of Aging, concerned full time with the full range of problems of America's senior citizens.

In line with this recommendation, the attached bill provides for the creation of the U.S. Office of Aging within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and headed by an Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for Aging. The bill authorizes $2,090,000 for planning grants to the States to help them organize to meet the problems of aging in their States and to conduct necessary surveys and studies. It further authorizes $10 million in project grants to expand demonstrations, in sustaining the creative contributions of the elderly, and $2 million for training personnel and research.

A DECLARATION OF OBJECTIVES FOR SENIOR AMERICANS

The bill sets for a 10-point declaration of objectives for senior Americans as the declared policy of the United States to insure for them a life of recognition, honor, and dignity in active retirement. These objectives are:

1. An adequate income.
2. The best possible physical and mental health.
3. Suitable housing.
4. Full restorative services.
5. Equal opportunity to employment.
6. Retirement in health, honor, and dignity.
7. Pursuit of meaningful activity.
8. Efficient community services when needed.
9. Immediate benefit from proven research knowledge.
10. Freedom, independence, and the free exercise of individual initiative.

THE U.S. OFFICE OF AGING

1. The act establishes the U.S. Office of Aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

2. It creates a new position of the Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare for Aging to be head of the Office of Aging and to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

3. Functions of the Office: (a) A clearing house of information related to problems of the aged and aging; (b) assist the Secretary in all matters pertaining to the aging; (c) administer grants provided by the act; (d) conduct research and demonstration programs in the field of aging; (e) provide technical assistance and consultation to States and localities; (f) prepare and publish educational materials dealing with welfare of older persons; (g) gather statistics in the field of aging.

Grant programs

The act provides for three types of grant programs to be administered by the U.S. Office of Aging within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

1. Planning grants of $2,090,000 ($40,000 to each State—$10,000 to the Virgin Islands) to assist each State to conduct studies, develop plans for new programs, and improve and coordinate existing programs.

2. Project grants to the States to intiate and operate projects to further the policies set forth in the Declaration of Objectives for Senior Americans.

(a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, $10 million are authorized for appropriation, rising to $15 million in 1962, $20 million in 1963, and $25 million for fiscal year 1964.

(b) These funds are to be granted to the States in accordance with a Hill-Burton formula of matching grants, with a minimum of $50,000 to each State.

(c) State plans for such project grants shall be approved by the Secretary.

3. The act authorizes grants to nonprofit institutions and organizations to conduct research and training programs. The sum of $2 million is authorized for this purpose.

An advisory committee on the aged and aging

The Secretary is authorized to establish an advisory committee on the aged and aging composed of professional and public members.

An interdepartmental committee on problems of aging

The act authorizes the creation of an interdepartmental committee on aging composed of the Secretary of HEW as chairman, and the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce, Treasury, and Agriculture, and the Administrators of HHFA, VA, and the Civil Service Commission.

1. Functions of the interdepartmental committee: (a) To strengthen and coordinate existing programs in the departments; (b) advise the President with respect to executive and legislative action; (c) facilitate Federal, State, local relationships across departmental lines.

2. The Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for Aging is to be the executive director of the committee and he would utilize the services of the U.S. Office of Aging as the staff of the interdepartmental committee.

Reports to the President and the Congress

The Secretary of HEW is to submit to the President and the Congress a report of programs under this act in the field of aging by January 1, 1962.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—DECLARATION OF OBJECTIVES; DEFINITIONS

Section 101: The Congress finds and sets forth as the policy of the United States a declaration of objectives for senior Americans as follows:

(1) An adequate income; (2) the best possible physical and mental health; (3) suitable housing; (4) full restorative services; (5) equal opportunity to employment; (6) retirement in health, honor, and dignity; (7) pursuit of meaningful activity; (8) efficient community services when needed; (9) immediate benefit from proven research knowledge; (10) freedom, independence, and the free exercise of initiative.

Section 102: Defines the "Secretary" as Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Defines "Assistant Secretary" as the Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for Aging.

TITLE II—U.S. OFFICE OF AGING

Section 201: (a) This section creates the United States Office of Aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

(b) It authorizes the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to head the Office of Aging.

Section 202: Lists the functions of the Office of Aging as follows: (1) Clearinghouse for information; (2) assist the Secretary of HEW on all matters of aging; (3) administer grants provided in the act; (4) conduct and arrange for research and demonstration programs; (5) provide technical assistance and consultation to States and localities; (6) prepare and publish educational materials; (7) gather statistics in the field of aging.

TITLE III—PLANNING GRANTS

Section 301: Authorizes an appropriation of $2,090,000 to assist the States in conducting studies and developing plans for new programs, or improving existing programs in aging.

Section 302: Sets forth the conditions under which the Secretary shall approve plans for planning grants. The plans should include: (1) Designation of a State officer or agency with responsibility for developing plans; (2) evidence that consultation has taken place with other State agencies; (3) provision for an analysis of needs and potentialities in the State and a set of priorities; (4) reports by the designated State agency to the Secretary.

Section 303: The appropriation for planning grants is to be allotted in equal shares among the States, except that the Virgin Islands shall be allotted $10,000.

TITLE IV. PROJECT GRANTS

Section 401: (a) Authorizes appropriations to assist the States to initiate and operate projects to fulfill the objectives of the Declaration of Objectives for Senior Americans. Authorized appropriations are: $10 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961; $15 million—June 30, 1962; $20 million—June 30, 1963, and $25 million—June 30, 1964.

(b) Plans are to be submitted by the States to the Secretary and he shall approve a State plan if he finds that it includes provision for: (1) Projects which will further one or more policies of the Declaration of Objectives for Senior Americans. (2) Administrative responsibility in a single State officer or agency. (3) Coordination of State and local programs. (4) Consultation with voluntary organizations. (5) Financial participation by the State in each major category of service and the method of allocating funds among participating agencies. (6) Proper methods of administration. (7) Reports by the State officer or agency administering the plan.

Section 403: The sums appropriated for project grants are to be allotted to each State in accordance with the ratio of its population aged 65 or over to the total such population for the country. The allotment of no State shall be less than $50,000.

Funds not used by any State may be reallotted among other States for the succeeding fiscal year.

The Federal share of the grant varies in accordance with the per capita income of each State, except that the Federal share shall not be less than 33⅓ percent or more than 66⅔ percent.

The Secretary of HEW is to announce the Federal shares between July 1 and September 30 of each odd-numbered year.

TITLE V. GRANTS TO INSTITUTIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS

Section 501: Grants are authorized amounting to $2 million to nonprofit institutions and organizations to train personnel in the field of aging and carry out research.

TITLE VI. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Section 601: (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall cooperate with and give technical assistance to States and localities in matters relating to the needs of older persons.

(b) The Secretary is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the act.

(c) There is an authorization for the necessary sums to administer the act for each fiscal year.

Section 602: The Secretary is authorized to establish an Advisory Committee on the Aged and Aging composed of professional and public members to advise and assist him in the administration of the act.

Section 603: Sets forth the method of computing payments by the Secretary under title IV of the act.

Section 604: Provides for conditions under which payment can be withheld and for judicial review.

Section 605: (a) The act establishes an Interdepartmental Committee on Problems of Aging composed of the Secretary of HEW as chairman, the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce, Treasury, and Agriculture, the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and Veterans Affairs, and the Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission.

(b) Functions of the Interdepartmental Committee: (1) to strengthen and coordinate existing programs, (2) to advise the President on legislation, (3) to facilitate Federal-State-local relationships on an integrated basis.

(c) The Assistant Secretary of HEW for Aging is to serve as the Executive Director of the Committee and to use the Office of Aging as the staff for it.

Section 606: Directs the Secretary to transmit to the President and Congress a report on the administration of the act with recommendations as he deems advisable.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who has been doing such a wonderful job as head of the special or subcommittee studying the problems of the aging and aged, I shall say something a little later about the Republican claims as to what they have done for housing for elderly. I hope the Senator will be here at that time, because he has studied that subject.

FEDERAL AVIATION AGENCY

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, on last Monday, June 27, I made some remarks on the floor relative to attacks that have been leveled against the Federal Aviation Agency and Administrator Elwood Quesada. Those remarks appear beginning at page 14520 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 27, 1960. In supplement to those remarks, I send to the desk an exchange of letters I have had with Mr. J. B. Hartranft, Jr., president of the Aircraft Owners & Pilots Association. I ask unanimous consent that these letters be printed in the body of the RECORD. I may say, further, that the appointment which Mr. Hartranft requested has been set for 9:30 a.m. tomorrow, Saturday.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AIRCRAFT OWNERS & PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D.C., June 30, 1960.

Hon. ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHOEPPEL: Upon my return from the west coast, my attention has been directed to the extensive remarks made by your good self and Senator GOLDWATER in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 27.

As I understand the situation, our office endeavored to coordinate a proposed statement concerning your views on a subject of interest to our constituency. Possibly through some misunderstanding, instead of our having the benefit of your comment which we requested, you apparently chose to spread the entire matter out in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In so doing you refer to an alleged mailing which, in fact, has never been made. I am informed that your office was advised that the mailing was being held up pending your comment.

Since your discussion involves a nonexistent mailing, I suggest that we have a rather delicate situation at hand. We wish to proceed toward a solution which is fair and equitable and I should appreciate an opportunity of discussing the matter with you personally at your earliest convenience. Will you please inform me of your pleasure in this matter?

Cordially,

J. B. HARTRANFT, Jr.,
President.

U.S. SENATE,
July 1, 1960.

Mr. J. B. HARTRANFT, Jr.,
President, Aircraft Owners & Pilots Association, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. HARTRANFT: Your letter of June 30 correctly suggests that I did not know that your organization was sitting on the circular that formed the basis for my floor remarks last Monday (June 27). Forgive me for thinking that the decision not to mail it was reached after I spoke in the Senate.

The preceding Friday, someone who identified himself as Max Karant phoned my administrative assistant, Joe Skubitz, and said that a mailing was being prepared that would go to all pilots in Kansas, and that my comments were requested. Mr. Skubitz asked that the proposed mailing be sent in. On Saturday, he received the letter and circular that I put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD last Monday.

It as easy to believe that your mailing had already been made for these reasons:

1. The circular was a finished product, not a draft. It had apparently been produced by an offset process, which is not used for making just a few copies.

2. The text was consistent in tone with other abusive documents that your organization has recently distributed by way of comment on persons with whom it disagrees.

3. A Kansas pilot, whose previous letters have shown him to be on your mailing list, had already written me saying that one of the "sophisticated lobbyists" to whom I had referred in my June 15 remarks on the floor had sent him the text of those remarks from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. These same remarks were the basis of your projected circular.

If I was not intended to believe that your mailing had already gone out, I am left to infer that Mr. Karant's letter, in the context of circumstances, was intended to blackmail me into silence and leave me quaking in my boots.

I shall, of course, be glad to talk this matter over with you, but these final 2 days of the session are extremely busy. I have asked my Secretary, Miss Voth, to try to work out a mutually convenient time.

Meanwhile, I can deal directly with the root of your complaint, which is that I said AOPA mailed what it threatened to mail and you now say that it didn't. I accept your denial and will give it as much currency as I gave my original statement. This I can do by putting this exchange of letters in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I plan no mailing of reprints of my June 27 remarks or of this exchange of letters except to people who write to me and quote what AOPA is saying about the FAA, Administrator Elwood Quesada, and me.

Sincerely,

ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Further, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial entitled "Arrogant Nonsense," and published in the Washington Evening Star of Thursday, June 30, 1960 be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARROGANT NONSENSE

E. R. Quesada, Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, has become the target of a continuing and outrageous campaign apparently designed to force him out of the vital post he has held since its creation more than a year ago. Latest blast at the FAA head has come from the Aircraft Owners & Pilots Association, whose official magazine has called on the White House to "quietly retire its belligerent general and replace him with a career civilian." The suggestion is arrogant nonsense.

It is nonsense because if Mr. Quesada (he gave up his military title when President Eisenhower drafted him for the job) has shown any belligerence it has been in behalf of public safety. All of the open and covert attacks on the FAA Administrator by airline and private pilots seemingly have been triggered by issuance of FAA rules and orders designed to make flying safer for everyone—including the plane crews.

Most of the criticism has come from the Air Line Pilots Association, which has carried on a running fire of sniping at Mr. Quesada. The ALPA attacks have been directed at regulations tightening up on pilot qualifications and inflight inspections of operating personnel. Among the protested moves were an order grounding all pilots over 60, a requirement for periodic physical examinations of pilots by specially designated physicians and a rule that FAA inspectors must occupy the seat immediately behind the chief pilot of a jet airliner.

An experienced pilot himself, Mr. Quesada was picked for the FAA post because of his demonstrated competence in the field of aviation safety. From the public record to date, all of his actions since taking over that important task have been in accord with his belief that the public interest must take precedence over pilot interest. Any other policy by a public servant in a position of such grave responsibility would be intolerable. The President ought to give the demands for Mr. Quesada's removal the treatment they deserve—consignment to the wastebasket.

FACTS AND FIGURES ON THE PUBLIC DEBT AND INTEREST CHARGES SINCE 1900—THE FISCAL RECORD OF THE TWO POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, the fiscal record—the facts and figures on the public debt since 1900—is an eye-opening revelation of the record of our two major political parties in this important area.

This record has been compiled by the senior Republican member of the Senate Finance Committee, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS].

I ask unanimous consent that this report be inserted at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FACTS AND FIGURES ON THE PUBLIC DEBT AND INTEREST CHARGES SINCE 1900—THE FISCAL RECORD OF THE TWO POLITICAL PARTIES

(By U.S. Senator JOHN J. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, senior Republican member, Senate Finance Committee)

This is an analysis of the fiscal record left by the two political parties since 1900.

Since 1900, Republicans have controlled the Presidency during 32 of the 60 fiscal years. Democrats were in office during 28 years. However, President Truman disclaimed responsibility for events during the 80th Congress (fiscal years 1948 and 1949); in the following analysis, therefore, those years are assigned to Republicans, not Democrats.

In this analysis, credit is assigned to the party which was in power at the beginning of the fiscal year, not the end:

	Million
During 34 Republican years:
Total budget deficits	$30,383
Total budget surpluses	20,279
Net deficit	9,654
During 26 Democratic years:
Total budget deficits	273,588
Total budget surpluses	5,112
Net deficit	268,476
Net deficit, 1901–60	278,130

Republicans' share, 3.5 percent of total; Democrats' share, 96.5 percent of total.

	Million
Interest burden in Federal budget for fiscal year 1961	$9,585
Republicans' share (3.5 percent of total)	335
Democrats' share (96.5 percent of total)	9,250

Additional Data:	Percent
Interest burden, fiscal year 1961, as percent of total Federal budget:
Total	12.0
Republicans' share	0.4
Democrats' share	11.6
	Billion
Total cost of interest payments on the Federal debt:
1934–60	$124.6
1901–33	12.7
1901–60	111.9

NOTE.—Total interest payments, 1901–80, $10.8 billion; estimated interest payments, 1961 alone, $9.6 billion.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FULBRIGHT ON OPPOSITION TO THE ANTARCTIC TREATY

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to a telegram sent by the Senator from California [Mr. ENGLE] and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING] to certain of our colleagues, notifying them of a meeting in the latter's office on Monday last. The telegram strongly opposed ratification of the Antarctic Treaty. It contained allegations about supposed setbacks for the United States which would flow from having the treaty come into force. Had these allegations been brought to my notice at an earlier date, I would have immediately reacted by inserting a rebuttal in the RECORD. Fortunately, I still have the opportunity to point out the sweeping statements of an erroneous nature contained in the telegram.

Let me quote from the telegram, as follows:

We strongly oppose ratification of this treaty at this time because:

(1) By ratification, United States would be giving up right to claim substantial portions of Antarctica, would be conceding validity of claims of other nations, and would be putting seal of approval on Soviet presence there.

Mr. President, nothing more in rebuttal is required than the reading of article IV of the treaty, as follows:

ARTICLE IV

1. Nothing contained in the present treaty shall be interpreted as:

(a) a renunciation by any contracting party of previously asserted rights of or claims to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica;

(b) a renunciation or diminution by any contracting party of any basis of claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica which it may have whether as a result of its activities or those of its nationals in Antarctica, or otherwise;

(c) prejudicing the position of any contracting party as regards its recognition or nonrecognition of any other State's rights of or claim or basis of claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica.

2. No acts or activities taking place while the present treaty is in force shall constitute a basis for asserting, supporting, or denying a claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica or create any rights of sovereignty in Antarctica. No new claim, or enlargement of an existing claim, to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica shall be asserted while the present treaty is in force.

The only basis for disputing the conclusive character of article IV is to claim that the language does not mean what it states. I do not believe I have ever seen a more forceful and conclusive expression of intentions in any treaty. If this does not mean what it says, then human beings and nations cannot communicate with each other.

Something more needs to be said about the charge that we are approving the Soviet presence in Antarctica. The treaty has been signed by 12 countries, but it will be open to all members of the United Nations and, under certain conditions, to all countries unanimously invited to accede. This means what is true right now—that no one country or group of countries has the legal right to prevent any nation from gaining access to Antarctica. This is not a question of approval, but purely one of recognizing the fact that the U.S.S.R. is already on the continent.

I will now quote from the telegram the other reasons for opposition urged upon my colleagues:

(2) By agreeing to mutual inspection and disarmament with Soviet Union of bases on Antarctica, we are putting ourselves at mercy of Russian satellites and Red China which are not signatories to treaty. Russian and United States scientific bases would be subject to inspection but any bases put on Antarctica by Red China and Russian satellites would not be subject to inspection and would not necessarily be used for peaceful, scientific pursuits.

The most notable fact about this general argument is that, in the absence of a treaty, there is absolutely nothing to prevent Communist China, the Soviet satellites, or any other country from setting foot on antarctic territory whenever or wherever desired. With the treaty in force on the other hand, while there is no complete assurance that a nation not willing to accede to the treaty would be unable to establish itself in Antarctica there are several provisions bearing upon this problem.

First, article X provides that:

Each of the contracting parties undertakes to exert appropriate efforts, consistent with the Charter of the United Nations, to the end that no one engages in any activity in Antarctica contrary to the principles or purposes of the present treaty.

This means that it would be incumbent upon the Soviet Union, equally with the United States and other free world countries, to prevent unauthorized activity on the continent.

A second point is that because of the enormous difficulty of physical access to Antarctica, only a nation with considerable experience and materiel would be interested in establishing itself on the continent. In this connection, I might point out that while the Soviet Union turned over one of its antarctic scientific stations to Poland some time back, the Poles did not maintain it, and actually removed themselves from the area. Another point is that with the complete unilateral right of inspection in the entire treaty area, and especially the right of aerial overflight, there is virtually no possibility that any pursuits contrary to the provisions of the treaty could be carried out.

Finally, since any benefits that the Soviet Union might gain from the continent under the provisions of the treaty presumably would be made known to other members of the Sino-Soviet bloc, there seems very little reason for such other members to wish to go to the great expense of participating in Antarctica activity on an individual basis.

Mr. President, I believe each of these points made in the telegram is conclusively rebutted by a reading of the treaty and the Foreign Relations Committee hearing record. I am completely at a loss for an explanation of the erroneous data which have been circulated among Members of this body. Most inexplicable is the closing phrase in the telegram, which urges, as an alternative, voting "for recommittal until these questions are satisfactorily resolved." How could we resolve these questions, when they were not directed to the committee, by sending a copy of the telegram to the committee chairman?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, following my remarks, a copy of the telegram which was sent by the Senators named.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Because Antarctic Treaty ratification scheduled for action Monday, meeting has been moved up and will be held Monday at 9:45 a.m. in Senator GRUENING's office.

We strongly oppose ratification of this treaty at this time because:

(1) By ratification, United States would be giving up right to claim substantial portions of Antarctica, would be conceding validity of claims of other nations, and would be putting seal of approval on Soviet presence there.

(2) By agreeing to mutual inspection and disarmament with Soviet Union of bases on Antarctica, we are putting ourselves at mercy of Russian satellites and Red China which are not signatories to treaty. Russian and United States scientific bases would be subject to inspection but any bases put on Antarctica by Red China and Russian satellites would not be subject to inspection and would not necessarily be used for peaceful, scientific pursuits.

Urge you to attend meeting and, in any event, to vote against ratification of treaty or for recommittal until these questions are satisfactorily resolved.

CLAIR ENGLE,
U.S. Senator.
ERNEST GRUENING,
U.S. Senator.

PASSPORT LEGISLATION

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I note that the Judiciary Committee has reported to the Senate, S. 2652. The report number is 1811. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a considerable portion of S. 2652 deals with the subject of passports.

It is well known that there are before the Senate several bills which deal, in whole or in part, with the subject of passports. The Committee on Foreign Relations has four passport bills pending before it. S. 806, introduced by Senators HUMPHREY and MORSE and others, is concerned with the grounds for denial of passports to individuals and with the imposition of bans on travel to certain areas. S. 2315, introduced by Senator WILEY, deals primarily with the denial of passports to "supporters of the international Communist movement," but it contains also procedures for the issuance of passports and the review thereof. S. 2287, my own bill, is a comprehensive revision of all existing passport law. H.R. 9069, which passed the House of Representatives on September 9, 1959, is also pending before the committee. It deals with the questions of issuing passports to supporters of communism and of general geographic limitations on travel of Americans abroad.

Other passport bills are pending in two other committees. S. 1303, introduced by Senator EASTLAND, is before the Senate Judiciary Committee; and S. 2095, introduced by Senator MUNDT, is pending in the Committee on Government Operations.

I need not point out that the subject of passport legislation is quite controversial. The extensive hearings which the Committee on Foreign Relations has held each year for the past 3 years bear this out. I shall not, however, discuss today the merits of passport questions.

In the closing hours before the Senate recesses, I wish to speak on a procedural point. I desire to assert once again the primary jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations over passport legislation. The standing rules of the Senate provide that there shall be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations all proposed legislation relating to the following subjects:

1. Relations of the United States with foreign nations generally.

4. Protection of American citizens abroad and expatriation.

9. Measures relating to the diplomatic service.

11. Measures to foster commercial intercourse with foreign nations and to safeguard American business interests abroad.

Passports are issued to American citizens by the Department of State. The Committee on Foreign Relations has jurisdiction over the Department of State.

Mr. President, I have expressed this position by letter to the chairman of the two committees, other than the Foreign Relations Committee, which have passport bills before them. With respect to S. 2652 in particular, I notified the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, by letter dated September 12, 1959, that in my opinion S. 2652 dealt primarily with the subject of passports and that such provisions were within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert the letter at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 12, 1959.

The Honorable JAMES O. EASTLAND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I refer to my letter to you dated May 2, 1959, in which I asked, regarding S. 1303, dealing with the issuance of passports, whether you continued to adhere to the view which you expressed in the Senate on July 10, 1958; namely, "I think the jurisdiction over this subject properly rests in the Committee on Foreign Relations." Since no reply has been received, I should like to renew my request for your views on the desirability of having S. 1303 rereferred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I should also like to call your attention to the fact that the 15-page bill, S. 2652, introduced by Senators DODD and KEATING on September 7, which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, consists, except for the first 46 lines thereof, entirely of provisions which would make changes in laws relating to passports. Such provisions, it seems to me, are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

With kind personal regards.

Very truly yours,

J. W. FULBRIGHT,
Chairman.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the purpose of my remarks today is to notify the Senate that if S. 2652 is laid before the Senate I intend to move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the consideration of the provisions dealing with passports which the bill contains.

AMENDMENT OF UNIFORM NARCOTICS DRUG ACT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1887, House bill 12584.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 12584) to amend the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement of the purpose of the bill as reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] is vitally interested.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act for the District of Columbia by deleting from exempt preparations those containing not more than one-sixth of a grain of dihydrocodeinone or any of its salts, and places such preparations within the scope of the act so as to require that they be dispensed or sold at retail only on prescription.

Section 10 of the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act for the District of Columbia, as amended, exempts from the provisions of that act the prescribing, administering, dispensing, or selling at retail of "any medicinal preparation that contains in one fluid ounce or, if a solid or semisolid preparation, in one avoirdupois ounce (1) not more than two grains of opium, (2) not more than one-quarter of a grain of morphine or any of its salts, (3) not more than one grain of codeine or of any of its salts, (4) not more than one-eighth of a grain of heroin or any of its salts, (5) not more than one-sixth of a grain of dihydrocodeinone or any of its salts."

The purpose of the bill is accomplished by deleting clause 5 from existing law as set forth above.

The Department of the Treasury has advised the committee that it has received widespread reports that certain cough preparations containing one-sixth of a grain of dihydrocodeinone to the ounce are being used abusively by numerous persons in the lower age groups, and that in the past few months several States, by regulation, have removed such preparations from the exempt category.

The report of the Department of the Treasury to the committee on an identical proposal (S. 3615) states, in part:

"Under Public Law 86-429, effective January 1, 1961, authority has been granted to the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate to specify the preparations which shall be permitted in the exempt preparations category, and it is intended to eliminate those preparations containing dihydrocodeinone. The enactment of S. 3615 would thus make the treatment of these preparations under the District of Columbia statutes consistent with the action contemplated under Federal law. Accordingly, the Department recommends adoption of S. 3615."

The bill has the approval of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Department of Public Health of the District of Columbia.

This bill will not involve any additional expenditure of funds on the part of the District of Columbia government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 12584) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PUBLIC LAND WITHDRAWALS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1739, Senate bill 2587.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2587) to require an act of Congress for public land withdrawals in excess of 5,000 acres in the aggregate for any project or facility of any department or agency of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I have an amendment to S. 2587, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alaska will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 2, line 7, after the word "Government", to insert a colon and "and by striking out the words 'in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii' in the main paragraph thereof, the words 'the Territories of' in the first proviso thereof, and 'the Territory' in the third proviso thereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The blll is open to further amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2587) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1960

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY] and myself, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill entitled the Trade Adjustment Act of 1960 which would provide assistance to those individuals, companies, and communities suffering serious injury or threatened with serious injury due to increased imports which result from this country's trade policy.

The difficulties caused by increased competition from imported products face many workers, businessmen, and communities in this country, and present a growing problem which the Federal Government of the United States must meet. It is only fitting that those individuals, companies, and communities who suffer injury as a result of our national trade policy should be assisted by the Federal Government in their own efforts to solve these problems.

I have always believed in and supported a reciprocal trade program as being in the best interest of our country and a sound foreign policy. We cannot ignore, however, those workers and industries adversely affected by increasing imports. Means must be found to aid unemployed workers and stricken industries when they are found to be suffering from imports. This bill is introduced with such a purpose in mind.

Mr. President, I should like to direct the attention of this body to an industry which plays a prominent role in my State of Minnesota and which has been affected adversely by growing imports. I speak of the iron ore industry.

In March of 1959, at the request of the Senate Finance Committee, the U.S. Tariff Commission issued a report on the competitive position of domestic ore compared to imported ore. As a result of its study the Tariff Commission found that whereas in 1947 imports were only 5.1 percent of the ore consumed in this country, 10 years later, in 1957, imports made up 26 percent of the iron ore consumed by this country. The latest figures show that this trend has quickened. Last year, 1959, imports accounted for almost 40 percent of all the iron ore consumed by this country. By 1980, according to an estimate cited in the Tariff Commission report, more than 50 percent of our iron ore needs will be met by imports; domestic production, on the other hand, is estimated to decline from the level reached in 1957, 108.1 million long tons, to 98 million long tons in 1980.

Actual figures show that the production of Minnesota iron ore declined from 61 million tons in 1957 to only 27½ million tons in 1959. My colleague from Minnesota, Senator MCCARTHY, has brought to the attention of the Senate Finance Committee the deepening crisis of the domestic iron ore industry in Minnesota and this week, on June 28, the Finance Committee approved a resolution ordering the Tariff Commission to initiate an "escape clause" investigation pursuant to section 7 of the Trade Adjustment Act.

The Tariff Commission in its 1959 study uncovered many facts, but it did not reach any conclusion whether or not iron ore imports were hurting the domestic industry, nor did it recommend any action to be taken by the Federal Government. The resolution approved this week by the Finance Committee directs the Tariff Commission to determine within 6 months what the impact of iron ore imports is, and to recommend in case of serious injury that the President invoke the escape clause, or that he withdraw or modify our international agreements allowing free importation of iron ore. If the President takes no action upon a positive finding by the Tariff Commission, the Commission must report its findings directly to the Congress, which retains the residual power to implement the Commission's recommendations regardless of the decision of the President.

I applaud this action by the Finance Committee which will enable us for the first time to make an accurate evaluation as to the impact of imports upon the domestic iron ore industry. Until now it has been impossible to obtain the necessary information, but under escape clause procedure the Tariff Commission has the power to subpena all the pertinent facts. When we know these facts, we will be able to deal more effectively with the problems of our iron ore industry.

The facts presently available, however, allow us at least to define the problems of this great industry, even if they are insufficient to enable us to solve them adequately. It is a fact that the once large reserves of high grade direct-shipment ore in the Lake Superior region are dwindling. However, great progress has been made in the commercial development of a low grade iron ore called taconite which is found in large quantities in northern Minnesota. Thanks to the pioneering work of Dr. E. W. Davis, formerly of the University of Minnesota, it is now commercially feasible to convert taconite into high grade iron ore.

The Erie Mining Co., and the Reserve Mining Co., have invested over a half billion dollars in the construction of taconite-processing facilities. Recently the Reserve Mining Co. announced a $100 million expansion of its taconite plant at Silver Bay, Minn. These operations have proved that taconite can be tailor made for specific types of steel processing, and have demonstrated the feasibility of establishing a taconite industry in Minnesota to supply the steel mills with perhaps 30 million tons of taconite agglomerate each year.

However, much more remains to be done in the commercial development of taconite in Minnesota. Only a start has really been made to date. The facts are that the major producers of high-grade ore in Minnesota appear to be more interested in developing ore fields in foreign lands than in installing commercial scale taconite facilities here at home. This, of course, is their privilege; they have every right to do so. But I do say that when this results in the economic distress and human suffering which I have seen firsthand on the iron range of Minnesota, we have an obligation to develop programs of assistance—including the development of the taconite industry here in the United States.

We cannot ignore the heavy unemployment on the iron range, the difficulties of local businessmen, and the dilemmas of the communities themselves as a result of the decline in ore production. This is a human problem—not an abstract economic issue. The distress of these fine people of Minnesota's iron range country is not of their own doing. Nor is it just a local problem which can be dealt with at the local level.

Production of ore in Minnesota is dependent on external factors such as the level of steel production in the Nation and the level of foreign ore imports.

The Congress has an obligation to offer a program to aid the unemployed workers of the area—to help them in retraining programs so that their abilities may be fully utilized. We must offer encouragement to business development in the area. We must assist the communities which find themselves in serious trouble due to rising unemployment, business declines and less tax revenue.

It is with these objectives in mind that Senator MCCARTHY and I are offering this Trade Adjustment Act. It has been carefully designed and drafted with the objective in mind of helping individuals, communities, and industries, which have suffered economic injury due to our reciprocal trade program and the resulting increase in imports. Representative JOHN BLATNIK, the distinguished, respected and dedicated Congressman from Minnesota's iron range is today introducing this same bill in the House.

This bill provides that when the Tariff Commission in an escape clause investigation makes a finding of injury to the President of the United States, he may make adjustments in the rates of duty or impose quotas as are necessary to prevent or remedy serious injury to the particular domestic industry involved, or the President may instead invoke the provisions of the Trade Adjustment Act which we are offering here today.

If the President invokes the Trade Adjustment Act, workers in the area adversely affected by imports would have made available to them supplementary unemployment compensation benefits, earlier retirement under social security, retraining for new job opportunities, and transportation to new areas of employment.

Industrial firms would be granted access to loans, technical information, and the privilege of accelerated amortization for the purpose of development of new or different lines of production.

To communities or to community industrial development corporations it would make available loans, technical information, and market research.

The summary of this bill as prepared by the Library of Congress is as follows:

ANALYSIS OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1960

1. Authorizes the appointment of a special board to be known as the Trade Adjustment Board consisting of five officers and employees of the executive branch of the Government who will serve without additional compensation to their normal salaries as Government employees. Permits the Board to conduct hearings, to secure information, subpena witnesses, and to provide assistance to communities, industries, business enterprises, and individuals in order to facilitate adjustments made necessary by the trade policy of the United States.

2. Permits the President to refuse to accept the recommendations of the Tariff Commission under the mechanisms of the escape clause, etc., and to invoke this Act after which the Board shall receive applications from communities, industrial development corporations, business enterprises, employees, or organizations, representing employees for certificates of eligibility. The Board shall issue such certificates to parties engaged in the production of articles identical to or competitive with the articles found to need tariff adjustment by the Tariff Commission.

3. Directs the Board in determining eligibility to consider the extent to which the employees and business enterprises or communities are affected by the injury suffered by the domestic industry and whether communities, business enterprises, and industrial development corporations have developed satisfactory programs for adjustment.

4. Permits loans for economic adjustment purposes under the Small Business Act without the usual limitations on the amount to be loaned.

5. Authorizes the Secretary of Labor to enter into agreements with States whereby supplementary unemployment compensation benefits may be paid to individuals eligible for the benefits of this Act. Such payments would be equal to 66⅔ percent of his average weekly earnings to extend for a period of 52 weeks.

6. Directs the Secretary of Labor to provide suitable vocational rehabilitation training for unemployed individuals and authorizes him to certify older workers to be unemployed as a result of the international trade policy of the United States and amends the Social Security Act to permit individuals to retire at age 60.

7. Permits eligible business enterprises and communities to take advantage of the accelerated amortization provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Mr. President, we realize that action on this bill is not likely in this session of the Congress. But we are hopeful that this legislation will be carefully studied and considered and that when the new Congress convenes in January action will be taken on this proposal.

This Trade Adjustment Act is an attempt to deal realistically with a problem of growing importance—namely, how to alleviate the suffering and distress of workers, industries, and communities adversely affected by mounting imports. This is a problem we must face up to. It is not going to go away by wishful thinking. The Federal Government has an obligation in this area. This is our purpose here today in offering for the consideration of the Members of the Congress the Trade Adjustment Act of 1960.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3803), entitled "The Trade Adjustment Act of 1960," introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself and Mr. MCCLELLAN), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT AND THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, when Congress passed the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 I voted for it, but I did so with reservations and serious concern as to some of its features.

Having been a cosponsor of the original labor-management reform bill, S. 1555, I was disheartened at the amendments which were added on the floor of the Senate and the House. It was my judgment that these amendments did nothing to eliminate corrupt practices in the labor-management relations field, but only imposed on unions regulations to impede their legitimate operations.

Let me make it clear, Mr. President, that I believe in legislation to eliminate corrupt practices in the labor-management field. That is why I cosponsored S. 1555 last year. This view on the need for remedial legislation was shared, it should be noted, by the AFL–CIO. I might add that the AFL–CIO in supporting the original reform legislation offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], myself, and others demonstrated its continued devotion to the public interest. The AFL–CIO advocated this legislation designed to remove from the labor movement those who betrayed their trust to working men and women. The House of Labor is to be commended for such a farsighted and statesmanlike approach. I only wish that certain employer organizations had exhibited a similar willingness to see employers and middlemen covered by this legislation.

Today, Mr. President, I am introducing a number of amendments to remove what I consider to be some of the more basic inequities in the law passed last year. I have given considerable time and study to these amendments. I have consulted with a number of persons in the labor-management field to determine what provisions of the 1959 act appear to be working the gravest hardship on the American labor movement and are impeding its legitimate objectives of organizing the unorganized and acting as a spokesman for working people. The amendments which I offer today have been carefully considered. I can assure my colleagues that they in no way weaken the antiracketeering provisions of the present law. Their sole purpose and intent is to remove inequities in the law which work an unjust hardship and burden on unions.

I offer these amendments at this late date in the session, not with the expectation that they will be acted upon this year, but rather so that they may be studied between now and the convening of the 87th Congress at which time I am hopeful that Congress will give serious consideration to improving the present law. I want to say that I am not wedded to the specific language of these amendments. I will welcome suggestions, recommendations and, yes, even criticisms. In presenting these amendments I hope to direct attention at some of the more fundamental inequities in the act.

I would like to briefly summarize what the amendments I am proposing would do.

The first amendment would give the Secretary of Labor authority to exempt small unions, those with less than 200 members and less than $20,000 in annual receipts, from having to make annual financial reports if the Secretary finds that it would not interfere with the attainment of the act. This exemption for small unions was contained in S. 1555, as it passed the Senate last year.

My second amendment would permit union officers and employees who handle union funds to be covered by blanket bonds as well as individual or schedule in form as the present act provides. It would also remove the requirement that surety companies authorized to provide such bonds must hold grant of authority from the Secretary of the Treasury as an acceptable surety on Federal bonds. I have been informed that this requirement actually prevents some of the most prominent surety companies from acting as surety under the act, as they do not ever act as surety on Federal bonds.

The third amendment would delete that provision of the act which provides that nothing in the act, except as explicitly provided to the contrary, shall reduce or limit the responsibilities of unions or their officers under the laws of any State. Many students of labor law feel that this clause will result in serious confusion and legal redtape. If the Federal Government is going to legislate in this area it is desirable that there be uniformity of law.

The fourth amendment would amend the no-man's land section of the act so as to provide that when the National Labor Relations Board declines to assert jurisdiction in a labor dispute over which it has jurisdiction any State or territorial agency which exercises jurisdiction shall apply and be governed by Federal law and regulations. This was provided when the bill first passed the Senate last year. However, the House in adopting the substitute Landrum-Griffin bill did not specify that Federal law should apply.

Amendment No. 5 would amend section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act so as to permit publicity, including picketing, for the purpose of truthfully advising the public that a product produced by an employer with whom the union has a primary dispute is being distributed by another employer, and also to remove the restrictions on such publicity as were added in the House.

This amendment would also amend that same section of the National Labor Relations Act so as to permit picketing at construction sites without regard to the effect upon neutral or secondary employers or the employees of neutral employers working on the same construction project. This amendment is similar to the situs picketing bill now being considered by the Senate Subcomittee on Labor.

The sixth amendment changes that section of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act which deals with recognition, organizational and consumer picketing so as to have it read as provided in S. 1555 as it passed the Senate. My amendment would permit recognition or organization picketing to take place 9 months, rather than 12 months, after a valid representation election has been conducted, and it would delete the prohibition on such picketing where a petition for an election has not been filed within 30 days from the commencement of such picketing. This amendment would also delete the restrictions contained in the act on publicity—including picketing—for the purpose of advising the public that an employer is nonunion.

The seventh and final amendment would limit the prohibition on hot cargo agreements to common carriers subject to part II of the Interstate Commerce Act. This is the way the bill read as originally passed by the Senate last year, but the House extended the ban to cover all industries—although there was little if any evidence brought out during the course of the extensive hearings that hot cargo contracts were a problem outside of the trucking industry.

Mr. President, in the months ahead, before the 87th Congress meets in January of next year, I hope that serious study and thought will be given to the proposals I have offered here today. As I said earlier, I am not taking a dogmatic position on this matter. I do not say that these amendments are the perfect answer, or that they correct all that is wrong in the present law. But I am convinced from the correspondence I have received and the talks I have had with people in the labor movement that there are serious inequities in the legislation Congress passed last year which should be removed. The amendments I am offering deal with some of these basic inequities.

They would in no way make it easier for racketeers to operate in the labor-management field, but they would remove needless and indeed harmful restrictions on the operations of our great American free trade union movement. It is with this view in mind that I have spent this time in preparing changes in the present law for the consideration of the Members of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3802) to amend the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act and the National Labor Relations Act, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE DALLES FEDERAL RECLAMATION PROJECT, OREG.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1824, S. 2195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the western division of the Dalles Federal reclamation project, Oregon, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with amendments, on page 2, line 16, after the word "provided", to strike out "All construction costs which are beyond the ability of the water users to repay shall be charged to, and returnable to the reclamation fund from, net power revenues derived from the sale of power from The Dalles Dam project which are over and beyond those required to amortize the power investment in said project and to return interest on the unamortized balance thereof." and insert "Costs allocated to irrigation in excess of the amount determined by the Secretary to be within the ability of the irrigators to repay within a fifty-year period shall be returned to the reclamation fund from net revenues derived by the Secretary of the Interior from the disposition of power marketed through the Bonneville Power Administration, which are over and above those required to meet any present obligations assigned for repayment from such net revenues."; and on page 4, line 6, after the word "Act," to strike out the colon and "Provided, That no construction shall proceed until a feasibility report has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior and submitted to the President and the Congress.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of furnishing water for the irrigation of approximately five thousand five hundred acres of arid land in Wasco County, Oregon, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain the western division of the Dalles Federal reclamation project, Oregon. The western division shall consist of the following principal works: a main pumping plant to be located at a site on the Columbia River; a booster and relift pumping plants with reregulating reservoirs; and a distribution system.

SEC. 2. (a) In constructing, operating, and maintaining the western division of the Dalles project, the Secretary shall be governed by the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto).

(b) The period provided in subsection (d) of section 9 of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, as amended, for repayment of construction costs properly allocable to any block of lands and assigned to be repaid by the irrigators may be extended to fifty years, exclusive of a development period, from the time water is first delivered to that block or to as near that number of years as is consistent with the adoption and operation of a repayment formula as therein provided. Costs allocated to irrigation in excess of the amount determined by the Secretary to be within the ability of the irrigators to repay within a fifty-year period shall be returned to the reclamation fund from net revenues derived by the Secretary of the Interior from the disposition of power marketed through the Bonneville Power Administration, which are over and above those required to meet any present obligations assigned for repayment from such net revenues. The term "construction costs" used herein shall include any irrigation operation and maintenance costs during the development period which the Secretary finds it proper to fund because they are beyond the ability of the water users to pay during that period.

(c) Power and energy required for irrigation pumping for the western division of the Dalles Federal reclamation project shall be made available by the Secretary from the Dalles Dam powerplant and other Federal plants interconnected therewith at rates not to exceed the costs of such power and energy from the Dalles Dam taking into account all costs of the dam, reservoir, and powerplant which are determined by the Secretary under the provisions of the Federal reclamation laws to be properly allocable to such irrigation pumping power and energy.

(d) That portion of the cost of constructing the works authorized by this Act which the Secretary finds to be properly allocable to the conservation and development of fish and wildlife, in accordance with the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (48 Stat. 401, as amended, 16 U.S.C. 661, and the following), together with the portion of the operation, maintenance, and replacement costs allocated to this function, shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable under the reclamation laws.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, we plan to consider Calendar No. 1888, H.R. 7379, to amend the act of July 27, 1956, with respect to the detention of mail for temporary periods in the public interest, and for other purposes, in which the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] is interested; Calendar No. 1826, S. 3619, to make permanent law the provisions of section 408 of the National Housing Act regulating savings and loan holding companies; and Calendar No. 1821, H.R. 11207, to amend the Small Business Act so as to authorize an additional $150 million for loans to small businesses, and for other purposes; if I can locate the Senator from California and the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the majority leader if that will conclude the program for tonight?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That will conclude those three bills. I do not know whether we will consider any more or not. I do not have any in mind now.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, insofar as I know, no order has been entered for the convening of the Senate tomorrow. I wonder if the majority leader would like to make a request, since a good many Senators are in the Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We can come in at 10 o'clock.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why 10 o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. To transact business. We will have a few hours of talk, and many bills to consider. There will be a call of the calendar tomorrow.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why not come in at 11 o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will make a request when we finish consideration of these bills.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator speak a little louder?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its deliberations tonight it stand in adjournment until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a point of order. The Senate is not in order. Senators are not in their seats.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, we cannot hear what is going on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, that includes the Senator from Tennessee, who made the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I have the attention of the majority leader?

Will the Executive Calendar be called this evening?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; tomorrow.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the Senator.

THE DALLES FEDERAL RECLAMATION PROJECT, OREGON

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the western division of the Dalles Federal reclamation project, Oregon, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my colleague from Oregon [Mr. LUSK] I wish to state that we appreciate very much the actions of the majority leader, the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], the minority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the Republican whip, the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], in obtaining clearance for this bill and having it considered tonight.

Mr. President, the bill comes from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with the support of the committee and with the support of the Department of Interior. This is a bill which will authorize pumping of water for the relief of a good many acres in The Dalles, Oreg. The bill provides for some compensation from the so-called power revenues which come from the dam. The bill will bring very much needed relief in regard to the water table in that part of the State.

I thank the leaders for having the bill considered this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2195) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DETENTION OF MAIL FOR TEMPORARY PERIODS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1888, H.R. 7379.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 7379) to amend the act of July 27, 1956, with respect to the detention of mail for temporary periods in the public interest, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7379) which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, with amendments, on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

"That (a)(1) when the Postmaster General determines that such action is in the public interest because of the obscene, lewd, lascivious, indecent, filthy, vile, or fraudulent nature of the material involved, during proceedings before him in the administration of section 3929 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 322; 39 U.S.C. 259), as amended and extended by the Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 964; 39 U.S.C. 259), section 4041 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 323; 39 U.S.C. 732), as amended, and the Act of August 16, 1950 (64 Stat. 451; 39 U.S.C. 259a), he may enter an interim order directing that mail addressed to any person be detained by the postmaster at the post office of delivery for forty-five days from the effective date of the order. Notice of the order, advising the person of the detention and setting forth in specific detail the reasons therefor, together with a copy of this Act and such Act of August 16, 1950, shall be sent forthwith by registered or certified mail to the person at the post office at which such mail is to be detained.

"(2) Any person against whom an interim order is issued may petition in the United States district court for the district in which the post office at which such mail is held or detained is situated for an injunction restraining the postmaster from enforcement of the order if the issuance of the order was arbitrary or capricious.

"(3) Unless (A) the Postmaster General has been so restrained or (B) the Postmaster General files, within twenty days of the date of the interim order, a petition in the United States district court for the district in which the mail is detained is situated, and prior to the expiration of the interim order obtains an order directing that mail addressed to the person be detained for such further period as the court determines, an order for the detention of mail addressed to a person expires at the end of the forty-five days after the issuance thereof. Notice of the filing of such a petition shall be given forthwith by the clerk of the court in which it is filed to the person, at the post office at which the mail is being detained, or otherwise as the clerk of the court determines to be appropriate, and the person shall have five days in which to appear and show cause why the order should not issue.

"(4) If, upon all the evidence before it, the court determines that the continued detention of the mail is in the public interest, it shall forthwith issue an order directing that mail addressed to that person be detained by the postmaster at the office of delivery until conclusion of the proceeding by the Postmaster General or until further order of the court.

"(5) If, upon all the evidence before it, the court determines, that the continued detention of the mail addressed is not in the public interest, it shall dismiss the petition and order all mail addressed to him detained in any post office to be released forthwith for delivery.

"(6) An appeal from the order of the court shall be allowed as in civil causes. An order of the Postmaster General or of the district court, under this section, may be dissolved by that court at any time for cause, including failure to conduct expeditiously the proceedings instituted against the person before the Postmaster General with respect to the Act of August 16, 1950 (39 U.S.C. 259a). When, under any order authorized by this Act and such Act of August 16, 1950, to be issued by the Postmaster General or the district court, a person's mail is detained by the postmaster at the office of delivery, that person may examine the mail and receive such mail as clearly is not connected with the alleged unlawful activity.

"(b) Action by the Postmaster General in issuing the interim order provided for herein and petitioning for a continuance of an order under this section, is not subject to the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 1001 and the following).

"(c) A person aggrieved by a final order of the Postmaster General issued pursuant to the authority contained in the Act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 359; 39 U.S.C. 224), the Act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 873; 39 U.S.C. 255), section 3929 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 322; 39 U.S.C. 259) as amended and extended by the Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 964; 39 U.S.C. 259), the Act of August 16, 1950 (64 Stat. 451; 39 U.S.C. 259a), section 4041 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 323; 39 U.S.C. 732), as amended, and sections 1461 and 1463 of title 18, United States Code, may obtain a review of the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which he resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing with the court, within thirty days after the entry of the order, a written petition praying that the order of the Postmaster General be modified or be set aside in whole or in part. He shall file a copy of the petition with the Postmaster General, and thereupon the Postmaster General shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. The finding of the Postmaster General as to the facts shall be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence in the administrative record. The filing of an appeal under this subsection shall not operate as a stay of the order of the Postmaster General.

And, in lieu thereof, to insert:

(a) In preparation for or during the pendency of proceedings under section 3929 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 322; 39 U.S.C. 259), as amended and extended by the Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 964; 39 U.S.C. 259), section 4041 of the Revised Statutes (17 Stat. 323; 39 U.S.C. 732), as amended, and the Act of August 16, 1950 (64 Stat. 451; 39 U.S.C. 259a), the United States district court in the district in which the defendant receives his mail shall, upon application therefor by the Postmaster General and upon a showing of probable cause to believe the statute is being violated, enter a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction pursuant to rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure directing the detention of the defendant's incoming mail by the postmaster pending the conclusion of the statutory proceedings and any appeal therefrom. Any such order, in the discretion of the district court, may provide that the detained mail be open to examination by the defendant and such mail delivered as is clearly not connected with the alleged unlawful activity. Any action taken by a court hereunder shall not be deemed to affect or determine any fact at issue in the statutory proceedings.

On page 6, at the beginning of line 13, to strike out "(d)" and insert "(b)", and in the same line, after the word "of", to strike out "subsections (a) and (b)" and insert "subsection (a)".

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, a great deal has been heard in the past 2 or 3 years about the vicious program of exploitation of our young people by the publishers of obscene literature.

This is a problem which has greatly concerned the Post Office and Civil Service Committees of the Senate and the House. It has concerned the Postmaster General. It has concerned many civic clubs and many great religious groups. The problem of policing is a most difficult one, and one which the committee has been studying for many months. The House of Representatives has also studied the problem for months.

Several months ago the House passed the Granahan bill to deal with this problem. The Granahan bill was passed to give greater powers than those which the Congress gave in 1956.

Congress has heretofore in a number of instances authorized the Postmaster General to return to the sender mail addressed to a person which he determines, after hearing, to be using the mails to conduct a lottery, perpetrate a fraud, or distribute obscene matter. The general purpose of all these provisions is to prevent such a person from receiving orders or money through the mail in connection with his illegal operation.

However, the statutory proceedings to determine whether to impose such a mail block against a person, and return mail addressed to him to its sender, sometimes require considerable time to complete. Formerly, the Postmaster General had no authority to prevent the delivery of mail to the suspected offender during the pendency of the statutory proceedings. As a result, the person against whom such a mail block was finally imposed had frequently already reaped the harvest from his illegal activity and, mail addressed to one location having been blocked, simply launched a similar activity at a new address.

In 1956 the Congress gave the Postmaster General the additional authority to detain temporarily mail addressed to defendants in such statutory proceedings, whenever he determined that such action was necessary to the effective enforcement of the law. However, this authority was limited to detention of mail for a period of 20 days unless within that time the U.S. district court extended the period of such detention upon petition of the Postmaster General.

Based upon testimony by the Postmaster General that the limitation of 20 days imposed an undue hardship, H.R. 7379 as passed by the House authorized detention of such mail for a period of 45 days, after which further detention would still have required an order of the U.S. district court. In addition the bill provided that the person against whom an interim order was issued might petition the U.S. district court for an injunction restraining the Postmaster General from the enforcement of the order if the court found its issuance was arbitrary or capricious.

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service worked hard to secure an amendment which was satisfactory to the American Civil Liberties Union, the bar associations, and to the Justice Department, which questioned some provisions of the House bill.

The committee amendment represents an alternative approach designed to accomplish the same results as the provisions of the House bill. Rather than the multiple proceedings which might occur under the House bill, the amendment provides for an application by the Postmaster General to the U.S. district court in the first instance. Under the committee amendment, upon a showing of probable cause to believe that the statute is being violated, the district court is authorized to enter a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction, pursuant to rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures, directing the detention of the defendant's incoming mail pending the conclusion of the statutory proceedings and any appeal therefrom. This approach insures court supervision of the exercise of the power to detain mail, and thus removes the necessity for an arbitrary limit on the period of such detention. It would also eliminate the duplicate proceeding possible under the House bill—first, by the defendant for an injunction against the Postmaster General's order, and second, by the Postmaster General for its extension should this become necessary.

The approach recommended by the committee eliminates the previous objections by the Department of Justice to certain provisions of the House bill and is satisfactory to the Postmaster General.

It seems to me that this represents an ideal solution to give positive enforcement through the issuance of a temporary injunction, upon a request by the Postmaster General to the Federal court, which could be extended for so long as the court found necessary. In this way we remove any possibility of arbitrary bureaucratic decisions interferring with the right of any American to receive his mail, but put upon the court the duty of determining whether the Postmaster General had grounds to keep the mail detention in force until the statutory proceedings are completed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend, who has evidenced such great concern over the problem and been a continuing help in the effort to find an effective answer to the problem of dealing with smut sent out to younger people through the mails at a great profit to those who would exploit them.

Mr. CLARK. Senators should know what a magnificent job the Senator from Oklahoma has done in reconciling conflicting views on this most difficult matter. The question of obscenity is one which must give us all grave concern, not only within our country, but with respect to the export of obscene material abroad.

My fine colleague in the other body, Mrs. KATHRYN GRANAHAN, took the lead in this regard and pressed a bill through the House last year. This is a measure which is of the greatest possible interest to the people of my State. I must have received over 30,000 pieces of mail during this session of Congress requesting some action to curb the use of the mails for the spreading of obscenity. Unfortunately, Mrs. GRANAHAN'S bill was not satisfactory to the Attorney General. There were certain objections to it by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Senator from Oklahoma, recognizing the problem, picked it up, conferred with the representatives of the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, and Mrs. GRANAHAN, rewrote the bill, pressed it through committee, and brought it to the floor of the Senate. I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma would be very happy to have this measure known as the Granahan-Monroney bill. I hope that Mrs. GRANAHAN will get all the credit due her for the fine work she did in the House. I hope Members of the Senate will accept the word of the Senator from Oklahoma and all the other members of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, of the Attorney General, and of the Postmaster General, and that the bill may be promptly passed. It makes a real contribution toward curtailing the use of the mails for obscene purposes, and yet preserves all appropriate constitutional civil liberties.

Mr. MONRONEY. The bill places the responsibility for detention of mail upon the courts instead of on an appointive officer. The appointive officer can bring the case and seek the injunction, but the court is always in charge. The right of freedom of communication, except where the law is being violated, is a basic personal right of all Americans. This was the right we sought to protect. The Civil Liberties Union and the Department of Justice were conscious of the need to protect that right. Still they knew they had to protect other innocent people against the abuse of this privilege by those who would exploit our youth. I think the bill meets the problem that we attempted to meet in giving proper power to help bring this nefarious practice to an end.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield to the ranking minority member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, who has assisted us greatly in working out a solution of the problem.

Mr. CARLSON. As a member of the minority of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, I wish to commend the Senator from Oklahoma for his tireless effort in bringing before the Senate this particular piece of proposed legislation. It was difficult to write, because we did not in any way wish to involve what might be considered the freedom of the press and the freedom of communication. I feel that the Senator from Oklahoma has brought us a bill that will deal with this most difficult problem of obscene literature that is being scattered throughout the country and will give us some control over it. I commend the Senator from Oklahoma for the program.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the Senator from Kansas very much. I wish to say that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] and other members of the Judiciary Committee, of which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is chairman, have also been concerned over this problem, because it deals with the proper safeguarding of the rights of individuals, and in drafting the proposed legislation were greatly helped by the efforts of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] and other members of that committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield to the chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, who has been conscientiously aware and extremely diligent in our efforts to reach a solution to this problem.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As chairman of the committee, I wish to commend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] for the work he has done in this particular field. The subject of the proposed legislation was called to the attention of the committee very forcefully by the Postmaster General, who had a group of us go down and look at the pictures and filth that is passing through the mail. It is almost sickening to look at and to think that such material is being sent throughout the United States.

When we saw that material we immediately got busy as a committee and tried to do something. The Senator from Oklahoma, as chairman of the subcommittee, did the work that really shaped the bill when it reached us from the House. I am glad to say that I believe that the proposed legislation will do some good. We have plenty of work to do in this field in the future.

I wish to call to the attention of the people of the United States the fact that when they hear about filthy mail being sent through the mails, they should call it to the attention of the Postmaster General immediately so that he can follow it up and stop it. The Postmaster General attempts to find where the mail is coming from, and though sometimes the senders get away with the practice for a long while and make a great deal of money out of the business before it is stopped, I am sorry to say, nevertheless offenders eventually will be discovered.

I urge all Americans to call to the attention of the Postmaster General immediately any violations which come to their knowledge in order that we can stop the flow of this kind of literature through the mails.

Again I wish to commend the Senator from Oklahoma for the work he has done on the subcommittee in this particular field.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CLARK. It has been suggested by some who are not too familiar with this subject that the bill contemplates a series of actions against individuals, and that officers would haul them into court if they happened to receive a piece of obscene literature through the mail. That is not the fact.

Mr. MONRONEY. That is not the fact. The distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has asked a question. I am sorry I omitted this bit of detail.

The procedure contemplated under the proposed legislation would be that any parent or anyone else receiving an invitation to buy obscene, and licentious publications would be asked to report the communications immediately to his local postal authorities. The Post Office Department has assured us that every postal worker and every postmaster will be an agent of the Postmaster General in this respect.

Mr. CLARK. It is true that the defendant in a case would be the purveyor of the obscene literature.

Mr. MONRONEY. Yes; that is what I tried to say. The recipient is invited, and I am sure will be urged publicly by all powers at the command of the Postmaster General to report and to submit samples of such invitations to buy. This is the way we will have to identify those sending such filthy publications, with their mailing addresses, without further action being necessary on the part of the recipient of the advertisement. If this literature is advertised as being salacious, or if the postal authorities write and receive samples to be certain, the Postmaster General or his agents in any State could go into a Federal court and ask for a temporary injunction to detain temporarily the incoming mail of the man who is advertising the material, pending an administrative hearing.

Thus, instead of trying to stop the mailing of letters going out as advertising, we stop the operation at the single channel where the money and the orders are coming in, by the seizure and blocking of the offender's incoming mail. It might take many months or a year to get an order finding his materials to be obscene. Under the bill, if the offender goes across the State lines he again begins to advertise and circularize. But when a report comes in giving the address where the publication is issued or where the money is to be sent, the U.S. attorney can get an injunction in the Federal court to block his mail. The injunction lasts only so long as the court feels it should last or until formal action is taken by the Post Office for a permanent mail block.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the complainant who brings the charge to the attention of the postal authorities have any of the burden or expense of prosecution, or is it automatically assumed by the Government?

Mr. MONRONEY. No, the complainant would have no burden or expense. It is a statutory crime to send salacious material through the mail. But the problem is reaching out and finding the offenders sending salacious material through the mail. Thus, to have effective enforcement, the bill proposes to stop the operation at the single channel where the order and the money comes in to the publisher. The Post Office Department, through its legal counsel, the U.S. attorneys in each of the Federal districts, will take care of the bringing of the injunction suit. This is independent of the criminal charges seeking the punishment of offenders for violations if they are found guilty in Federal court.

Mr. BRIDGES. Assuming for a moment there was a purchaser, is the purchaser, under the bill proposed by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, in any way committing a criminal act by his purchase?

Mr. MONRONEY. This does not make the purchaser liable, because sometimes this mail is sent to people without their knowledge or solicitation. If a wholesaler sends out circulars or advertising material for this licentious and obscene material, the Post Office Department can block the incoming mail of such wholesalers and advertisers. The individual recipient is in no way affected by the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It would appear that it would be necessary to have some knowledge about the statutes referred to on page 1 of the bill. What worries me about the bill and what I do not understand is the meaning of the language on page 5, at line 23, where the bill provides:

> The U.S. district court in the district in which the defendant receives his mail—

And so forth. Is this a crime against the defendant who receives the mail?

Mr. MONRONEY. This is the defendant who is charged in an administrative proceeding with soliciting orders for obscene literature. It enables the blocking of his incoming mail so that he cannot get orders to send out the obscene matter, so he cannot get the orders and collect the money, often from the children who send in their nickels and dimes in complete innocence.

Mr. BUTLER. If the district court feels that probable cause has been shown, the court can issue an immediate injunction; is that correct?

Mr. MONRONEY. A temporary injunction can be issued. The injunction would go into effect as soon as the court issued it. Then the Postmaster General would begin statutory proceedings for a permanent mail block. It is also against the law to send this material through the mail.

However, oftentimes it requires many months to get at the offender, and sometimes a long time elapses before the Post Office can catch up with him.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I ask the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma if the proof before the committee did not show that often the distributors of this obscene literature obtained high school mailing lists which they used to send out the obscene material showing acts of perversion in them, and that this material was sent to high school boys and girls without the children soliciting it; and is it not also the fact that the investigation made by the Postmaster General shows that much of this material is sent out by mass mailers; therefore a weapon is needed with which to cut off the mass mailings by mass mailers, who oftentimes change names and locations, but that nevertheless there are only a few mass mailers who mass-mail this literature?

Mr. MONRONEY. The Senator from Texas is stating the situation exactly as I understand it. They do use lists. The mass mailers may work in one State for a while and reap the harvest, and then move to another State under another name, while the Post Office Department is working out its original statutory charge. We want to give immediate injunctive relief where the Postmaster General attacks the first mailing, so as to be able to block the incoming mail of the offender while the wheels of justice are turning to do justice.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I commend the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma for working out in a wholly constitutional manner a method of giving the Postmaster General a means of protecting the youth of our country.

I also wish to commend the senior Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for putting the weight of his own committee behind the efforts of the Senator from Oklahoma. We visited the Postmaster General last year. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina, as in the matter of the postal employees' pay raise bill, on which we voted this afternoon, has given consistent leadership, month after month, to this great cause. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for having worked this out in a constitutional manner.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BUTLER. At page 6, line 13, of the bill I read:

> The provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to mail addressed to publishers of publications which have entry as second-class matter under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Why is that?

Mr. MONRONEY. Because the Postmaster General already has the right to regulate the second-class mailing privilege. He has control over it already.

Mr. BUTLER. There may be persons in that class who might violate the statute, but he already has control over them?

Mr. MONRONEY. It is not likely that they would, and still remain second-class permit holders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGEE in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Am I correct in understanding that the pending question with regard to House Joint Resolution 397 is an appeal from the ruling of the Chair declaring the bill passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KEATING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from New York is that the Senate proceed to consider the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1821.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to proceed to a matter when there is another motion before the Senate is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from New York on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What was the motion of the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from New York was that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appeal from the decision of the Chair, which was requested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1821, H.R. 11207.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 11207) to amend the Small Business Act so as to authorize an additional $150 million for loans to small businesses, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Small Business Act Amendments of 1960".

SEC. 2. As used in this Act, unless otherwise indicated, references to "the Act" are to the Small Business Act, approved July 18, 1958 (72 Stat. 384), as amended by the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, approved August 21, 1958 (72 Stat. 689), and Public Law 86-367 (73 Stat. 647).

SEC. 3. Subsection 4(c) of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "$975,000,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,050,000,000"; and

(2) by striking out "$575,000,000" where it appears in the fifth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$650,000,000".

SEC. 4. Section 5 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(d) Section 3648 of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 529) shall not apply to prepayments of rentals made by the Administration on safety deposit boxes used by the Administration for the safeguarding of instruments held as security for loans or for the safeguarding of other documents."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 10 of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) The Administration shall make a report on December 31 of each year of operations under this Act to the President, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Such report shall include the names of the business concerns to whom contracts are let and for whom financing is arranged by the Administration, together with the amounts involved, and such report shall include information on the progress of the Administration in liquidating the assets and winding up the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and such other information and such comments and recommendations as the Administration may deem appropriate. The requirement contained in this subsection with respect to the inclusion of information respecting the progress of the Administration in liquidating the assets and winding up the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in such report shall be in lieu of any requirement, pursuant to section 106(b) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Act, and Reorganization Plan Numbered 1 of 1957, that progress reports with respect to such liquidation and winding up the affairs by the Administration be made to the Congress on a quarterly basis.";

(2) by striking out "June 30 and" from subsection (b); and

(3) by striking out subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c)(1) The Attorney General is directed to make, or direct the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys of any activity of the Government which may affect small business, for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, promote undue concentration of economic power, or otherwise injure small business.

"(2) The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President, at such times as he deems desirable, but not less than once every year, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable. The Administrator may also request the Attorney General to make supplemental surveys and reports on any particular activities of the Government which may affect small business;

"(b) The second and third sentences of subsection (e) of section 708 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 are amended to read as follows: 'Such surveys shall include studies of the voluntary agreements and programs authorized by this section. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President at least once every three months reports setting forth the results of such studies of voluntary agreements and programs authorized by this section.' "

SEC. 6. The fifth sentence of section 2(a) of the Act is amended by inserting after "contracts", each place the term appears, the following: "or subcontracts".

SEC. 7. Section 8(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting in paragraph (8) after "reports" the following: "and records for review"; and

(2) by amending paragraph (11) to read as follows:

"(11) to make studies of the Government procurement and disposal processes at all stages thereof and to make recommendations to the appropriate Federal agencies to insure that a fair proportion of the total purchases and contracts or subcontracts for property and services for the Government be placed with small business enterprises to insure that a fair proportion of Government contracts (including subcontracts made pursuant thereto) for research and development be placed with small business concerns, to insure that a fair proportion of the total sales of Government property be made to small business concerns, and to insure a fair and equitable share of materials, supplies, and equipment to small business concerns;".

SEC. 8. Section 8 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(d)(1) Within thirty days after the effective date of this subsection, the Administrator, after consultation with the Administrator of General Services and the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics), shall promulgate a small business subcontracting program containing (A) such provisions as may be appropriate to insure that (i) small business concerns participate equitably as subcontractors and suppliers to contractors performing work or rendering services as prime contractors or subcontractors under Government procurement contracts, (ii) such prime contractors and subcontractors consult with and utilize the services and facilities of the Administration when requested by the Administration, and (iii) the Administration may obtain from such prime contractors or subcontractors such information and records concerning subcontracting as it may require; and (B) such other provisions and requirements as the Administrator may determine to be necessary and requisite to carry out the policy set forth in section 2 of this Act.

"(2) Every contract for property or services, including but not limited to contracts for research and development, but excluding contracts to be performed entirely outside of the United States or its territories, in excess of $1,000,000 made by a Government department or agency shall require the contractor to conform to the small business subcontracting program promulgated by the Administrator under this subsection (d), and to insert in all subcontracts and purchase orders in excess of $500,000 a provision requiring the subcontractor or supplier to conform to such small business subcontracting program.

"(3) The Administration shall include in any report filed under section 10(b) of this Act information, and such recommendation as it may deem appropriate, with respect to the administration of the small business subcontracting program promulgated under this subsection (d)."

SEC. 9. Section 8 of the Act is further amended by inserting after subsection "(d)" (as added by section 8 of this Act) a new subsection as follows:

"(e) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce, and he is hereby empowered, to obtain notice of all proposed defense procurement actions of $10,000 and above, and all civilian procurement actions of $1,000 and above, from any Federal department, establishment, or agency engaged in procurement or in the financing of procurements for supplies and services in the United States; and to publicize such notices in the daily publication 'United States Department of Commerce Synopsis of the United States Government Proposed Procurements, Sales, and Contract Awards', immediately after the necessity for the procurement is established; except that nothing herein shall require publication of such notices with respect to those procurements (1) which for security reasons are of a classified nature, or (2) which involve perishable subsistence supplies, or (3) which are for utility services and the procuring agency in accordance with applicable law has predetermined the utility concern to whom the award will be made, or (4) which are of such unusual and compelling emergency that the Government would be seriously injured if bids or offers were permitted to be made more than ten days after the issuance of the invitation for bids or solicitation for proposals."

SEC. 10. Section 7(d) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Administration also is empowered to make grants to any State government, or any agency thereof, State chartered development credit or finance corporations, land-grant colleges and universities, colleges and schools of business, engineering, commerce, or agriculture, and corporations formed by two or more of the entities hereinabove described which are eligible to receive such grants, for studies, research, and counseling concerning the managing, financing, and operation of small business enterprises and technical and statistical information necessary thereto in order to carry out the purposes of section 8(b)(1) by coordinating such information with existing information facilities within the State and by making such information available to State and local agencies. Only one such grant shall be made within any one State in any one year and no such grant shall exceed an aggregate amount of $40,000. The Administration may require, as a condition to any grant under this section, that an additional amount not exceeding the amount of such grant be provided from sources other than the Administration to assist in carrying out the purposes for which such grant is made: Provided, That if such grant or any part thereof is to be utilized for the purpose of providing counseling services to individual small business enterprises the Administration shall require that such additional amount be provided and in an amount which is equal to the amount of such grant."

SEC. 11. Section 502 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 is amended by deleting paragraph (6).

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I believe this is a noncontroversial bill and will not require much time for consideration.

The Committee on Banking and Currency considered the bill passed by the House and decided to substitute therefor S. 3689 by striking out all after the enacting clause of H.R. 11207.

The bill was the subject of very extensive hearings, covering 8 days. More than 40 witnesses were heard. The bill has bipartisan support, including the support of the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill does two things. It increases the revolving fund of the Small Business Administration by $75 million. The Small Business Administration originally requested $150 million, but agreed with the committee that $75 million would be satisfactory. This amount will take the program into fiscal 1962.

The second principal provision is the provision to attempt to secure for small business a fairer share of the Government procurement dollar.

I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], who, I am certain, is more responsible for the bill than anyone else has an amendment to one section of the bill.

I have consulted with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HART], who is primarily responsible for the section of the bill to which the Senator from Alabama has an amendment. The Senator from Michigan says that the proposal of the Senator from Alabama is agreeable to him. It makes a minor change.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, my proposal is, on line 23, page 8, to change "$1,000" to "$5,000."

The reason for the change is that some civilian agencies of the Government said $1,000 was entirely too low; that they might use that much in buying furniture or other supplies locally. They thought $5,000 would be a more realistic figure. I think they are correct.

I offer the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 23, in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement relating to the bill may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR PROXMIRE

The Banking and Currency Committee in considering H.R. 11207 and S. 3689 (both bills to amend the Small Business Act) decided to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 11207 and insert the language of S. 3689. The committee reported H.R. 11207 with amendments.

I introduced S. 3689 on June 16, 1960. Senators SPARKMAN, HART, FULBRIGHT, CAPEHART, WILLIAMS of New Jersey, RANDOLPH and HUMPHREY joined me in its sponsorship.

Extensive hearings were held last summer on June 22, 29, 30, July 1, 7, 20, 21 and 22, 1959, on the substantive portions of this bill.

The bill has two main purposes: (1) to increase the revolving fund of the Small Business Administration for its regular business loan program by $75 million and (2) to attempt to secure for small businesses a fairer share of the Government procurement dollar.

The Small Business Administration requested that the revolving fund for its regular business loans be increased by $150 million. The House of Representatives on June 6, 1960, voted to grant this amount. However, the Banking and Currency Committee believed that $75 million increase in this revolving fund would be sufficient. This amount will permit SBA to operate its regular business loan program until some time in fiscal 1962.

Next year the Banking and Currency Committee and the Congress will have an opportunity to review the operation of this program under a new administration and determine what further increases in this fund are necessary.

Something must be done to secure a fairer share of our Government procurement for small business. This bill seeks to assist in accomplishing this. The percentage received by small business of military prime contracts has fallen from 25.3 percent in fiscal 1954 to 16.6 percent in fiscal 1959. When I introduced S. 3689 on June 16 I cited some statistics that I think should be repeated.

Of all new defense procurements, in fiscal 1959, excluding intragovernmental and modifications of existing contracts, 50.7 percent was negotiated with a sole source. Also only 20 companies received 50.6 percent of the net value of military prime contract awards in fiscal 1959.

These figures point up very dramatically the urgent need for more subcontracting opportunities for small business. With such a large percentage of the defense dollar preempted by big business, something must be done to insure that a fairer proportion of these contracts be subcontracted to small business.

Section 8 of this bill would provide that the Small Business Administration institute a small business subcontracting program designed specifically to assist small businesses in receiving a fairer share of the Government procurement dollar. The program would provide that there be placed in every prime contract of $1 million and above and all subcontracts of $500,000 and above a provision requiring the prime contractor and the subcontractor to: (1) consult with and utilize the facilities of SBA and (2) furnish SBA with any information concerning subcontracting that the SBA may require.

This program would not force the contractors to do anything. They would not be harassed by SBA representatives. They do not have to subcontract at all and they do not have to subcontract to firms suggested by the SBA.

Its sole purpose is to place the SBA representative in a position to be able to make known to large contractors and subcontractors the availability of qualified small businesses.

This is a moderate program, but I think it can be of immense value to both the prime contractors and small businesses. This program would not dilute the authority of the procuring agency over supervision of Government contractors. The purpose is to provide for small business representation to aid and be of service to both the prime contractor and small businesses.

The present policy statement in the Act states in part that it is "the declared policy of the Congress that the Government should aid * * * small business concerns * * * to insure that a fair proportion of the total purchases and contracts for property and services for the Government * * * be placed with small business enterprises."

The bill would amend the policy declaration of the Small Business Act to include subcontracts. It would also provide for the SBA to have access to the procurement records of the procuring agencies, and it would broaden the field of procurement studies and recommendations which the SBA now makes. It also includes a provision that SBA may make studies and recommendations of the processes of disposal of Government property.

The Senate Appropriations Committee also is concerned about the present small business program in the Department of Defense. The report of that Committee on H.R. 11998, the Department of Defense appropriations for 1961, mentioned the ineffectiveness of the program and also the report pointed out that "sole source procurements made with funds appropriated under this Act should be kept at a minimum."

I mentioned earlier that 50.7 percent of all new procurement contracts with certain exceptions were negotiated with a sole source. I was happy to join with Senator Williams of Delaware when on June 16, 1960, he offered an amendment to H.R. 11998, the Department of Defense appropriation bill for 1961, to provide "that none of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be used except that, so far as practicable, all contracts shall be awarded on a competitive basis to the lowest responsible bidder." The Senate agreed to this amendment. It, too, should help to a great extent in securing a fairer share of the defense dollar for small business since it has been shown that in fiscal 1959 small business received 47.5 percent of the value of all advertised procurement prime contracts and received only 11.8 percent of the value of the negotiated ones.

Another important provision of this bill is the requirement for publication in the daily U.S. Department of Commerce "Synopsis of U.S. Government Proposed Procurements, Sales, and Contract Awards" of all military procurement actions of $10,000 and above and all civilian procurement actions of $1,000 and above. Procurements which for security reasons are of a classified nature, perishable subsistence supplies, public utilities, and emergency procurements when the time for bidding is insufficient to permit publication are excepted.

The substance of this provision was also recommended by the Senate Appropriation Committee's report (S. Rept. No. 1550) on H.R. 11998—Department of Defense appropriations for 1961. This provision would permit small businessmen to have notice of a more complete list of what the Government is buying. Large corporations can afford to retain Washington representatives to furnish this information to them, but small businessmen generally cannot. The increase in the size of this publication as a result of this provision should be borne by the subscribers. The subscription rate now is very nominal—$10 per year. I am sure that the increase in the number of procurement actions in this daily publication will make it very much more valuable and useful to businessmen.

The bill would also amend the program for grants for studies, research, and counseling in small business problems to make eligible for such grants a corporation formed by two or more presently eligible grantees. The committee received testimony that in some States such a corporation would be in a position to enlist the various talents, financial assistance, and other facilities of other agencies within a State in implementing the scope of the grant. This bill would permit the SBA to require as a condition to any grant that an additional amount, not exceeding the amount of the grant, be provided from sources other than the Administration. However, if and to the extent a grant is used to provide counseling services to individual enterprises, matching of the grant is to be required.

The bill would also simplify the reporting requirements of SBA by requiring an annual report to the President and the Congress instead of the semiannual reports presently required. The SBA would be able to include in this report the material it now reports quarterly with respect to its progress in liquidating the assets and affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that have been assigned to it.

The bill would amend section 502 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. Section 502 of the Small Business Investment Act provides for loans to State and local development companies to assist an identifiable small business concern in plant construction, conversion or expansion.

Paragraph (6) of section 502 provided for termination of the authority to loan to local development companies after June 30, 1961. In providing for this terminal date, the committee had assumed that this program could be allowed to lapse, because it was anticipated that this type of lending would not be necessary after organization of large numbers of small business investment companies and increased activities of State development credit corporations. It is now obvious that there will be a continuing need for this type of loan beyond June 30, 1961. Many States still do not have statewide development credit corporations and small business investment companies have not grown and expanded to the extent anticipated in 1958.

Section 11 of this bill would strike paragraph (6) of section 502, thereby permitting continuing authority in the Small Business Administration for loans to local development companies.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement relating to section 502 loans to local development companies, together with tables showing the loans which have been made to local development companies.

There being no objection, the statement and tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIVE HUNDRED AND TWO LOANS TO LOCAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANIES

For purposes of SBA's lending program a local development company is a corporation which (1) has a broad base of local ownership; (2) has been incorporated in the State in which it expects to do business; and (3) is authorized to promote and assist the growth and development of small business concerns in the area covered by its operation.

As a prerequisite to obtaining financing from the SBA, a local development corporation must be able to provide at least 20 percent of the cost of the new factory building, conversion, or expansion. If the proposed loan meets SBA's credit and collateral requirements and will help a small business concern accomplish a sound business purpose the development company may borrow from the SBA the balance of the cost of the project up to $250,000.

An SBA loan may be made for a period as long as 10 years, plus any additional time required to complete construction, conversion, or expansion. The loan may be extended or renewed for an additional 10 years.

Interest is at a rate of 5½ percent. However, if a bank participates with SBA in a loan and the bank sets a rate lower than 5½ percent of its share of the loan, SBA's rate will be the same as the bank's, but cannot be less than 5 percent.

As a rule the small business firm which will occupy the facilities is required to sign a lease-purchase contract covering the term of the loan. The small firm then makes monthly payments to the development company sufficient to pay SBA the required monthly interest and principal.

If the small business has not exercised its option to purchase the facilities by the end of the loan term, the development company will have paid off SBA and own the facilities free of encumbrance.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama explain the purpose of his amendment? I was not in the Chamber at the time the Senator made his statement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The amendment is on page 8, line 23. The bill provides that with respect to all procurement contracts in excess of $10,000 for the Department of Defense, and $1,000 for civilian agencies, the Secretary of Commerce shall publish notice.

Some civilian agencies have said that the amount of $1,000 is not a realistic figure; that oftentimes they might want to buy furniture or supplies, or things of that kind, locally, which would consume the $1,000. It was felt that $5,000 would be a more realistic amount. I think they are correct. Therefore, I offered the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 11207) was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "An act to amend the Small Business Act, and for other purposes."

U.S. PARTICIPATION IN THE RESETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN REFUGEES

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I withdraw my appeal from the ruling of the Chair on House Joint Resolution 397.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is withdrawn.

ADDITIONAL DISABILITY COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN SERIOUSLY DISABLED VETERANS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1818, H.R. 7211.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 7211) to provide additional disability compensation for certain seriously disabled veterans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the bill establishes a new statutory rate of disability compensation for certain service-connected disabled veterans. It would provide a new rate of $265 monthly for any service-connected disabled veteran who is rated as totally disabled and (1) has additional service-connected disability or disabilities which are ratable at 60 percent or more, or (2) by reason of the service-connected disability or disabilities is permanently housebound.

The current total disability rating is $225 monthly. For the most seriously disabled the maximum rate is $450 with $150 additional if the individual is not being hospitalized at Government expense; thus the top rating today is $600 monthly. This new rate of $265 is an intermediate rate and applies to a veteran who is totally disabled and whose activities are so restricted as to make him permanently housebound. This does not mean that he is permanently bedridden or so helpless as to be in need of regular aid and attendance of another person. The terms of the legislation would be met if the veteran is substantially confined to his house or the ward and clinical areas, if he is in a hospital, and is reasonably certain to so remain during the balance of his lifetime.

The Veterans' Administration estimates that this bill would cost approximately $7,200,000 for each of the first 5 years following its enactment.

The bill is favored by the Veterans' Administration and has been described by that agency as both a "reasonable and equitable approach to providing relief" for this group of veterans.

The bill was reported from the Senate Finance Committee by its chairman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 7211) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS FOR INDIAN WAR AND SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1819, House bill 9786.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9786) to amend sections 511 and 512 of title 38, United States Code, to permit Indian War and Spanish-American War veterans to elect to receive pension at the rates applicable to veterans of World War I.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this bill was reported by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The purpose of this bill is to permit Indian and Spanish-American War veterans to elect to receive pension under the terms of Public Law 86–211, if they so desire. It should be emphasized that this is permissive and not mandatory. An election would be irrevocable.

From a practical standpoint, the only veteran of one of these wars who would wish to avail himself of this provision would be the man who is today entitled to the aid and attendance rate of $135.45 monthly. This is payable only to those veterans who are helpless or blind, or who are so nearly so as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person. The basic monthly rate for veterans of these wars is $101.59.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an explanation of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The purpose of the bill is to permit Indian war and Spanish-American War veterans to elect to receive pension at the rates and under the conditions (except service requirements) applicable to World War I veterans.

Under existing law, pension is payable to Spanish-American War veterans who were discharged under other than dishonorable conditions after having served 90 days or more, or who, having served less than 90 days, were discharged for service-connected disability. It is also payable to Indian war veterans who were similarly discharged after having served 30 days or more, or for the duration of an Indian war. The basic monthly rate of $101.59 is increased to $135.45 if the veteran requires regular aid and attendance. Lower rates are payable to Spanish-American War veterans who served 70 but less than 90 days and were not discharged for service-connected disability. These latter veterans would not be affected by the bill.

Pension is payable to veterans of World War I, World War II, and the Korean conflict who are permanently and totally disabled from non-service-connected causes not the result of willful misconduct or vicious habits. The veteran must have been discharged under other than dishonorable conditions after having served 90 days or more, or, having served less than 90 days, discharged for service-connected disability.

H.R. 9786 would become effective after July 1, 1960, when Public Law 86–211 goes into effect. That act revises the pension program for veterans of World War I and later war periods and establishes a graduated scale of rates related to family status and income. The rates for a single veteran range from $40 to $85, and for a veteran who is married or has children, from $45 to $100. A veteran who requires regular aid and attendance receives $70 in addition to the rate otherwise payable.

In view of those rates the right of election contemplated by the bill would as a practical matter be operative only as to veterans of the Indian and Spanish-American Wars who are eligible for an aid and attendance allowance. H.R. 9786 would permit them to receive higher rates based on need of aid and attendance which are available to veterans of later wars, and subject to the same conditions of entitlement.

An election of pension as provided by the bill would be irrevocable. This could result in payment of pension in future years at a lower rate than that now authorized for Indian and Spanish-American War veterans, because, for example, of termination of need for regular aid and attendance, change in family status, or increased income. It could also result in discontinuance of pension for similar reasons.

If enacted, the bill would serve to promote uniformity in the pension programs by encompassing an additional, although limited, group in the philosophy of pension based on need which is inherent in Public Law 86–211.

Under the bill, pension under Public Law 26–211 would be elected only by those veterans whose monthly rate would be greater. The monthly increases would range from $4.55 to $34.55. Information concerning income and marital status of veterans of the Indian and Spanish-American Wars is not available. Assuming that all veterans have no dependents and an annual income of less than $600, it is estimated that approximately 4,900 veterans, almost all of whom are Spanish-American War veterans, would be eligible for increases at an additional cost of approximately $1,154,000 in the first year. The cost would decrease each year to approximately $118,000 in the fifth year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 9786) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the votes by which the last three bills were passed be reconsidered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, what was the last request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the votes by which the last three bills were passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1827, House bill 7004.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7004) to facilitate the administration of public lands, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with an amendment.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Moss] will explain the bill.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, this bill was passed by the other body, and is reported from the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with an amendment.

The amendment is minor in nature, in that it limits the amount which the Secretary may require. Under the amendment, the Secretary of the Interior may require a user or users of roads or trails under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management to maintain such roads or trails in a satisfactory condition commensurate with the particular use requirements and the use made by each, the extent of such maintenance to be shared by the users in proportion to such use or, if such maintenance cannot be so provided, to deposit sufficient money to enable the Secretary to provide such maintenance. Such deposits will be covered into the Treasury, and will hereby be appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary may direct, to cover the cost to the United States of the maintenance of any road or trail under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management.

The bill itself has been requested by the administration, by the Department of the Interior, and by the Bureau of Land Management, in order to make uniform the principles of the administration of the public lands.

Under the Taylor Grazing Act, the Secretary of the Interior has powers in the administration of those lands that are different from the powers which have been given him to administer the lands in the Oregon and California revested lands and also the Alaska lands.

This bill would make uniform the powers he has in administering the public lands.

Specifically, the bill provides for investigations, cooperative agreements, and acceptance of contributions.

The charges made for various administrative services need to be brought into line with present-day costs. For instance, the Appropriation Act of February 14, 1931, fixed fees for the taking of depositions on hearings in the land offices at 25 cents per folio and 5 cents for each copy. These rates bear no relation to current-day costs.

The provisions of the bill allowing direct application of funds derived from deposits and forfeitures will permit the prompt accomplishment of the purposes for which the deposits or forfeitures are made. Examples are completion of slash disposal and reforestation work at timber-cutting sites on public lands. At present these funds, even though they are not derived from public sources, are not available for such work as this until they have been included in an appropriation act.

I think the bill is certainly in the public interest. It has been requested by the administration, and has been concurred in unanimously by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, in line 19, after "Sec. 302.", it is proposed to strike out "The Secretary may require the user of a road or trail under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management to maintain such roads or trails in a satisfactory condition or" and insert "The Secretary of the Interior may require a user or users of roads or trails under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management to maintain such roads or trails in a satisfactory condition commensurate with the particular use requirements and the use made by each, the extent of such maintenance to be shared by the users in proportion to such use or,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Without objection——

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, has the committee amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I was seeking information.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, let us slow down the railroad a little bit.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I read from the bill:

SEC. 102. The Secretary of the Interior may enter into cooperative agreement involving the improvement, management, use, and protection of the public lands and their resources under his jurisdiction. The provisions of this section shall apply only in those cases where the making of cooperative agreements for such purposes is neither expressly authorized nor expressly prohibited by other provisions of law.

Does this provide that the Secretary of the Interior can construct the roads for the use of those who lease the grazing lands?

Mr. MOSS. Certainly not; it would not extend to that part. That still would have to be authorized by Congress, and an appropriation would have to be made.

The Senator was not referring to the amendment, was he?

Mr. AIKEN. I read from section 102, which is not the amendment. I do not know where the amendment fits into the bill.

Mr. MOSS. The amendment has to do with the fees which may be charged for the use of the roads. I thought that was the part to which the Senator raised objection.

Mr. AIKEN. I am not objecting to it. I am asking for information on it.

When they enter into cooperative agreements with the lessors of the public lands for grazing purposes, does this bill provide for the expenditure of funds by the Department of the Interior for the construction of those things? Perhaps they can do it.

Mr. MOSS. No; the cooperative agreements would apply to the building of trails across the public domain and the private domain.

Mr. AIKEN. What does it authorize the Secretary of the Interior to do, that he cannot do now?

Mr. MOSS. He is limited now, under the powers he has for the Oregon and California revested lands and the Alaska lands. As to them, he may not now do these things, although he may do them under the Taylor Grazing Act for public lands which fall under that act. This measure would make uniform the powers he has.

Mr. AIKEN. This means he could do all things for public lands under the Department of the Interior that he can do now under the Taylor Grazing Act for certain grazing lands?

Mr. MOSS. Yes; that is correct. That is the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REGULATION OF SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1826, Senate bill 3619.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3619) to make permanent law the provisions of section 408 of the National Housing Act regulating savings and loan holding companies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this bill was reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

The purpose of the bill is to make permanent law the provisions of section 408 of title IV of the National Housing Act—12 U.S.C. 1724–1730(a)—regulating savings and loan holding companies. This is accomplished by repealing subsection (g) of section 408 of the National Housing Act. Subsection (g)(1) established a termination date for the regulatory provisions, at May 31, 1961. Subsection (g)(2) required the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to make a full and complete survey of all aspects of savings and loan holding companies and to submit a report to the Committees on Banking and Currency of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than May 31, 1960. This report has been received and, accordingly, the bill also repeals this reporting requirement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 3619) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (g) of section 408 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a.(g)) is hereby repealed.

THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION'S RECORD OF IMPARTIAL FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT—1953–60

Mrs. SMITH. Mr. President, this administration has an outstanding record in the important field of Federal law enforcement. The distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky, JOHN SHERMAN COOPER, recently compiled a concise report on this activity.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this report printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION'S RECORD OF IMPARTIAL FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT—1953–60

(By U.S. Senator JOHN SHERMAN COOPER, of Kentucky)

One of the most important and satisfying accomplishments of the Republican administration during the past 7½ years has been the reestablishment and continuing growth of public confidence in the impartial administration and enforcement of the Federal laws under the Department of Justice.

Among the factors responsible for this renewed respect for Federal law enforcement have been:

1. The refusal of Government consent to nolo contendere pleas except in unusual circumstances.

2. The abandonment of the "health policy" in criminal tax prosecutions.

3. The publication of compromise settlements of all kinds.

4. The elimination of private practice for U.S. attorneys and their assistants, thus removing the possibility of conflict of interest.

5. The publication of Executive pardons and the names of those sponsoring such pardons.

6. The employment of the very highest caliber of professional and nonprofessional personnel.

In addition to obtaining attorneys of established reputation and broad experience, an honor law graduate program was established in 1953 to attract to the Department top graduates of the country's leading law schools. To date, 279 talented young attorneys from 73 law schools, representing 40 States and the District of Columbia, have been appointed without regard to considerations of race, religion, or political affiliation.

A sustained drive to eliminate delay in the Government's legal business has been conducted. The primary result of this drive has been the disposition of practically all old cases. An equally important result has been the impressive reduction in the number of cases and matters pending.

During the last 7½ years, despite an overall increase in work brought about by reason of economic expansion and new Federal laws, the total number of items pending, which includes both cases in court and preliminary matters, has been reduced from 74,972 to 48,542, a reduction of 26,430 items, or 35 percent.

The backlog of cases pending, exclusive of preliminary matters, has been reduced from 23,413 to 16,784, a reduction of 6,629 cases, or 28 percent.

In the 7½ years preceding the year 1953, total collections by U.S. attorneys aggregated $202,251,691. In the similar period since 1953, such collections have totaled $234,786,314, an increase of $32,534,624, or 13 percent.

These and the accomplishments described below have taken place without increase in the overall employment in the Department of Justice. On June 30, 1953, the total employment was 30,423; on June 30, 1959, it was 29,987.

CRIMINAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

In criminal law enforcement the Republican administration has conducted an intensive and coordinated drive against all forms of organized crime, including narcotics, gambling, illicit liquor operations, tax evasion, and labor racketeering. Highlighting the drive by the Justice Department was the recent conviction of 20 of the conspirators who attended the hilltop meeting at Apalachin, N.Y., in November 1957.

In the labor-racketeering field, 143 convictions have been obtained under the Hobbs Act and Labor-Management Relations Act as compared to a total of 3 convictions prior to 1953. The list of those convicted includes union officials ranging in importance from the president of the International Longshoremen's Association down to business agents of local unions, in cases where the amounts etxorted as the price of labor peace varied from a few thousand to over a million dollars. In addition, the ranking Ohio Teamster official, William J. Presser, was recently convicted of contempt of Congress and obstruction of the Senate Rackets Committee's investigation of the Teamsters Union.

An intensive drive against narcotic violators has resulted in over 10,000 prosecutions with sentences running at an average alltime high. International narcotic smuggling rings smashed include the 1958 conviction of Harry Stromberg and 18 others, and the 1959 conviction of Vito Genovese and 14 others, with the Supreme Court declining to review both cases.

A vast gambling syndicate operating out of Terre Haute, Ind., was broken up by the conviction of its operators on wagering tax evasion charges in July of 1959. In May of 1960, Harry Donovan, multi-million-dollar numbers racket kingpin operating in Richmond, Va., apparently with police protection, pleaded guilty to an 11-count wagering tax indictment.

In addition to thousands of prosecutions against relatively small-scale moonshine producers, the crime drive has centered on eradicating syndicate leaders of large illicit liquor conspiracies in the metropolitan areas. In January 1960, notorious liquor law violators, John and Maurice Levigno, were convicted of conspiracy and operation of large illicit stills in Brooklyn and Long Island City.

Hoodlums and racketeers convicted on tax evasion charges include Pete Licavoli, reputed leader of the old "Purple Gang" in Detroit, and Paul "The Waiter" De Lucia, alias Paul "Ricca," alleged successor to Al Capone in Chicago.

Denaturalization and deportation of racketeers and vice lords is also a part of the program, and denaturalization decrees have been obtained against such figures as Accardi, Corrado, Frank Costello, Vito Genovese, Joe Profaci, and Paul "The Waiter" Ricca, among others.

Frauds upon the investor and consumer public have resulted in a number of significant convictions, the latest being that of Alexander L. Guterma and others for extensive investment frauds.

An average of 1,400 Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act cases have been brought each year to protect the public against adulterated and misbranded products and a vigorous drive has been made against the illegal sale of sedatives and "pep" pills.

Former Government officials, such as RFC Official E. Merl Young, Assistant Atorney General T. Lamar Caudle, and Presidential Secretary Matthew J. Connelly, have been indicted and convicted for irregularities in office. Other important convictions include that of Henry W. Grunewald in a $160,000 tax-fix conspiracy, with whom were five others who were given long prison sentences and heavily fined.

CIVIL LITIGATION

Civil litigation represents the largest single category of cases in the Justice Department.

During the past 7½ years, the Civil Division has reduced the pending caseload from 76,540 to 13,533 cases by delegating to U.S. attorneys authority to handle smaller routine cases and by conducting an all-out drive to cut the backlog.

The separate Customs Division was eliminated, and its functions were incorporated within the Civil Division and the staff reduced from 22 to 12 attorneys.

A centralized appellate section was organized which last year achieved success in 75 percent of all the appeals handled by it.

The Japanese claims program, involving 24,000 claims and over $130,500,000, was completed, and the two branch offices of the program were closed.

In the first test cases to recover millions of dollars in windfall profits taken by contractors under FHA programs, the results were so successful that administrative compromises were obtained before trial in virtually all other cases and there are only 17 such suits still pending.

A backlog of 2,966 price and rent control cases has been practically liquidated, and only four cases remain pending.

In the forfeiture actions brought against such shipowners as Onassis, Niarchos, and Kulukundis, and various Chinese companies, results were so successful that normal Civil Division collections rose from 16 to 18 million dollars a year to over 30 million for 3 years running, and a quarter million tons of new shipping is being built in American yards under the settlements negotiated in several of these cases.

The growth of claims against the United States in foreign courts necessitated the establishment of a special foreign litigation unit and the organization of a network of attorneys in many foreign capitals to represent the Government's interests in the more than 274 cases now pending abroad.

TAX MATTER

During the 6 years prior to 1953, the pending load of tax cases had almost tripled from 2,500 to 7,000. Despite a continuing proportionate increase in new cases, the Tax Division of the Justice Department not only brought the backlog under control, but reduced the pending workload by over 2,700 cases, concluded a large number of older cases, and cut in half the time required for handling the average tax case from 3 to 1½ years.

During this period, also, this Division of the Justice Department saved the Treasury or collected directly from delinquent taxpayers $350 million, or over 2½ times the amount recovered in the previous 4 years, and 4,344 tax fraud convictions were obtained, as against 2,260 in the prior 12 years.

Among those convicted were former Internal Revenue Commissioner Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., former Teamsters Union president David Beck; racketeers Frank Costello, Paul "The Waiter" Ricca, Umberto Anastasia, and Peter Licavoli; gamblers Benny Binion, Frank Erickson, Sidney Brodson, and Elmer "Bones" Remmer; labor racketeer Orell B. (Duke) Soucie; Eugene C. James of Chicago, Laundry Workers Union official; Hugh L. Culbreath, former sheriff of Hillsborough County, Florida, an associate of bigtime gamblers; and Frank Keenan, Chicago, former Cook County assessor.

The Tax Division has been successful in 78 percent of the tax cases decided by the Supreme Court and in over 70 percent of those decided by other appellate courts, and today its dockets, for the most part, are in current condition.

ANTITRUST ACTION INCREASED UNDER REPUBLICANS

In the field of antitrust, so important to the preservation of our free enterprise system and the American consumer, a continuation in the pace of stepped-up law enforcement saw 63 new cases filed in the fiscal year 1959, more than double the total filed in 1952. Moreover, 70 new cases have already been filed in the current fiscal year. Sixty-six cases were closed in fiscal 1959 and 41 cases have been closed thus far in the present fiscal year. On May 31, 1960, 127 cases were pending.

Since 1953, 215 civil antitrust cases and 171 criminal antitrust cases have been filed. Of these, 31 have been proceedings under the hitherto unused section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1950, respecting corporate mergers.

Two new contempt cases were filed in 1960, bringing the total since 1953 to 11. This figure represents more than one-third of all such cases filed since the enactment of the Sherman Act in 1890.

The Sherman Act amendment increasing maximum fines has resulted in a rise in fines imposed from $127,000 in 1952 to $914,200 in fiscal 1959. Thus far in fiscal 1960, through May 31, 1960, fines assessed total $993,250. The total dollar amount of fines assessed has shown a substantial increase in every year but one since 1952.

One of the most important milestones in the antitrust field was the establishment in 1953 by the Attorney General of a national committee of some 60 members to study the antitrust laws.

As a result of the committee's work, there was gathered into one place for the first time a statement of prevailing views on major issues of antitrust policy. The Department of Justice gave careful consideration to the report and obtained from Congress amendments to increase from $5,000 to $50,000 the maximum fine which may be imposed for a Sherman Act violation, and authority for the Government to sue for actual damages or injuries resulting to it or its business or property from violations of the antitrust laws. The Division also supported a bill, enacted by Congress in the current session, providing that the Department of Justice be accorded advance notification of proposed mergers of national banks.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, established in December 1957, is charged with the enforcement of all Federal statutes in the field of civil rights. Since its inception it has processed more than 4,300 complaints of violations of a wide range of statutes and, as of May 1960, has 124 cases pending in court.

Under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, as part of its enforcement program to protect the right of all citizens to vote without racial discrimination, the division instituted three test suits in Georgia, Alabama, and Louisiana which have now been favorably decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Louisiana action resulted in restoring to the voting rolls the names of 1,377 Negroes illegally stricken.

Twenty-one other matters under the 1957 act are presently pending in various stages of preparation.

Under the additional authority granted by the Civil Rights Act of 1960, demands for inspection of voting records maintained by local voting registrars have been made in 12 counties. In five of these counties, local authorities have permitted inspection; in other counties there has not been cooperation, and lawsuits have been commenced to compel compliance with the law. The division also conducted successful criminal prosecutions for Federal law violations relating to campaign and election practices.

Convictions involving police brutality have been obtained, and trial of prison guards for mistreatment of inmates will commence soon. Several cases involving the use of third-degree methods for obtaining confessions are pending in Ohio against members of a county sheriff's office. An important prosecution under the Fugitive Felon Act, involving flight to avoid State prosecution for kidnaping and murder, resulted in convictions of three offenders and the return of the principal defendant to State authorities in Minnesota for trial and subsequent heavy sentences.

LANDS DIVISION OF JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

The United States owns about 34 percent of the entire area of the 50 States, and the Lands Division is responsible for all of the land litigation and title work relating to this property.

Some indication of the magnitude of work involved may be seen from the fact that in the field of land acquisition alone, the Lands Division closed in the period 1953 to June 1960, condemnation proceedings or negotiated purchases of over 100,000 tracts of land involving final payments of more than half a billion dollars.

Wherever consistent with the public interest, these takings have been accomplished through settlements, rather than through protracted trials. During the past year, for example, negotiated purchases and condemnation settlements represented about 94 percent of the total dollar volume of all land acquisition closings.

Contributing largely to this record is the effort made during recent years to improve the quality and therefore the reliability of the Government's appraisals of property, in part, by the increased use of and reliance upon independent local appraisers.

This has also resulted in the more expeditious handling of cases, as illustrated by the fact that during the past 3 years alone, the number of tracts involved in cases more than 5 years old has been reduced by 63 percent, and in the range between 3 and 5 years the percentage of reduction has been more than 20 percent.

In 1953, at the start of the Republican administration, the Lands Division was instrumental in the formulation of a new policy greatly reducing the amounts of land acquired for dam and reservoir projects. This permitted maximum retention of private rights in land consistent with operation and maintenance requirements. This policy has saved untold millions of dollars in acquisition costs and has allowed equal numbers of millions of dollars' worth of land interests to remain on the local tax rolls.

Recognizing the importance of the specialized work in defending the Government against large and complex tribal claims under the Indian Claims Commission Act of 1946, a separate Indian Claims Section was established in 1953, staffed without increase in the total number of division personnel. The aggregate of such claims in the hands of this section is several billions of dollars.

In the field of water and related resources, much progress has been made in representing the interests of the United States in such historic litigation as the gulf "submerged lands" cases, Arizona v. California (the lower basin of the Colorado River), and Wisconsin v. Illinois (the Great Lakes). During this period, rights in offshore oil were largely resolved in the landmark Tidelands cases.

The Lands Division achieved success in fiscal year 1959 in 85.7 percent of the appeals it handled, compared to a 1949–54 average of 73 percent. This is a clear-cut example of Justice Department efficiency under the Republicans.

The division was also principally responsible for the work of the Interdepartmental Committee for the Study of Jurisdiction over Federal Areas within the States, a committee created by direction of the President. This was the first comprehensive factual and legal study in the sensitive area of Federal-State relations, and promises to resolve many important and troublesome problems arising from jurisdictional difficulties.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

During the past 7½ years, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, through organizational changes and the introduction of new programs and procedures, has achieved significant accomplishments in all of its varied areas of responsibility.

In 1959, a total of 2,865,567 passengers were admitted from foreign countries by sea or air—twice as many as in 1953. With a primary inspection staff increase of just 11 percent, however, the service, through simplified documentation, improved physical layout, and more efficient inspection procedures, has met this enlarged responsibility effectively and expeditiously.

In 1954, the practice of detaining in Government-operated institutions applicants for admission whose status was doubtful was discontinued, and all large facilities, including Ellis Island, were closed.

In the past 7 years, an average of 132,000 persons became naturalized citizens each year. The Republican administration reduced the waiting period for naturalization applicants from 18 months in 1953 to 40 days in 1960.

As the result of stepped-up enforcement and redeployment of the Border Patrol, so-called wetback invasion has been stemmed and the daily apprehensions of Mexican illegal entrants reduced from 2,500 to 70.

Since the uprising of the "Freedom Fighters" in November 1956, almost 32,000 Hungarian refugees have been admitted to the United States under the Attorney General's exercise of the parole provisions of the law. This action was ratified by Republican-sponsored legislation which adjusted the parole status of these homeless people to that of permanent residents.

In the field of law enforcement, primary emphasis has been placed upon the prosecution of criminal, immoral, narcotic, and subversive aliens, rather than on the casual "paper" violator.

Among the 65 persons who attended the crime syndicate meeting at Apalachin, N.Y., in 1957, 5 were aliens and 30 naturalized citizens. Of the aliens, Russell Bufalino and Simone Scozzari have been ordered deported; the physical condition of Carlo Gambino precludes completion of his deportation case; and the two others were found not to be deportable. Sam Monachino, a naturalized citizen, fled to Canada and there renounced his American citizenship. Vito Genovese has been denaturalized, and proceedings have been brought against Dominick D'Agostino. Joseph Barbara, at whose home the "delegates" convened, and Salvatore Tornabe have died.

Leaflets dropped from Florida-based planes over Cuba and other incidents resulted in a request from the Secretary of State to the Attorney General for departure control of all persons leaving the United States by private aircraft for Cuba. Since November 2, 1959, the service has covered some 200 private airfields and 100 plane rental agencies, to prevent flights that would increase tensions in the Caribbean area. The Commissioner has served 49 persons with official notices not to depart from the United States for Cuba by private aircraft.

INTERNAL SECURITY

One hundred and nine leaders of the Communist Party have been convicted by juries for violating or conspiring to violate the Smith Act, all but 28 of these being subsequent to January 1953.

As a result of the Supreme Court's decision in the Yates case in 1957, laying down more stringent standards of proof, 70 of these cases were dismissed. However, 39 top leaders remain convicted, 4 under the membership clause of the Smith Act and the remainder under the conspiracy statute. Two cases raising the question of the constitutionality of the membership clause are scheduled to be heard by the Supreme Court next fall, and a 1959 conviction of six Communists in Denver for conspiracy to violate the Smith Act is pending in the court of appeals.

Since the Supreme Court's affirmance of the Barenblatt case in 1959, upholding the authority of the House Un-American Activities Committee, there have been nine convictions for contempt of Congress in the internal security field, and eight additional contempt of Congress cases are pending in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Nine officials of the Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers Union were convicted, and three others entered pleas of nolo contendere in 1959 to conspiracy to defraud the Government by fraudulently using the facilities of the National Labor Relations Board through the filing of false non-Communist affidavits. The nine defendants have taken an appeal. Previously, seven members of the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers Union, most of whom were Communist Party functionaries, were convicted of conspiring to file false non-Communist affidavits with the Labor Board. This case was affirmed by the court of appeals and is now pending on petition for certiorari.

The court of appeals in 1959 upheld the decision of the Subversive Activities Control Board after remand by the Supreme Court that the Communist Party, U.S.A., must register with the Attorney General as a Communist-action organization under the Internal Security Act of 1950. Argument will be heard by the Supreme Court in October 1960. Following the Board's original determination in 1953, the Internal Security Division of Justice moved against 21 Communist-front organizations to have the Board order their registration as such. Registration orders of the Board have been entered against 12 of these organizations, 10 of which have appealed. Eight actions were dismissed on motions of the Government. One action awaits final order of the Board.

Two actions were brought under the Communist Control Act of 1954 to have the Board determine that two labor organizations are Communist-infiltrated. One case was dismissed on the Government's motion due to loss of witnesses, and the second is at trial.

Since 1954, active registrations under the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, have increased from 271 to the present 401. Four individuals and one organization were successfully prosecuted for failure to register under the act.

Recent convictions for conspiracy to commit espionage have included Col. Rudolf Abel, Soviet state security service (KGB), Jack and Myra Soble, and Jacob Albam; indictments have been returned against George and Jane Zlatovski, and Alfred and Martha Stern, all of whom are fugitives outside the United States.

The Internal Security Division of the Justice Department also:

1. Obtained convictions against 23 Puerto Rican Nationalist Party members for seditious conspiracy.

2. Convicted 215 persons, mostly Cuban revolutionary sympathizers of Fidel Castro, under the neutrality and munitions control statutes.

3. Brought 18 prosecutions under the Trading With the Enemy Act largely involving trade with Red China, of which 9 have been successfully concluded.

4. Obtained 49 convictions of subversives relating to perjury, false statements in Government forms and falsifications of affidavits filed pursuant to the Labor Management Act of 1947.

5. Sustained the constitutionality of the Witness Immunity Act of 1954 in the Ullman case.

6. Secured two convictions for conspiracy and obstruction of justice.

7. Defended 48 civil cases brought against Government officers involving Government employee discharges, passport matters, and military discharges in the internal security area.

This is the factual record of the Republican administration's impartial administration and enforcement of Federal laws.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we will call the Executive Calendar tomorrow, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has asked me to seriously consider asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive Calendar No. 12, Executive B, 86th Congress, 2d session, the Antarctic Treaty, signed at Washington on December 1, 1959.

I am informed that there will be considerable discussion on that treaty, and I want to put the Senate on notice that we shall probably call it up by motion.

In addition, we have a report from the Finance Committee in connection with a resolution regarding the Sugar Act. We also expect to consider that tomorrow if the request should be made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Finance Committee.

Also, Senate Joint Resolution 69, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relative to equal rights for men and women, may also be called up by motion.

We expect the conference report on the supplemental appropriation bill tomorrow.

We shall also consider nominations on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We will have ready tomorrow 50, or 60, or 65 nominations for postmasters that have been approved by both Senators from the States concerned. Everything is cleared for their consideration. I would like to ask unanimous consent to bring them up on the Executive Calendar tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We also expect to have the conference report ready on the highway bill.

There will be a morning hour after the Senate convenes tomorrow morning. Then there will be a call of the calendar.

I am informed that several of my colleagues have speeches to make, some from 15 minutes to an hour in length. So I do not anticipate any rollcalls before 11:30 or 12 o'clock.

SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS TAX RETIREMENT ACT OF 1960

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order No. 1678, H.R. 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 10) to encourage the establishment of voluntary pension plans by self-employed individuals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Self-Employed Individuals Tax Retirement Act of 1960".

SEC. 2. QUALIFICATION OF PLANS.

Section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to qualified pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of paragraph (5) of subsection (a) the following new sentence: "For purposes of this paragraph, the total compensation of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of subsection (c)(1) means such individual's earned income (as defined in subsection (c)(2)(A)), and the basic or regular rate of compensation of such an individual shall be determined, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, with respect to that portion of his earned income which bears the same ratio to his earned income as the basic or regular compensation of the employees under the plan bears to the total compensation of such employees.";

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraphs:

"(7) A trust shall not constitute a qualified trust under this section unless the plan of which such trust is a part provides that, upon its termination or upon complete discontinuance of contributions under the plan, the rights of all employees to benefits accrued to the date of such termination or discontinuance, to the extent then funded, or the amounts credited to the employees' accounts, are nonforfeitable. This paragraph shall not apply to benefits or contributions which, under provisions of the plan adopted pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate to preclude the discrimination prohibited by paragraph (4), may not be used for designated employees in the event of early termination of the plan.

"(8) A trust shall not constitute a qualified trust under this section unless, under the plan of which such trust is a part, the entire interest of each employee—

"(A) either will be distributed to him not later than his taxable year in which he attains the age of 70½ years, or, in the case of an employee other than an owner-employee (as defined in subsection (c)(3)), in which he retires, whichever is the later, or

"(B) will be distributed, commencing not later than such taxable year, (i) in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, over the life of such employee or over the lives of such employee and his spouse, or (ii) in accordance with such regulations, over the life expectancy of such employee or over the life expectancy of such employee and his spouse.

"(9) A trust forming part of a pension plan shall not constitute a qualified trust under this section unless the plan provides that forfeitures must not be applied to increase the benefits any employee would otherwise receive under the plan.

"(10) A plan which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are employees within the meaning of subsection (c)(1) or are owner-employees (as defined in subsection (c)(3)(C)) shall not meet the requirements of paragraph (3) if it contains, as a condition for eligibility under the plan, a period of employment exceeding 3 years. For purposes of this paragraph, an employee of a corporation described in subsection (c)(3)(D) who is a shareholder of such corporation, and an employee of an unincorporated association described in subsection (c)(3)(E) who owns an interest in such association, shall be considered to be an employee within the meaning of subsection (c)(1).

"(11) A trust forming part of a plan which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees (as defined in subsection (c)(3)) shall constitute a qualified trust under this section only if the requirements in subsection (d) are also met."; and

(3) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (f) and inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) DEFINITIONS AND RULES RELATING TO SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS AND OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EMPLOYEE.—The term 'employee' includes, for any taxable year, an individual who has earned income (as defined in paragraph (2)(A)) for the taxable year.

"(2) EARNED INCOME.—The term 'earned income' means—

"(A) the net earnings from self-employment (as defined in section 1402(a)) to the extent that such net earnings constitute earned income (as defined in section 911(b) but determined with the application of paragraph (6) of this subsection), but such net earnings shall be determined—

"(i) without regard to paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 1402(c),

"(ii) in the case of any individual who is treated as an employee under sections 3121(d)(3)(A), (C) or (D), without regard to paragraph (2) of section 1402(c), and

"(iii) without regard to items which are not included in gross income for purposes of this chapter, and the deductions properly allocable to or chargeable against such items; and

"(B) in the case of an individual who is an employee without regard to paragraph (1), the compensation received from the employer.

For purposes of subparagraph (A), sections 911(b) and 1402, as in effect for a taxable year ending on December 31, 1960, and paragraph (6) of this subsection, as in effect for a taxable year beginning on January 1, 1961, shall be treated as having been in effect for all taxable years ending before such date.

"(3) OWNER-EMPLOYEE.—The term 'owner-employee' means an employee who—

"(A) owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business,

"(B) in the case of a partnership, is a partner who owns more than 10 percent of either the capital interest or the profits interest in such partnership,

"(C) in the case of a corporation (other than a corporation described in subparagraph (D) or (E)), is a shareholder who owns more than 10 percent of the value of the outstanding stock of the corporation or who owns more than 10 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote,

"(D) in the case of a corporation with respect to which, for the taxable year, an election under section 1372 (relating to elections by small business corporations) is in effect, is a shareholder who owns more than 10 percent of the outstanding stock of the corporation, or

"(E) in the case of an unincorporated association which is a corporation within the meaning of section 7701(a)(3) and which is engaged in a trade or business in which professional services is a material income-producing factor, owns more than a 10 percent interest in such association.

"(4) EMPLOYER.—An individual who owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business shall be treated as his own employer. A partnership shall be treated as the employer of each partner who is an employee within the meaning of paragraph (1).

"(5) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—An individual shall be treated as owning any interest in an unincorporated trade or business, and any stock in a corporation, which is owned, directly or indirectly, by his spouse or minor children. An individual who owns any interest in an unincorporated trade or business or is an employee of such trade or business, or who owns any stock in a corporation or is an employee of such corporation, shall be treated as owning any interest in such unincorporated trade or business, and any stock in such corporation, which is owned, directly or indirectly, by his ancestors or lineal descendants. Any interest or stock treated as owned by any individual by reason of the application of the preceding sentences shall not be treated as owned by him for the purpose of applying such sentences in order to make any other individual the constructive owner of such interest or stock. For purposes of this paragraph, a legally adopted child of an individual shall be treated as a child of such individual by blood.

"(6) EARNED INCOME WHEN BOTH PERSONAL SERVICES AND CAPITAL ARE MATERIAL INCOME-PRODUCING FACTORS.—In applying section 911(b) for purposes of paragraph (2)(A), in the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of paragraph (1) and who is engaged in a trade or business in which both personal services and capital are material income-producing factors and with respect to which the individual actually renders personal services on a full-time, or substantially full-time, basis, so much of his share of the net profits of such trade or business as does not exceed $2,500 shall be considered as earned income. In the case of any such individual who is engaged in more than one trade or business with respect to which he actually renders substantial personal services, if with respect to all such trades or businesses he actually renders personal services on a full-time, or substantially full-time, basis, there shall be considered as earned income with respect to the trades or businesses in which both personal services and capital are material income-producing factors—

"(A) so much of his share of the net profits of such trades or businesses as does not exceed $2,500, reduced by

"(B) his share of the net profits of any trade or business in which only personal services is a material income producing factor.

The preceding sentences shall not be construed to reduce the share of net profits of any trade or business which under the second sentence of section 911(b) would be considered as earned income of any such individual.

"(7) CONTRIBUTIONS ON BEHALF OF OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—The term 'contribution on behalf of an owner-employee' includes, except as the context otherwise requires, a contribution under a plan—

"(A) by the employer for an owner-employee, and

"(B) by an owner-employee as an employee.

"(d) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFICATION OF TRUSTS AND PLANS BENEFITING OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—A trust forming part of a stock bonus, pension, or profit-sharing plan which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees shall constitute a qualified trust under this section only if, in addition to meeting the requirements of subsection (a), the requirements of this subsection are met by the trust and by the plan of which such trust is a part.

"(1) In the case of a trust which is created on or after the date of the enactment of this subsection, or which was created before such date but is not exempt from tax under section 501(a) as an organization described in subsection (a) on the day before such date, the trustee is a bank, but a person (including the employer) other than a bank may be granted, under the trust instrument, the power to control the investment of the trust funds either by directing investments (including reinvestments, disposals, and exchanges) or by disapproving proposed investments (including reinvestments, disposals, and exchanges). This paragraph shall not apply to a trust created or organized outside the United States before the date of the enactment of this subsection if, under section 402(c), it is treated as exempt from taxation under section 501(a) on the day before such date. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'bank' means a bank as defined in section 581, a corporation which under the laws of the State of its incorporation is subject to supervision and examination by the commissioner of banking or other officer of such State in charge of the administration of the banking laws of such State, and, in the case of a trust created or organized outside the United States, a bank or trust company, wherever incorporated, exercising fiduciary powers and subject to supervision and examination by governmental authority.

"(2) Under the plan, no benefits may be paid to any owner-employee, except in the case of his becoming disabled (within the meaning of section 213(g)(3)), prior to his attaining age 59½ years, and in the case of a profitsharing or stock bonus plan—

"(A) the employees' rights to or derived from the contributions under the plan are nonforfeitable at the time the contributions are paid to or under the plan, and

"(B) such plan provides a definite formula for determining the contributions to be made to the trust by the employer on behalf of employees (other than owner-employees).

"(3) The plan does not permit—

"(A) contributions to be made by the employer on behalf of any owner-employee in excess of the amounts which may be deducted under section 404 for the taxable year;

"(B) in the case of a plan which provides contributions or benefits only for owner-employees, contributions to be made on behalf of any owner-employee in excess of the amounts which may be deducted under section 404 for the taxable year; and

"(C) if a distribution under the plan is made to any employee and if any portion of such distribution is an amount described in section 72(m)(5)(A)(i) (whether or not section 72(m)(5) applies to such amount), contributions to be made on behalf of such employee for the 5 taxable years succeeding the taxable year in which such distribution is made.

"(4) For any taxable year in which the total contributions on behalf of owner-employees which are deductible under section 404 exceed an amount equal to one-half of the amount deductible under section 404 for contributions on behalf of employees (other than owner-employees) with respect to which the employees' rights are nonforfeitable at the time the contributions are made to or under the plan, the plan meets the requirements of paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (a) without taking into account, for any purpose, contributions or benefits under chapter 2 (relating to tax on self-employment income), chapter 21 (relating to Federal Insurance Contributions Act), title II of the Social Security Act, as amended, or any other Federal or State law.

"(5) The plan meets the requirements of paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (a) without taking into account for any purpose the fact that, by reason of sections 211(c)(4) and (5) of the Social Security Act, as amended, the income of an owner-employee does not constitute net earnings from self-employment (as defined in section 211(a) of such Act).

"(6) Under the plan, if an owner-employee dies before his entire interest has been distributed to him, or if distribution has been commenced in accordance with subsection (a)(8)(B) to his surviving spouse and such surviving spouse dies before his entire interest has been distributed to her, his entire interest (or the remaining part of such interest if distribution thereof has commenced) will, within 5 years after his death (or the death of his surviving spouse), be distributed, or applied to the purchase of an immediate annuity for his beneficiary or beneficiaries (or the beneficiary or beneficiaries of his surviving spouse) which will be payable for the life of such beneficiary or beneficiaries (or for a term certain not extending beyond the life expectancy of such beneficiary or beneficiaries) and which will be immediately distributed to such beneficiary or beneficiaries.

"(7) Under the plan—

"(A) any contribution which is an excess contribution (as defined in subsection (e)(1)), together with the income attributable to such excess contribution, is (unless subsection (e)(2)(E) applies) to be repaid—

"(i) if the excess contribution is made on behalf of an owner-employee other than an owner-employee as defined in subsection (c)(3)(B), to the person who made the excess contribution, or

"(ii) if the excess contribution is made on behalf of an owner-employee as defined in subsection (c)(3)(B), to such owner-employee;

"(B) if for any taxable year the plan does not, by reason of subsection (e)(2)(A), meet (for purposes of section 404) the requirements of this subsection with respect to an owner-employee, the income for the taxable year attributable to the interest of such owner-employee under the plan is to be paid to such owner-employee; and

"(C) the entire interest of an owner-employee is to be repaid to him when required by the provisions of subsection (e)(2)(E).

"(8)(A) If the plan provides contributions or benefits for an owner-employee who controls, or for two or more owner-employees who together control, the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established, and who also control as an owner-employee or as owner-employees one or more other trades or businesses, such plan and the plans (if any) established with respect to such other trades or businesses constitute a plan which meets the requirements of subsection (a) (3) and (4) with respect to the employees of all such trades or businesses (including the trade or business with respect to which the plan intended to qualify under this section is established).

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), an owner-employee, or two or more owner-employees, shall be considered to control a trade or business if such owner-employee, or such two or more owner-employees together—

"(i) own the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business,

"(ii) in the case of a partnership, own more than 50 percent of either the capital interest or the profits interest in such partnership, or

"(iii) in the case of a corporation, own either more than 50 percent of the value of the outstanding stock of the corporation or more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, an owner-employee, or two or more owner-employees, shall be treated as owning any interest in a partnership, and any stock in a corporation, which is owned, directly or indirectly, by a partnership or by a corporation which such owner-employee, or such two or more owner-employees, are considered to control within the meaning of the preceding sentence.

"(9) Under the plan, contributions on behalf of any owner-employee may be made only with respect to the earned income of such owner-employee which is derived from the trade or business with respect to which such plan is established.

"(e) EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS ON BEHALF OF OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) EXCESS CONTRIBUTION DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'excess contribution' means—

"(A) if, in the taxable year, contributions are made under the plan only on behalf of owner-employees, the amount of any contribution made on behalf of any owner-employee which (without regard to this subsection) is not deductible under section 404 for the taxable year; or

"(B) if, in the taxable year, contributions are made under the plan on behalf of employees other than owner-employees—

"(i) the amount of any contribution made by the employer on behalf of any owner-employee which (without regard to this subsection) is not deductible under section 404 for the taxable year;

"(ii) the amount of any contribution made by any owner-employee (as an employee) at a rate which exceeds the rate of contributions permitted to be made by employees other than owner-employees; and

"(iii) the amount of any contribution made by any owner-employee (as an employee) which exceeds the lesser of $2,500 or 10 percent of the earned income for such taxable year derived by such owner-employee from the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established; and

"(C) the amount of any contribution made on behalf of an owner-employee in any taxable year for which, under paragraph (2)(A) or (E), the plan does not (for purposes of section 404) meet the requirements of subsection (d) with respect to such owner-employee.

For purposes of this subsection, the amount of any contribution which is allocable (determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to the purchase of life, accident, health, or other insurance shall not be taken into account.

"(2) EFFECT OF EXCESS CONTRIBUTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If an excess contribution (other than an excess contribution to which subparagraph (E) applies) is made on behalf of an owner-employee in any taxable year, the plan with respect to which such excess contribution is made shall, except as provided in subparagraphs (C) and (D), be considered, for purposes of section 404, as not meeting the requirements of subsection (d) with respect to such owner-employee for the taxable year and for all succeeding taxable years.

"(B) INCLUSION OF AMOUNTS IN GROSS INCOME OF OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—For any taxable year for which any plan does not meet the requirements of subsection (d) with respect to an owner-employee by reason of subparagraph (A), the gross income of such owner-employee shall, for purposes of this chapter, include the amount of income for such taxable year attributable to the interest of such owner-employee under such plan.

"(C) REPAYMENT WITHIN PRESCRIBED PERIOD.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to an excess contribution with respect to any taxable year, if, on or before the close of the 6-month period beginning on the day on which the Secretary or his delegate sends notice (by certified or registered mail) to the person to whom such excess contribution was paid of the amount of such excess contribution, the amount of such excess contribution, and the income attributable thereto, is repaid—

"(i) if the excess contribution was made on behalf of an owner-employee other than an owner-employee as defined in subsection (c)(3)(B), to the person who made such excess contribution, or

"(ii) if the excess contribution was made on behalf of an owner-employee as defined in subsection (c)(3)(B), to such owner-employee.

If the excess contribution is an excess contribution as defined in paragraph (1)(A) or (B)(i), or is an excess contribution as defined in paragraph (1)(C) with respect to which a deduction has been claimed under section 404, the notice required by the preceding sentence shall not be mailed prior to the time that the amount of the tax under this chapter of the person referred to in clause (i), or of the owner-employee referred to in clause (ii), as the case may be, for the taxable year in which such excess contribution was made has been finally determined.

"(D) REPAYMENT AFTER PRESCRIBED PERIOD.—If an excess contribution, together with the income attributable thereto, is not repaid within the 6-month period referred to in subparagraph (C), subparagraph (A) shall not apply to an excess contribution with respect to any taxable year beginning with the taxable year in which the person to whom such excess contribution was paid repays the amount of such excess contribution to the person specified in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (C), and pays to the owner-employee the amount of income attributable to the interest of such owner-employee which, under subparagraph (B), has been included in the gross income of such owner-employee for any prior taxable year.

"(E) SPECIAL RULE IF EXCESS CONTRIBUTION WAS WILLFULLY MADE.—If an excess contribution made on behalf of an owner-employee is determined to have been willfully made, then—

"(i) subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D) shall not apply with respect to such excess contribution;

"(ii) there shall be distributed to the owner-employee on whose behalf such excess contribution was willfully made his entire interest in all plans with respect to which he is an owner-employee; and

"(iii) no plan shall, for purposes of section 404, be considered as meeting the requirements of subsection (d) with respect to such owner-employee for the taxable year in which it is determined that such excess contribution was willfully made and for the 5 taxable years following such taxable year.

"(F) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—In any case in which subparagraph (A) applies, the period for assessing any deficiency arising by reason of—

"(i) the disallowance of any deduction under section 404 on account of a plan not meeting the requirements of subsection (d) with respect to the owner-employee on whose behalf an excess contribution was made, or

"(ii) the inclusion, under subparagraph (B), in gross income of such owner-employee of income attributable to the interest of such owner-employee under a plan, for the taxable year in which such excess contribution was made or for any succeeding taxable year shall not expire prior to one year after the close of the 6-month period referred to in subparagraph (C)."

SEC. 3. DEDUCTIBILITY OF CONTRIBUTION TO PLANS.

(a) INCLUSION OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—Section 404(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the deductibility of contributions to pension, annuity, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plans or plans of deferred compensation) is amended—

(1) by striking out in paragraph (2) "and (6)," and inserting in lieu thereof "(6), (7), (8), (9), and (10) and, in the case of a plan described in paragraph (9) of this subsection, which meets the requirements of section 401(d)(2) (other than subparagraphs (A) and (B)), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), and (9),"; and

(2) by adding after paragraph (7) the following new paragraphs:

"(8) SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of a plan included in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are employees within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), for purposes of this section—

"(A) the term 'employee' includes an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), and the employer of such individual is the person treated as his employer under section 401(c)(4);

"(B) the term 'earned income' has the meaning assigned to it by section 401(c)(2);

"(C) the contributions to such plan on behalf of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) shall be considered to satisfy the conditions of section 162 or 212 to the extent that such contributions do not exceed the earned income of such individual derived from the trade or business with respect to which such plan is established, and to the extent that such contributions are not allocable (determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to the purchase of life, accident, health, or other insurance; and

"(D) any reference to compensation shall, in the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), be considered to be a reference to the earned income of such individual derived from the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established.

"(9) PLANS BENEFITING OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—In the case of a plan included in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees—

"(A) the limitations provided by paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (7) on the amounts deductible for any taxable year shall be computed, with respect to contributions on behalf of employees (other than owner-employees), as if such employees were the only employees for whom contributions and benefits are provided under the plan;

"(B) the limitations provided by paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (7) on the amounts deductible for any taxable year shall be computed, with respect to contributions on behalf of owner-employees—

"(i) as if such owner-employees were the only employees for whom contributions and benefits are provided under the plan, and

"(ii) without regard to paragraph (1)(D) the second and third sentences of paragraph (3), and the second sentence of paragraph (7); and

"(C) the amounts deductible under paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (7), with respect to contributions on behalf of any owner-employee, shall not exceed the applicable limitation provided in subsection (e). For purposes of this paragraph and subsections (e) and (f), the term 'owner-employee' has the meaning assigned to it by section 401(c)(3) (determined with the application of section 401(c)(5))."

(b) LIMITATIONS ON DEDUCTIONS FOR CONTRIBUTIONS ON BEHALF OF OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—Section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the deductibility of contributions to pension, annuity, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plans or plans of deferred compensation) is amended by adding after subsection (d) the following new subsections:

"(e) SPECIAL LIMITATIONS FOR OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a plan included in subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3) which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees (other than owner-employees as defined in section 401(c)(3)(C)), the amounts deductible under subsection (a) in any taxable year with respect to contributions on behalf of any owner-employee shall, subject to the provisions of paragraphs (3) and (4), not exceed whichever of the following amounts is the greater:

"(A) $2,500, or 10 percent of the earned income derived by such owner-employee from the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established, whichever is the lesser; or

"(B) an amount equal to such owner-employee's proportionate share (determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) of an amount equal to one-half of the amount deductible under section 404 for such taxable year for contributions on behalf of employees (other than owner-employees) with respect to which the employees' rights are nonforfeitable at the time the contributions are made to or under the plan.

"(2) CERTAIN CORPORATE OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—In the case of a plan included in subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3) which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees as defined in section 401(c)(3)(C), the amounts deductible under subsection (a) in any taxable year with respect to contributions on behalf of any such owner-employee shall, subject to the provisions of paragraphs (3) and (4), not exceed whichever of the following amounts is the greater:

"(A) the amount described in paragraph (1)(A);

"(B) an amount equal to such owner-employee's proportionate share (determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) of an amount equal to the amount deductible under section 404 for such taxable year for contributions on behalf of employees (other than owner-employees) with respect to which the employees' rights are nonforfeitable at the time the contributions are made to or under the plan; or

"(C) an amount, determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, necessary (after taking into account amounts contributed or to be contributed to or under the plan and all other plans of the employer) to provide the cost of a straight life annuity commencing at the age of 64½ years, paying annually an amount equal to 20 percent of 1/10 of the compensation received by such owner-employee from the employer during the 10-year period immediately preceding the date of his retirement (or if earlier, his attaining the age of 64½ years), distributed as a level amount over the period beginning with the taxable year of the contribution and ending with the taxable year in which such owner-employee attains the age of 64½ years (or over the period required by subsection (a)(1)(B), if such period ends after the taxable year in which such owner-employee attains such age). For purposes of determining the cost of any such annuity with respect to any taxable year, the annual compensation to be received by such owner-employee from the employer in any year subsequent to such taxable year shall be assumed to be an amount equal to the average annual compensation received by such owner-employee from the employer during the 5-year period ending with such taxable year, or during so much of such 5-year period as such owner-employee has been an employee of the employer.

"(3) PLANS BENEFITING OWNER-EMPLOYEES WHO HAVE CONTROL OF THE TRADE OR BUSINESS.—Paragraphs (1)(A), (2)(A), and (2)(C) shall not apply with respect to contributions under a plan for any taxable year on behalf of an owner-employee who controls (within the meaning of section 401(d)(8)(B), determined with the application of section 401(c)(5)) the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established, if deductions are allowable for such taxable year with respect to contributions made on behalf of any employee whose rights to or derived from such contributions are forfeitable at the time such contributions are made.

"(4) CONTRIBUTIONS MADE UNDER MORE THAN ONE PLAN.—

"(A) OVERALL LIMITATION.—In any taxable year in which amounts are deductible with respect to two or more plans (whether established with respect to the same trade or business or different trades or businesses) on behalf of an individual who is an owner-employee with respect to such plans, the aggregate amount deductible for such taxable year under such plans with respect to contributions on behalf of such owner-employee shall not exceed whichever of the following amounts is the greater:

"(i) $2,500,

"(ii) the sum of the amounts so contributed under all such plans to the extent that, with respect to each such plan, the amount contributed does not exceed the amount described in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B), whichever is applicable, or

"(iii) the sum of the amounts so contributed to all such plans to which paragraph (2) applies to the extent that, with respect to each plan to which paragraph (2) applies, the amount so contributed does not exceed the amount described in paragraph (2)(C).

"(B) ALLOCATION OF AMOUNTS DEDUCTIBLE.—In any case in which the amounts deductible under subsection (a) (with the application of the limitation of this subsection) with respect to contributions made on behalf of an owner-employee under two or more plans are, by reason of subparagraph (A), less than the amounts deductible under such subsection determined without regard to such subparagraph, the amount deductible under subsection (a) with respect to such contributions under each such plan shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate.

"(5) CONTRIBUTIONS ALLOCABLE TO INSURANCE PROTECTION.—For purposes of this subsection, contributions which are allocable (determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to the purchase of life, accident, health, or other insurance shall not be taken into account.

"(6) NO INFERENCE WITH RESPECT TO NONDISCRIMINATION REQUIREMENTS.—Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to allow the making of contributions or the distribution of benefits to, or with respect to, any owner-employee, if such contributions or such benefits would be discriminatory within the meaning of section 401(a)(4).

"(f) CERTAIN LOAN REPAYMENTS CONSIDERED AS CONTRIBUTIONS.—For purposes of this section, any amount paid, directly or indirectly, by an owner-employee in repayment of any loan which under section 72(m)(4)(B) was treated as an amount received under a contract purchased by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) or purchased as a part of a plan described in section 403(a) shall be treated as a contribution to which this section applies on behalf of such owner-employee to such trust or to or under such plan."

SEC. 4. TAXABILITY OF DISTRIBUTIONS.

(a) EMPLOYEES' ANNUITIES.—Section 72 (d)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to employees' annuities) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR APPLICATION OF PARAGRAPH (1).—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) if the employee died before any amount was received as an annuity under the contract, the words 'receivable by the employee' shall be read as 'receivable by a beneficiary of the employee'; and

"(B) any contribution made with respect to the contract while the employee is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) which is not allowed as a deduction under section 404 shall be treated as consideration for the contract contributed by the employee."

(b) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS AND OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—Section 72 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to annuities, etc.) is amended by redesignating subsection (m) as subsection (o) and by inserting after subsection (l) the following new subsections:

"(m) SPECIAL RULES APPLICABLE TO EMPLOYEE ANNUITIES AND DISTRIBUTIONS UNDER EMPLOYEE PLANS.—

"(1) CERTAIN AMOUNTS RECEIVED BEFORE ANNUITY STARTING DATE.—Any amounts received under an annuity, endowment, or life insurance contract before the annuity starting date which are not received as an annuity (within the meaning of subsection (e)(2)) shall be included in the recipient's gross income for the taxable year in which received to the extent that—

"(A) such amounts, plus all amounts theretofore received under the contract and includible in gross income under this paragraph, do not exceed

"(B) the aggregate premiums or other consideration paid for the contract while the employee was an owner-employee (as defined in section 401(c)(3)) which were allowed as deductions under section 404 for the taxable year and all prior taxable years (not including any portion of such premiums or other consideration properly allocable as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to the cost of life, accident, health, or other insurance.

Any such amounts so received which are not includible in gross income under this paragraph shall be subject to the provisions of subsection (e).

"(2) COMPUTATION OF CONSIDERATION PAID BY THE EMPLOYEE.—In computing—

"(A) the aggregate amount of premiums or other consideration paid for the contract for purposes of subsection (c)(1)(A) (relating to the investment in the contract),

"(B) the consideration for the contract contributed by the employee for purposes of subsection (d)(1) (relating to employee's contributions recoverable in 3 years), and

"(C) the aggregate premiums or other consideration paid for purposes of subsection (e)(1)(B) (relating to certain amounts not received as an annuity), any amount allowed as a deduction with respect to the contract under section 404 which was paid while the employee was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) shall be treated as consideration contributed by the employer, and there shall not be taken into account any portion of the premiums or other consideration for the contract paid while the employee was an owner-employee which is properly allocable (as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to the cost of life, accident, health, or other insurance.

"(3) LIFE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—

"(A) This paragraph shall apply to any life insurance contract—

"(i) purchased as a part of a plan described in section 403(a), or

"(ii) purchased by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) if the proceeds of such contract are payable directly or indirectly to a participant in such trust or to a beneficiary of such participant.

"(B) Any contributions to a plan described in subparagraph (A)(i) or a trust described in subparagraph (A)(ii) which is allowed as a deduction under section 404, and any income of a trust described in subparagraph (A)(ii), which is determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate to have been applied to purchase the life insurance protection under a contract described in subparagraph (A), is includible in the gross income of the participant for the taxable year when so applied.

"(C) In the case of the death of an individual insured under a contract described in subparagraph (A), an amount equal to the cash surrender value of the contract immediately before the death of the insured shall be treated as a payment under such plan or a distribution by such trust, and the excess of the amount payable by reason of the death of the insured over such cash surrender value shall not be includible in gross income under this section and shall be treated as provided in section 101.

"(4) AMOUNTS CONSTRUCTIVELY RECEIVED.—

"(A) ASSIGNMENTS OR PLEDGES.—If during any taxable year an owner-employee assigns (or agrees to assign) or pledges (or agrees to pledge) any portion of his interest in a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) or any portion of the value of a contract purchased as part of a plan described in section 403(a), such portion shall be treated as having been received by such owner-employee as a distribution from such trust or as an amount received under the contract.

"(B) LOANS ON CONTRACTS.—If during any taxable year, an owner-employee receives, directly or indirectly, any amount from any insurance company as a loan under a contract purchased by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) or purchased as part of a plan described in section 403(a), and issued by such insurance company, such amount shall be treated as an amount received under the contract.

"(5) PENALTIES APPLICABLE TO CERTAIN AMOUNTS RECEIVED BY OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) This paragraph shall apply—

"(i) to amounts (other than any amount received by an individual in his capacity as a policyholder of an annuity, endowment, or life insurance contract which is in the nature of a dividend or similar distribution) which are received from a qualified trust described in section 401(a) or under a plan described in section 403(a) and which are received by an individual, who is, or has been, an owner-employee, before such individual attains the age of 59½ years, for any reason other than the individual's becoming disabled (within the meaning of section 213(g)(3)), but only to the extent that such amounts are attributable to contributions paid on behalf of such individual (whether or not paid by him) while he was an owner-employee,

"(ii) to amounts which are received from a qualified trust described in section 401(a) or under a plan described in section 403(a) at any time by an individual who is, or has been, an owner-employee, or by the successor of such individual, but only to the extent that such amounts are determined, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, to exceed the benefits provided for such individual under the plan formula, and

"(iii) to amounts which are received, by reason of the distribution under the provisions of section 401(e)(2)(E), by an individual who is, or has been, an owner-employee of his entire interest in all qualified trusts described in section 401(a) and in all plans described in section 403(a).

"(B)(i) If the aggregate of the amounts to which this paragraph applies received by any person in his taxable year equals or exceeds $2,500, the increase in his tax for the taxable year in which such amounts are received shall not be less than 110 percent of the aggregate increase in taxes, for the taxable year and the 4 immediately preceding taxable years, which would have resulted if such amounts had been included in such person's gross income ratably over such taxable years.

"(ii) If deductions have been allowed under section 404 for contributions paid on behalf of the individual while he is an owner-employee for a number of prior taxable years less than 4, clause (i) shall be applied by taking into account a number of taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year in which the amount was so received equal to such lesser number.

"(C) If subparagraph (B) does not apply to a person for the taxable year, the increase in tax of such person for the taxable year attributable to the amounts to which this paragraph applies shall be 110 percent of such increase (computed without regard to this subparagraph).

"(D) Subparagraphs (A) (i) and (ii) of this paragraph shall not apply to any amount to which section 402(a)(2) or 403(a)(2) applies.

"(E) For special rules for computation of taxable income for taxable years to which this paragraph applies, see subsection (n)(3).

"(6) OWNER-EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'owner-employee' has the meaning assigned to it by section 401(c)(3) (determined with the application of section 401(c)(5)).

"(n) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS WITH RESPECT TO CONTRIBUTIONS BY SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—

"(1) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION.—

"(A) DISTRIBUTIONS BY EMPLOYEES' TRUST.—Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (C), this subsection shall apply to amounts distributed to a distributee, in the case of an employees' trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), if the total distributions payable to the distributee with respect to an employee are paid to the distributee within one taxable year of the distributee—

"(i) on account of the employee's death,

"(ii) after the employee has attained the age of 59½ years, or

"(iii) after the employee has become disabled (within the meaning of section 213(g)(3)).

"(B) ANNUITY PLANS.—Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (C), this paragraph shall apply to amounts paid to a payee, in the case of an annuity plan described in section 403(a), if the total amounts payable to the payee with respect to an employee are paid to the payee within one taxable year of the payee—

"(i) on account of the employee's death,

"(ii) after the employee has attained the age of 59½ years, or

"(iii) after the employee has become disabled (within the meaning of section 213(g)(3)).

"(C) LIMITATIONS AND EXCEPTIONS.—This subsection shall apply—

"(i) only with respect to so much of any distribution or payment to which (without regard to this subparagraph) subparagraph (A) or (B) applies as is attributable to contributions made on behalf of an employee while he was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), and

"(ii) if the recipient is the employee on whose behalf such contributions were made, only if contributions which were allowed as a deduction under section 404 have been made on behalf of such employee while he was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) for 5 or more taxable years prior to the taxable year in which the total distributions payable or total amounts payable, as the case may be, are paid.

This subsection shall not apply to amounts described in clauses (ii) and (iii) of subparagraph (A) of subsection (m)(5) (but, in the case of amounts described in clause (ii) of such subparagraph, only to the extent that subsection (m)(5) applies to such amounts).

"(2) LIMITATION OF TAX.—In any case to which this subsection applies, the tax attributable to the amounts to which this subsection applies for the taxable year in which such amounts are received shall not be greater than 5 times the increase in tax which would result from the inclusion in gross income of the recipient of 20 percent of so much of the amount so received as is includible in gross income.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF TAXABLE INCOME.—Notwithstanding section 63 (relating to definition of taxable income), for purposes only of computing the tax under this chapter attributable to amounts to which this subsection or subsection (m)(5) applies and which are includible in gross income, the taxable income of the recipient for the taxable year of receipt (and for any other taxable year involved in the computation under subsection (m)(5)) shall be treated as being not less than the amount by which—

"(A) the aggregate of such amounts so includible in gross income, exceeds

"(B) the amount of the deductions allowed for such taxable year under section 151 (relating to deductions for personal exemptions).

In any case in which the preceding sentence results in an increase in taxable income for any taxable year, the resulting increase in the taxes imposed by section 1 or 3 for such taxable year shall not be reduced by any credit under part IV of subchapter A (other than section 31 thereof) which, but for this sentence, would be allowable."

(c) CAPITAL GAINS TREATMENT OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES' TRUSTS DISTRIBUTIONS.—Section 402(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to capital gains treatment for certain distributions) is amended by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new sentence: "This paragraph shall not apply to distributions paid to any distributee to the extent such distributions are attributable to contributions made on behalf of the employee while he was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1)."

(d) CAPITAL GAINS TREATMENT OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES' ANNUITY PAYMENTS.—Section 403(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to taxability of a beneficiary under a qualified annuity plan) is amended—

(1) by striking out in paragraph (2)(A)(i) "which meets the requirements of section 401(a)(3), (4), (5), and (6)" and inserting in lieu thereof "described in paragraph (1)";

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (2)(A) the following new sentence: "This subparagraph shall not apply to amounts paid to any payee to the extent such amounts are attributable to contributions made on behalf of the employee while he was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1)."; and

(3) by adding after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'employee' includes an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), and the employer of such individual is the person treated as his employer under section 401(c)(4)."

SEC. 5. PLANS FOR PURCHASE OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

(a) QUALIFIED BOND PURCHASE PLANS.—Part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to deferred compensation, etc.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 405. QUALIFIED BOND PURCHASE PLANS.

"(a) REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFICATIONS.—A plan of an employer for the purchase for and distribution to his employees or their beneficiaries of United States bonds described in subsection (b) shall constitute a qualified bond purchase plan under this section if—

"(1) the plan meets the requirements of section 401(a)(3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10), and, if applicable, the requirements of section 401(d) (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (8), and (9); and

"(2) contributions under the plan are used solely to purchase for employees or their beneficiaries United States bonds described in subsection (b).

"(b) BONDS TO WHICH APPLICABLE.—

"(1) CHARACTERISTICS OF BONDS.—This section shall apply only to a bond issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, which by its terms, or by regulations prescribed by the Secretary under such Act—

"(A) provides for payment of interest, or investment yield, only upon redemption;

"(B) may be purchased only in the name of an individual;

"(C) ceases to bear interest, or provide investment yield, not later than 5 years after the death of the individual in whose name it is purchased;

"(D) may be redeemed before the death of the individual in whose name it is purchased only if such individual—

"(i) has attained the age of 59½ years, or

"(ii) has become disabled (within the meaning of section 213(g)(3)); and

"(E) is nontransferable.

"(2) MUST BE PURCHASED IN NAME OF EMPLOYEE.—This section shall apply to a bond described in paragraph (1) only if it is purchased in the name of the employee.

"(c) DEDUCTION FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO BOND PURCHASE PLANS.—Contributions paid by an employer to or under a qualified bond purchase plan shall be deductible in an amount determined under section 404(a) in the same manner and to the same extent as if such contributions were made to a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a).

"(d) TAXABILITY OF BENEFICIARY OF QUALIFIED BOND PURCHASE PLAN.—

"(1) GROSS INCOME NOT TO INCLUDE BONDS AT TIME OF DISTRIBUTION.—For purposes of this chapter, in the case of a distributee of a bond described in subsection (b) under a qualified bond purchase plan, or from a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), gross income does not include any amount attributable to the receipt of such bond. Upon redemption of such bond, the proceeds shall be subject to taxation under this chapter, but the provisions of section 72 (relating to annuities, etc.) and section 1232 (relating to bonds and other evidences of indebtedness) shall not apply.

"(2) BASIS.—The basis of any bond received by a distributee under a qualified bond purchase plan—

"(A) if such bond is distributed to an employee, or with respect to an employee, who at the time of purchase of the bond, was an employee other than an employee within the mean of section 401(c)(1), shall be the amount of the contributions by the employee which were used to purchase the bond, and

"(B) if such bond is distributed to an employee, or with respect to an employee, who, at the time of purchase of the bond, was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), shall be the amount of the contributions used to purchase the bond which were made on behalf of such employee and were not allowed as a deduction under subsection (c).

The basis of any bond described in subsection (b) received by a distributee from a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) shall be determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate.

"(e) CAPITAL GAINS TREATMENT NOT TO APPLY TO BONDS DISTRIBUTED BY TRUSTS.—Section 402(a)(2) shall not apply to any bond described in subsection (b) distributed to any distributee and, for purposes of applying such section, any such bond distributed to any distributee and any such bond to the credit of any employee shall not be taken into account.

"(f) EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'employee' includes an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), and the employer of such individual shall be the person treated as his employer under section 401(c)(4).

"(g) PROOF OF PURCHASE.—At the time of purchase of any bond to which this section applies, proof of such purchase shall be furnished in such form as will enable the purchaser, and the employee in whose name such bond is purchased, to comply with the provisions of this section.

"(h) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary or his delegate shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such part is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 405. Qualified bond purchase plans."

SEC. 6. PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS

Section 503 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to prohibited transactions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) TRUSTS BENEFITING CERTAIN OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—In the case of a trust described in section 401(a) which is part of a plan providing contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are owner-employees (as defined in section 401(c)(3)) who control (within the meaning of section 401(d)(8)(B), determined with the application of section 401(c)(5)) the trade or business with respect to which the plan is established, the term 'prohibited transaction' also means any transaction in which such trust, directly or indirectly—

"(A) lends any part of the corpus or income of the trust to;

"(B) pays any compensation for personal services rendered to the trust to;

"(C) makes any part of its services available on a preferential basis to; or

"(D) acquires for the trust any property from, or sells any property to; any person described in subsection (c) or to any such owner-employee, a member of the family (as defined in section 267(c)(4)) of any such owner-employee, or a corporation controlled by any such owner-employee through the ownership, directly or indirectly, of 50 percent or more of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or 50 percent or more of the total value of shares of all classes of stock of the corporation.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR LOANS.—For purposes of the application of paragraph (1)(A), the following rules shall apply with respect to a loan made before the date of the enactment of this subsection which would be a prohibited transaction if made in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1960:

"(A) If any part of the loan is repayable prior to December 31, 1963, the renewal of such part of the loan for a period not extending beyond December 31, 1963, on the same terms, shall not be considered a prohibited transaction.

"(B) If the loan is repayable on demand, the continuation of the loan beyond December 31, 1963, shall be considered a prohibited transaction."

SEC. 7. OTHER SPECIAL RULES, TECHNICAL CHANGES, AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

(a) RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT.—Section 37(c)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to definition of retirement income) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) pensions and annuities (including, in the case of an individual who is, or has been, an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), distributions by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a)),"; and

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (C), by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "and", and by adding after subparagraph (D) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) under or to an annuity plan which, at the time of such payment, is a plan described in section 403(a); or

"(C) under or to a bond purchase plan which, at the time of such payment is a qualified bond purchase plan described in section 405(a)."

(m) INFORMATION REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subpart B of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to information concerning transactions with other persons) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6047. INFORMATION RELATING TO CERTAIN TRUSTS AND ANNUITY AND BOND PURCHASE PLANS.

"(a) TRUSTEES AND INSURANCE COMPANIES.—The trustee of a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) to which contributions have been paid under a plan on behalf of any owner-employee (as defined in section 401(c)(3)), and each insurance company which is the issuer of a contract purchased by such a trust, or purchased under a plan described in section 403(a), contributions for which have been paid on behalf of any owner-employee, shall file such returns (in such form and at such times), keep such records, make such identification of contracts and funds (and accounts within such funds) and supply such information, as the Secretary or his delegate shall by forms or regulations prescribe.

"(b) OWNER-EMPLOYEES.—Every individual on whose behalf contributions have been paid as an owner-employee (as defined in section 401(c)(3))—

"(1) to a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), or

"(2) to an insurance company under a plan described in section 403(a), shall furnish the trustee or insurance company, as the case may be, such information at such times and in such form and manner as the Secretary or his delegate shall prescribe by forms or regulations.

"(c) EMPLOYEES UNDER QUALIFIED BOND PURCHASE PLANS.—Every individual in whose name a bond described in section 405(b)(1) is purchased by his employer under a qualified bond purchase plan described in section 405(a), or by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), shall furnish—

"(1) to his employer or to such trust, and

"(2) to the Secretary (or to such person as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe), such information as the Secretary or his delegate shall by forms or regulations prescribe.

"(d) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For criminal penalty for furnishing fraudulent information, see section 7207."

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such subpart B is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 6047. Information relating to certain trusts and annuity and bond plans."

(3) PENALTY.—Section 7207 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to fraudulent returns, statements, or other documents) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Any person required pursuant to section 6047(b) to furnish any information to any trust, any insurance company, his employer, or the Secretary who willfully furnishes any information known by him to be fraudulent or to be false as to any material matter shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) TRUSTS AND PLANS OF UNINCORPORATED EMPLOYERS.—In the case of any trust or plan of an employer which is not a corporation, the amendments made by sections 2, 3, 4, and 6 of this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1960.

(b) TRUSTS AND PLANS OF CORPORATE EMPLOYERS WHICH ARE QUALIFIED ON DECEMBER 31, 1960.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any trust of an employer that is a corporation which on December 31, 1960, is exempt from tax under section 501(a) as an organization described in section 401(a) (or is treated, under section 402(c), as exempt), and in the case of any plan of an employer that is a corporation which, on December 31, 1960, is a plan described in section 403 (a), the amendments made by sections 2, 3, 4, and 6 of this Act shall, except as provided in paragraph (2), apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1963, or, if earlier, the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1960, for which such trust would, without taking into account the amendments made by such sections, not qualify for exemption under section 501(a) as an organization described in section 401(a) (or not be treated, under section 402(c), as exempt), or for which such plan would, without taking into account the amendments made by such sections, not be a plan described in section 403(a).

(2) CERTAIN QUALIFICATION REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 401(A).—In the case of any trust or plan described in paragraph (1), paragraphs (7), (8), and (9) of section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as added by section 2(2) of this Act) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1960, except so much of paragraph (8) of such section 401(a) as requires the entire interest of an owner-employee (as defined in section 401(c)(3) (C), (D), or (E) of such Code, as added by section 2(3) of this Act) who has not retired to be distributed to him not later than (or commencing not later than) the taxable year in which he attains the age of 70½ years.

(c) TRUSTS AND PLANS OF CORPORATE EMPLOYERS WHICH ARE NOT QUALIFIED ON DECEMBER 31, 1960.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any trust or plan of an employer which is a corporation to which subsection (b) does not apply, the amendments made by sections 2, 3, 4, and 6 of this Act shall, except as provided in paragraph (2), apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1960.

(2) VESTING REQUIREMENTS.—In the case of any trust or plan to which paragraph (1) applies (other than a trust or plan described in paragraph (3)), the following provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as added by sections 2 and 3 of this Act) shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1963:

(A) section 401(d)(2)(A);

(B) so much of sections 401(d)(4) and 404(e)(2)(B) as refer to employees' rights which are nonforfeitable; and

(C) section 404(e)(3).

(3) SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS AND CERTAIN ASSOCIATIONS TAXED AS CORPORATIONS.—Paragraph (2) shall not apply in the case of any trust or plan of an employer which, for the taxable year, is—

(A) a corporation with respect to which an election under section 1372 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to elections by small business corporations) is in effect, or

(B) an unincorporated association which is a corporation within the meaning of section 7701(a)(3) of such Code and which is engaged in a trade or business in which professional services is a material income-producing factor.

(d) AMENDMENTS MADE BY SECTIONS 5 and 7.—The amendments made by sections 5 and 7 of this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1960.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if any Senators desire to make insertions in the RECORD, I am prepared to yield to them. If not, I am about to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the present status of H.R. 10?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the pending business.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope we may proceed to a discussion of this measure and vote upon the various amendments. Several of us have been waiting for days to discuss the bill. The proponents of the measure, since the speech of the Senator from Florida, have not advanced any definitive arguments for it.

I hope the proponents will come forward and give their reasons why they are supporting H.R. 10, so that we may urge quick and definitive decisions on the various points involved.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, is is so ordered.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the proponents of the bill, in the course of their argument yesterday, did establish that we might have written a worse bill than we did.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I doubt it.

Mr. McCARTHY. This is significant progress. They said the House bill was worse than the one we reported, but that is a relative statement, although it is in the nature of progress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I received from the chairman of the board of the International Milling Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL MILLING CO.,
Minneapolis, Minn., June 29, 1960.

The Honorable EUGENE J. McCARTHY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCARTHY: Our analysis of the "owner-employee" provisions of H.R. 10 (Keogh bill) as recently reported out by the Senate Finance Committee makes it apparent that both the employees' retirement plan and the profit-sharing retirement plan of International Milling Co. would require inequitable and impractical changes in order to continue to qualify as tax-exempt trusts if this version of the bill should be enacted into law. These changes would impose severe and unnecessary handicaps upon International, and many other companies having Treasury approved, broad coverage pension and profit-sharing plans would find themselves in the same position.

It happens that both of our plans include one "owner-employee," as the term is defined in the bill, among the more than 500 employees participating in the employees' retirement plan and the more than 1,500 participating in the profit-sharing retirement plan. For the last plan year the company contribution in respect to that person in each of these plans was only a fraction of 1 percent of its total contribution. In the profit-sharing retirement plan, for example, only $292.31 out of a total company contribution of $499,092.62 was attributable to the "owner-employee," clear proof of how the plan is constructed to avoid favoring "owner-employee."

If we read the proposed law correctly, its enactment would require us to amend our plans in at least the following respects:

1. To provide in the profit-sharing retirement plan immediate vesting for all participants instead of the normal graduated vesting now provided which is common in plans of this type.

2. To reduce the present service requirement for eligibility for all participants from the present 5 years and attainment of age 29½ in the employees' retirement plan and 4 years in the profit-sharing retirement plan to 3 years or less in both plans. Such waiting periods are desirable from the practical administrative viewpoint in plans with broad coverage.

3. To limit installment payments (other than life annuities) at retirement age 65 to a period of not over approximately 5 years. Use of the present flexible installment provision in our profit-sharing retirement plan permits payment of installments over whatever period best suits the individual employee. These provisions are embodied in agreements with labor unions.

These sweeping changes would be patently undesirable in our programs which are long established, bona fide, Treasury approved, broad coverage plans and have been carefully constructed to fulfill desirable objectives both for the company and for the great body of its employees. We cannot see the logic or fairness of applying provisions which should be viewed as safeguards against abuse in a limited number of situations to programs to which by no stretch of the imagination do they properly apply.

Enactment of H.R. 10 in its present form would also put International Milling Co. at a severe disadvantage in respect to its competitors to whom certain of the restrictive provisions would not apply because they have no "owner-employees" in their plans. We feel certain these same disadvantages would exist for other companies in other lines of business whose plans happen to include one or more "owner-employees."

We urge you to vote against H.R. 10 in its present form and until proper study has been given to equitable treatment of bona fide established pension and profit-sharing plans.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. RITZ,
Chairman of the Board.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the letter, in its final paragraph, urges me to vote against H.R. 10 in its present form, and suggests that until proper study has been given to equitable treatment of established pension and profit sharing plans, the Senate should not act on H.R. 10. This letter is from the chairman of the board of a company which has a profit-sharing and pension plan which has been approved by the Treasury. His recommendation is that we not act on H.R. 10 at this time.

RECONSTRUCTION AT LAFAYETTE SQUARE

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, this afternoon the Senate passed upon the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill, which included an appropriation for $6 million for the destruction of certain buildings on the east side of Lafayette Square and the erection there of a Federal court building.

It strikes me it is rather curious that this administration, which is supposed to be conservative, and this Congress, which has some, at least, conservative characteristics, is so ready to destroy buildings which have historic interest and which are significant in the tradition of the United States. The historic Dolly Madison House, Tayloe House and a number of other buildings are to be destroyed by bulldozers and battering rams within the next few months.

The historic interest of these buildings, however, is not the only consideration; what is planned in their place also merits our concern and calls for proceeding slowly. Present plans call for the construction of a huge new court building, housing the United States Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

In their place, it was said at one time, there will be built two courthouses, but we understand now that the proposal is to construct three of them, one for the Court of Claims, one for the Court of Customs, and the other for the Tax Court of the United States.

No one knows what the architectural designs will be. I think most of us feel that the architects who have been employed on Government buildings recently have not constructed buildings which are likely to live in the history of architecture.

I regret that the Committee on Public Works, of which I am a member, approved this construction; and I am hopeful that the other commissions, agencies, and persons who have some power of reviewing our actions may recommend effectively against this construction.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for making these comments for the RECORD tonight in regard to the very unwise course of action which is being followed in respect to Lafayette Square.

I testified before the Public Works Committee in opposition to this great mistake that we are about to make. There are reasons not only of esthetics, and not only of history which argue against it, because, after all, I think this section of Washington, D.C., is really a part of the cradle of American democracy, in this Capital City of the Nation, but I would like to argue a very practical reason against it, namely, that of traffic congestion. I think it is inexcusable that we would concentrate this additional traffic congestion in the Lafayette Square area.

May I say, as a member of the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate, we have a serious problem of traffic congestion already in the city, and there are areas farther out, such as the area behind the Supreme Court Building, and other areas in southeast and southwest Washington, where these buildings could have been constructed.

I am at a loss to understand why, merely for accommodation, as one columnist pointed out, for certain judges who apparently do not like to move very far from their bridge tables and clubs in the center of Washington, we should go to the great expense of building these courthouses in the middle of town.

This is not good city planning, Mr. President. I think it is unfortunate that the Public Works Committee in this instance really has set itself up above the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has chief jurisdiction over the question of District of Columbia planning.

At least, Mr. President, it is too bad we have rules which permit the Public Works Committee to go ahead without the matter being subjected to the veto of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I serve notice now that in the next session of Congress I shall offer some changes in rules which will bring the Public Works Committee under greater control of the Senate of the United States, so that this power it is able to exercise in this instance will be taken away from it in the future.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I suggest it might be worth while if all of us on the Public Works Committee were to read Mr. C. Northcote Parkinson's book, entitled "Parkinson's Law," in which he makes some rather significant comments with regard to public buildings and their implications with respect to the vitality of the institutions which use them.

In discussing an institution "clothed from the outset with convenience and dignity," he remarks:

> The outer door, in bronze and glass—

Which is quite a specific description of the entrance of the New Senate Office Building—> is placed centrally in a symmetrical facade. Polished shoes glide silently over shining rubber to the glittering and silent elevator.

This was the issue the Senator from Illinois was much concerned about—polished rubber tile. This is all in "Parkinson's Law."

Then he talks about the receptions, and so on, and says:

> From behind closed doors will come the subdued noise of an ordered activity.

We had a problem with respect to the louvers in the doors. It seems as though this ordered activity was too noisy for the people in the halls.

> A minute later and you are ankle deep in the director's carpet,

This was objected to by the Senator from Illinois.

Parkinson says that this is supposed to indicate an organization or institution really alive and functioning, but that this is not correct.

> In point of fact you will have discovered nothing of the kind. It is now known that a perfection of planned layout is achieved only by institutions on the point of collapse.

I hope this does not apply to the U.S. Senate. To the extent that Mr. Parkinson's law applies—and it seems to have been proved correct on the record of history—I think we need to be concerned. He says further:

> During a period of exciting discovery or progress there is no time to plan the perfect headquarters. The time for that comes later, when all the important work has been done. Perfection, we know, is finality; and finality is death.

This may be an overstatement, but he does go to the record of history and makes a point with respect the Parliament buildings in London. He had this to say in that regard:

> It represents beyond question a magnificent piece of planning, aptly designed for debate and yet provided with ample space for everything else—for committee meetings, for quiet study, for refreshment, and [on its terrace] for tea.

We have not gone that far yet.

> It has everything a legislator could possibly desire, all incorporated in a building of immense dignity and comfort. It should date—but this we now hardly dare assume—from a period when parliamentary rule was at its height. But once again the dates fail to fit into this pattern. The original House, where Pitt and Fox were matched in oratory, was accidentally destroyed by fire in 1834. It would appear to have been as famed for its inconvenience as for its lofty standard of debate. The present structure was begun in 1840, partly occupied in 1852, but incomplete when its architect died in 1860. It finally assumed its present appearance in about 1868. Now, by what we can no longer regard as coincidence, the decline of Parliament can be traced without much dispute, to the Reform Act of 1867.

That is 1 year before the completion of the building:

> It was in the following year that all initiative in legislation passed from Parliament to be vested in the Cabinet. The prestige attached to the letters "M.P." began sharply to decline and thence forward the most that could be said is that "a role, though a humble one, was left for private members." The great days were over.

Mr. President, I suggest that Members of the Senate and members of the Committee on Public Works give some thought to this matter. We have had a great rash of building on Capitol Hill. It is my opinion that the construction of the New Senate Office Building is a sign of a decline of the Senate. We have more room for public relations people and more room for service to our constituents. In fact, almost every office has become a kind of a separate political headquarters, not simply for those who are running for the Presidency but also for those who are trying to do their jobs. We have two office buildings for the Senate, yet that may not be enough. Perhaps we will need a third or a fourth, to give the proper distinction.

The House of Representatives was to be the branch of the people. It was hoped the House would be representative of the people. It was thought there might be some party discipline and unity.

The House of Representatives has two office buildings now, and is constructing a third. The third will be the largest office building of any representative legislative body in the world.

I have grave doubts as to whether this will make of the House of Representatives what the men who founded this country intended it to be. I refer to men like Madison, who said he expected the House of Representatives to predominate in the government of this country.

I think that what Mr. Parkinson talks about in the case of the British Parliament may be happening to us. We are getting more office space and more employees; yet our effectiveness as legislators and our influence in the country decline in almost that same measure. I say that I think we ought to look into the building program. This may be the way to get back to what we were intended to be at the beginning.

Now we have this proposal for Lafayette Park, which raises another serious question of the particular function of the executive branch of the Government. Lafayette Park was sometimes referred to as the President's park. It may soon have very little connection with the White House, and it may look less and less like a park.

Frederick Gutheim, noted architectural historian, wrote in the Washington Post and Times Herald of June 24, 1960, that the park is in danger of being "engulfed by office buildings," and "the White House itself will be the casualty."

There was a time when the White House stood for more than it does now. We ought to be concerned about the record. We ought to keep some space around the White House, on the assumption that we have a Chief Executive. We ought to keep minor courts out of the front yard of the White House. If this were the Supreme Court, perhaps there should be some relationship, but these are minor courts about which we are talking, rather unimportant courts. These courts could well be built at McLean, Va., with the CIA. They do not have to be in the front yard of the White House.

As I said yesterday, there may come a time when the President may occupy the White House. That time may come soon. I think the least we can do is to wait until after the next election, and let the next President decide what he desires to see when he looks out the door—I think it is the back door, but whichever door it is—to see the view.

Mr. President, I yield back my remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, does any other Senator desire to address the Senate?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from New York.

VIENNA COLD SHOULDERS MR. K.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, Premier Khrushchev is now on a visit to Austria. Vienna, the usually gay and effervescent capital of Austria, is laying down a new set of diplomatic conventions for the welcoming of this unwelcome guest. Khrushchev is being shown, quite politely but with the greatest indifference, exactly how little the Austrian people want to have to do with him.

Only a few of the curious have turned out to stare at the Soviet boss. The only cheers to break an icy silence have come from the tiny Communist minority which won less than 4 percent of the votes in the latest election. But then, this should be nothing new to Khrushchev. He must be used to hearing only the carefully organized and generously subsidized claques of Communists and fellow travelers. The spontaneous applause of a genuine welcome by a free people such as President Eisenhower received on many of his good-will visits, Khrushchev has never heard and never will.

Even more striking than the silent reception in the steets is the fact that Vienna's celebrated new opera house was full of empty seats during the special performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute" put on for the Soviet dictator's benefit. Surely there is no more emphatic way that the music-loving Viennese could have taken to show disdain than to stay away from the opera.

Austria is bound by the terms of its 1955 peace treaty to maintain a position of neutrality in East-West relations. But for 9 years before the treaty was signed, Russian soldiers occupied part of Austria. The Austrians do not forget this. Neither do they forget the nightmare days after the Hungarian revolution in 1956 when their country provided shelter for thousands of refugees escaping from Communist terror. Countries on the other side of the world or peoples far remote from Russian occupation are sometimes won over by glittering Communist promises. Not so the Austrians. They know the truth.

Furthermore, Khrushchev's latest attempt to depict the benefits of a neutral status like that of Austria for other parts of Western Europe seems also to be falling on deaf ears. For the first time since the German Federal Republic was formed 11 years ago, the German Socialists have declared that they see no future in neutralism and no hope for German unity in yielding to Khrushchev's blandishments and leaving NATO.

For the West this is an important gain, overshadowing any so-called propaganda victories that the Communists boast of. Khrushchev's blustering and raving may make the front page of newspapers, but in the long run the silence of the Austrian people and the quiet reversal of the German Socialists' position speak louder than any Communist propaganda machine. They warn, more effectively than words, of the emptiness of Communist promises.

EDUCATION, SOCIAL SECURITY, HEALTH AND WELFARE UNDER REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION BETWEEN 1953 AND 1960

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the distinguished and able senior Senator of Maine [Mrs. SMITH] has written a report on progress, education, social security, health and welfare under this Republican administration, between 1953 and 1960. I believe this important activity has received the attention it deserves. I commend this report to my colleagues and ask unanimous consent that this report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATION'S PROGRESS IN EDUCATION, SOCIAL SECURITY, HEALTH, AND THE GENERAL WELFARE UNDER THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION

(By U.S. Senator MARGARET CHASE SMITH, of Maine)

Soon after he took office, President Eisenhower recommended establishment of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to bring to the highest councils of Government the human problems of the people.

The 83d Congress approved his plan, and the first new Cabinet office in 40 years came into being in April 1953, under the sponsorship of a Republican administration.

In one way or another, the programs developed, recommended, and put into effect by the Republican administration touched the lives of every man, woman and child in America. The goal of all these programs was to conserve and strengthen the Nation's greatest natural resource—its people.

Since the Department was created, dramatic progress has been made in the national effort to achieve better health, better education, and greater economic security.

The administration has supported and obtained legislation to:

1. Strengthen the Nation's educational system.

2. Broaden the coverage and the benefits of the Social Security Act.

3. Expand a rehabilitation program which offers new hope for the disabled.

4. Strengthen our research efforts in science and medicine.

5. Provide more adequate health services and facilities.

6. Provide improved protection to consumers against harmful foods and drugs.

This progress has been made within a policy of fiscal responsibility in the conduct of Government, and under programs designed to encourage greater initiative and enterprise by individuals, private agencies, and local and State governments.

PROGRESS IN HEALTH

In 1954, the first full year of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's operation, expenditures for the Public Health Service totaled $242 million. The President's 1961 budget calls for $825 million—an increase of 241 percent. In the past 7 years:

1. Medical research has been vastly expanded, with particular emphasis on cancer, heart diseases, mental illness, and other major killers and cripplers. Federal assistance to medical research has increased more than fivefold since 1954. Major new research centers have been put to work.

2. Health and medical facilities have been significantly expanded. The Federal-State program to assist in constructing hospital and medical facilities has been broadened to include chronic disease hospitals, nursing homes, rehabilitation facilities and diagnostic and treatment centers. A new grant program has been established to enable medical schools and other institutions to improve and expand their laboratories and research facilities.

3. The supply of manpower skilled in the health sciences has been increased. Training grants and fellowships have been established or expanded for promising research scientists, public health personnel, graduate professional nurses, and practical nurses.

4. Greater emphasis has been placed on the promotion of public health and preventive medicine among the American people. New or greatly strengthened programs have been developed:

(a) Radiological Health: The Public Health Service has greatly expanded its research, training, and consultative activities in the field of radiological health under the Republican administration. It is working toward the development of methods to reduce exposure from radiation sources, and it has intensified its systematic measurements of radiation levels in air, water, and milk.

In March 1958, a new division of Radiological Health was created by the Service to provide technical assistance to State agencies in dealing with medical, industrial, and other activities involving radiation hazards to health.

In August 1959, the President established the Federal Radiation Council to coordinate all governmental radiological activities and to insure policy consideration of the health factors involved in the highest councils of Government. Responsibility for the collation, analysis, and interpretation of data on environmental radiation levels was assigned for the first time to a single agency—the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Council established basic guidelines for radiation protection standards in its first report to the President in May 1960, and is now making detailed studies to assure continued effective protection of the American people against radiation hazards.

(b) Water pollution: In 1956, the Republican administration sponsored legislation which led to passage of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

This act authorized a broader research program, research fellowships, increased assistance to States, grant programs for State water pollution control activities and for construction of municipal sewage treatment works, and a Federal enforcement role in abating interstate pollution. In April 1959, water pollution control activities were elevated to division status in the Public Health Service to reflect the increasing importance of this program. For the first time in history, the President has called a National Conference on Water Pollution, to be held this December, to focus attention on future needs in this critical area.

(c) Air pollution: Legislation in 1955 established a Federal program of research and technical activities to strengthen control of air pollution. The Public Health Service is collaborating with State and local governments, universities, industrial organizations and research institutions in a major effort to acquire new knowledge and develop effective measures for prevention and control of the increasing problem of air pollution. In 1958, the Republican administration sponsored the first National Air Pollution Conference, held under PHS auspices, which provided a nationwide impetus to air pollution control activities.

(d) Health data: The Republican administration recommended and Congress authorized a continuing national survey of health and illness in the United States—the first such program in the world. The survey, begun in 1957, is conducted through actual interviews with householders throughout the Nation about illness in the family, accidents and injuries, disability, hospitalization, and medical and dental care. As comparative data are collected over a period of time, this survey will prove invaluable in planning for facilities and staff to meet health needs.

5. Since the transfer of the Indian health program to the Public Health Service in 1955, dramatic progress has been made in health and medical services to the 385,000 American Indians and Alaskan natives. In 1959, administration-sponsored legislation was enacted providing urgently needed sanitation facilities and services in Indian communities.

6. In addition, legislation has been sought of a Democratic-controlled Congress to make possible further progress in the health field. Major pending proposals sponsored by this administration would:

(a) Establish a broad and balanced program to provide health and medical care for persons over 65 who do not have the resources or the opportunity to obtain adequate protection against the staggering financial burden of long-term and other expensive illness.

(b) Improve the Nation's health and medical facilities and increase the supply of medical manpower by:

(i) amending the hospital and medical facilities construction grant program to provide greater emphasis on hospital modernization, research, and planning for more effective use of medical facilities and services, and construction of special facilities for mental health and for the care of long-term patients.

(ii) authorizing a 5-year program of construction grants for teaching facilities to expand the training capacity of schools of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, and public health.

(iii) authorizing a 5-year program of project grants to strengthen or expand graduate training in schools of public health and other institutions providing graduate training of public health nurses and sanitary engineers.

(iv) authorizing a 5-year program of Federal credit assistance in the construction of group practice facilities.

(v) providing institutional grants for research in the health sciences to permit colleges and universities to pursue basic research on a more stable foundation, and with full Federal payment of the indirect costs of research.

(c) Strengthen the Water Pollution Control Act to provide increased authority to enforce decisions designed to abate pollution of interstate waters.

(d) Strengthen the Air Pollution Control Act to give the Surgeon General the authority to make investigations and hold public hearings on air pollution problems of broad significance.

GREATER FOOD AND DRUG PROTECTION

Expenditures for the Food and Drug Administration in 1954 were $6.2 million. The President's 1961 budget calls for expenditures of $17.8 million—an increase of 187 percent. In the past 7 years:

1. Food and Drug Administration inspection force has been tripled since 1954 in order more effectively to guard the Nation's food and drug supply and remove unsafe products from the marketplace.

2. Basic scientific research programs have been intensified, scientific staffs have been increased, laboratory equipment has been modernized, two new field headquarters have been established, and construction of a new headquarters building with modern laboratories has been authorized.

3. Far-reaching legislation has been sought and obtained to improve the protection of the public against harmful, unclean, or misrepresented foods, drugs, or cosmetics. A landmark in this effort was the Food Additives Amendment of 1958 which required that food additives be shown safe for human consumption before use. This legislation established the principle that the burden of proof must rest squarely on the manufacturer to assure the safety of products prior to their sale to consumers.

4. In addition, legislation has been recommended to provide a scientifically sound basis for approving colors that may be safely used in foods, drugs, and cosmetics, and to establish other safeguards including, where necessary, appropriate tolerance limitations on the amount of the color that may be used.

PROGRESS IN EDUCATION

In 1954, Federal expenditures for the Office of Education were $217 million. The President's 1961 budget calls for expenditures of $442 million—an increase of 104 percent. During the past 7 years:

1. The Office of Education's informational, statistical, and technical consultant services to the Nation's schools and colleges have been greatly improved. In 1954, administration-sponsored legislation established a long-needed program of research of problems in education in cooperation with colleges, universities, and State departments of education.

2. In 1955, the first White House Conference on Education was convened by President Eisenhower to bring about "the most thorough, widespread and concerted study the American people have ever made of their educational problems." The conference provided a detailed examination of elementary and secondary education, including school building needs, organization and financing, educational goals, and public understanding and support.

3. The President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School, composed of distinguished lay leaders and educators, made a thorough study of present and future needs of higher education. The Committee's recommendations, submitted in December 1957, focused national attention on the needs of the colleges and universities in the decade ahead.

4. Early in 1958, the administration sponsored legislation to help overcome deficiencies in the educational system and stimulate the fullest development of the mental resources and technical skills of the Nation's young men and women. The National Defense Education Act of 1958, which substantially embodied the administration's proposals, is already recognized as a landmark in the history of American education.

The act established:

A broad student loan program to enable talented students who need financial help to obtain a higher education, and a fellowship program to help overcome the national shortage of adequately trained college and university teachers.

Grants to the States to strengthen instruction in science, mathematics, and modern foreign languages in the public schools.

Grants to the States to strengthen testing, guidance, and counseling programs in the secondary schools in order that talented students may be more readily identified and encouraged to develop their abilities.

Authorization for modern foreign language centers and institutes to train teachers and increase the numbers of persons skilled in foreign languages.

Grants to States to assist in training individuals for employment as highly skilled technicians.

5. A total of $1.7 billion has been appropriated during this administration for assistance to schools in federally affected areas.

6. In 1956, the Library Services Act established a program of Federal grants to stimulate the extension of public library services to rural areas.

7. A program of grants to the States and to colleges and universities was established in 1958 to encourage expansion of teaching and education programs for the mentally retarded.

8. Through the surplus property utilization program, many schools and colleges throughout the country have acquired additional facilities and enriched their courses of study. Hospitals and research institutions have also benefited from the program, which in the past 7 years has made available over $1 billion worth of real estate and equipment no longer needed by the Federal Government.

9. In addition, legislation has been sought to make possible further progress in the field of education. In each of the last three Congresses, the administration has sponsored legislation to provide Federal assistance to the States in the construction of needed public elementary and secondary school buildings. To help colleges and universities meet anticipated enrollment increases, the administration is sponsoring legislation to establish a Federal program of assistance to institutions of higher education which would provide payments of up to one-third of the cost of constructing needed academic and housing facilities.

PROGRESS IN SOCIAL SECURITY

Since 1953:

1. Coverage under the Social Security Act has been broadened to make 12 million additional people eligible to provide retirement income benefits for themselves and their dependents. Coverage has been extended to include members of the Armed Forces, farmers, and farm operators, lawyers, ministers, and other self-employed people.

2. Social security benefit payments have increased from $2.5 billion in 1952 to an estimated $10.3 billion in 1960. During this period, the number of persons receiving benefits has grown from 5 million to more than 14 million. Benefits provided under the system have been increased in 1954 and again in 1958; the average benefit to a retired worker has risen from $49.25 at the end of 1952 to $73.12 as of February 1960. The amount of money retired men and women have been permitted to earn without loss of benefits has been increased. In 1956, the President signed legislation to provide benefits for disabled persons 50 and over, and in 1958 these benefits were extended to their families.

3. Federally aided programs of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled now provide for some 5.8 million needy people. Federal grants for these programs, totaling over $2 billion a year, have stimulated the States to provide increased payments and more effective social services for needy persons.

4. In 1956, administration-sponsored legislation stimulated significant improvement in medical services to the needy. Payments for medical care have risen from $180 million in 1956 to an estimated $360 million in 1960.

5. In addition, legislation has been sought to make possible further progress in the welfare field. Changes have been recommended to broaden the coverage of the old age, survivors, and disability insurance program, including the removal of the age 50 limitation on the payment of disability insurance benefits. Legislation has also been introduced to establish a broad and balanced program of health and medical care for persons over 65 who do not have the resources or the opportunity to obtain adequate protection against the staggering financial burdens of long-term and other expensive illness.

NEW HOPE FOR THE DISABLED

In 1954, Federal expenditures for vocational rehabilitation totaled $23.6 million. The President's 1961 budget calls for $69.4 million—an increase of 194 percent. In the interim, the administration has sponsored and carried out a broad expansion of the vocational rehabilitation program.

Funds have been provided for the training of doctors, nurses, social workers, and other needed specialists in rehabilitation. Today more than 80,000 handicapped people are now being rehabilitated annually, and a goal of 93,000 rehabilitations has been set for fiscal year 1961.

The new emphasis on restoring the disabled to productive lives combines humanitarian ideals with sound economy. Since the program was expanded in 1954, some 400,000 disabled men and women have been returned to active employment. These include thousands in the professional fields of medicine, education, and engineering, where the Nation urgently requires additional manpower. Others work on farms or in trades. By restoring the ability of these people to earn their own living, their own sense of self-respect and dignity has also been restored. Moreover, many of them have been transformed from individuals dependent on tax revenues into self-reliant taxpayers.

Persons rehabilitated since 1954 have earned more than $1.9 billion and have paid about $150 million in Federal income taxes. About 80,000 of these people had been on public assistance receiving payments at the rate of about $65 million annually. An even larger number would probably have become dependent on public support after exhausting their resources and those of their families if the Federal-State program of vocational rehabilitation had not entered their lives and prevented dependency on public funds.

PROGRESS FOR THE OLDER MEN AND WOMEN OF AMERICA

The Republican administration has given special attention to the needs and opportunities of the Nation's older citizens. The Federal Council on Aging has been reconstituted at Cabinet level to provide overall coordination of executive branch planning and activities on behalf of the aged population. Within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, a Special Staff on Aging has been established and a Center for Aging Research has been created at the National Institutes of Health. For the first time in history, a White House Conference on Aging has been called by President Eisenhower for 1961.

In one way or another, every operating agency of the Department is concerned with the welfare of the 16 million citizens over 65.

PROGRESS FOR THE CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE OF AMERICA

The Republican administration has devoted special attention to the needs and opportunities of the Nation's young people.

Grants have been increased for maternal and child health services, care of crippled and mentally retarded children and child welfare services.

Welfare services have been extended to children in urban as well as rural areas.

A special unit in the Children's Bureau and a special research program at the National Institute of Mental Health have been established to study the problems associated with juvenile delinquency.

In a joint report to Congress in February 1960, the Children's Bureau and NIMH called attention to the need for increased research, field studies, and demonstration projects in the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency. The White House Conference on Children and Youth, in March of 1960, spotlighted ways to improve opportunities for all children in the coming decade.

In addition, improvements have been made in the aid to dependent children program as a part of public assistance to needy persons.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 10 O'CLOCK A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

PERSONAL DIPLOMACY

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, in recent weeks our foreign policy has suffered several disturbing setbacks around the world, from Paris to Tokyo. In searching for explanations, some observers have blamed personal diplomacy for these defeats. I think they are mistaken.

Personal diplomacy, or the visits of heads of states to explore ways of solving the problems arising between their countries, has made and I hope will continue to make invaluable contributions to world peace. As our physical world shrinks and the weapons of mass destruction become even more terrifying, a quick method for easing tensions and searching for new beginnings must be readily available to avoid stumbling into a war that no rational person wants.

That method is personal diplomacy, which can cut diplomatic corners to bring the leaders of the world's greatest nations together for cooling off periods which ease tensions and postpone the nightmare of nuclear war, from which no victor could emerge. All of mankind would be the loser.

Personal diplomacy also can be used to restore the confidence of our allies and encourage the friendship of neutralists who may be suspicious of our intentions. Both American and Russian leaders have used personal diplomacy in an effort to achieve these three goals. The Eisenhower administration has sometimes wisely—and, at other times, unwisely—used personal diplomacy in its efforts to seek a just peace. I cite, as creative examples, the President's visit to India, which did more to clarify American intentions to the people of that vast, underdeveloped country than our millions of dollars in aid, and the visit of Premier Khrushchev to the United States, which in the long run—I am convinced—will make him less dogmatic and more flexible in negotiation. It seems to me that his recent Rumanian speech, in which he sharply dissented from the war-like posture of his Chinese brethren, can be traced partly to the educational value of his visit here.

Unwise examples of the national administration's use of personal diplomacy are Vice President NIXON'S disastrous South American trip, which our intelligence agencies had advised against, and the President's recent canceled trip to Japan, which made us look foolish in the eyes of the world. In both cases, the failure of these ill-advised applications of personal diplomacy can be traced to traveling with only a pleasant countenance covering the obsolescence of our foreign policy.

The success or failure of personal diplomacy ultimately rests on an imaginative, flexible foreign policy rooted in the realities of this changing world. Handshakes and pleasant smiles are not enough. They may temporarily ease tensions, but tempers will rise again unless the heads of states follow up their pleasantries with deeds and negotiations amenable to realistic compromise rather than tailored for soothing press release.

Personal diplomacy, rooted in a realistic foreign policy, offers a tremendous opportunity to reach an accommodation with the Russians in the cold war.

The world changes as we walk in it, as we ride in it, and as we fly in it. Sometimes perhaps the greatest fact of life is the fact of change. It is overlooked.

In the opinion of many Russian scholars, the death of Stalin and the rise of Khrushchev presented the West with a genuine opportunity to reach at least a stabilized plateau in the cold war which would be in our self-interest, and ultimately I believe in the best interests of mankind. Too often in recent years we have reacted to Khrushchev as if he were Stalin, and we continued to follow the policies designed to cope with the world of Stalin rather than the rapidly changing world of the 1960's, which calls for seeking new alternatives to the arms truce, which may lead to world destruction. Time may run out on us—time and distance. The greatest allies of the United States of America are no longer possessed by Americans alone. In World Wars I and II our greatest allies were time and distance. We had time to mobilize our manpower, time to produce our equipment, time to process our foodstuffs, while World War I was fought in a rather localized area of Europe.

Then came an armistice—it was only that—and we were in World War II. Still, although war was to be more flexible, and it was, in a sense, localized, we again had time and distance as our greatest allies—time, I repeat, to mobilize and manufacture and produce, before we were actually to engage ourselves through our Armed Forces against the common enemy.

Tonight, I repeat and reemphasize, time and distance are no longer the greatest allies of the United States.

I would not want to be an alarmist for the sake of being an alarmist alone. I would not want to attempt to use words that might be terrifying. But if we have a world war III, we know that the front lines of such a conflict will be the front yards of the people, not only of the United States, but also of the other nations of the world. In other words, the war is everywhere, not only in its direct impact, but also in its overall consequences.

So I say again that time may run out on us.

The followers of Stalin are still a strong minority in the power elite which rules Russia. If we do not take advantage of the opportunities which were created by the ascendancy of Khrushchev, we may find ourselves facing another Stalin. But a Stalin who, backed by the saber-rattling fanaticism of the Chinese Communists, will be far more dangerous and difficult to cope with in the tomorrows. And then the nuclear nightmare we dread may become a reality.

These are the deeper lessons that we must learn from the collapse of the summit and our increasing troubles in the Far East. American foreign policy, with personal diplomacy as an indispensable tool to help reconcile the peoples of the world, must be redesigned for the decade ahead. We cannot continue to coast on policies patterned for the problems of the 1950's.

I say this in sadness. This has been the distressing failure of the Eisenhower administration, which often has tried to utilize personal diplomacy without a firm foundation of foreign policy rooted in the changing realities of our times.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following additional routine business was transacted.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. EASTLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Ralph W. Gray, of Massachusetts, to be U.S. marshal for the district of Massachusetts.

ADDITIONAL BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK:

S. 3806. A bill to increase the public revenues; to the Committee on Finance.

(See the remarks of Mr. CLARK when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. McNAMARA (for himself, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. CLARK, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. LONG of Hawaii, Mr. McCARTHY, Mr. HART, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. YARBOROUGH, and Mr. ENGLE):

S. 3807. A bill to present a declaration of objectives for senior Americans; provide for the establishment of a U.S. Office of Aging within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to be headed by an Assistant Secretary for Aging; authorize Federal grants to assist in the development and operation of studies and projects to help older persons, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF HELIUM ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. DIRKSEN, on behalf of himself, Mr. COOPER and Mr. MURRAY, submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (H.R. 10548) to amend the Helium Act of September 1, 1937, as amended, for the defense, security, and the general welfare of the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

STRENGTHENING OF WHEAT MARKETING QUOTA AND PRICE SUPPORT PROGRAM—AMENDMENT

Mr. CASE of South Dakota submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 12311) to strengthen the wheat marketing quota and price support program, which was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, July 1, 1960, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 747) to provide for the conveyance of certain lands which are part of the Des Plaines Public Hunting and Refuge Area and the Joliet Arsenal Military Reservation, located in Will County, Ill., to the State of Illinois.

ADJOURNMENT TO 10 O'CLOCK A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, pursuant to the order previously entered, I move that the Senate stand in adjournment until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 46 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Saturday, July 2, 1960, at 10 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 1, 1960:

JUDICIARY

Joseph M. F. Ryan, Jr., of Maryland, to be associate judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, domestic relations branch, for the term of 10 years, vice Godfrey L. Munter, resigned.

Andred A. Caffrey, of Massachusetts, to be U.S. district judge for the district of Massachusetts, vice William T. McCarthy, retired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1960

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Psalm 13: 6: I will sing unto the Lord, because He hath dealt bountifully with me.

Eternal and ever-blessed God, whose divine providence supplies all our needs, grant that in these strange and strenuous days we may appropriate by faith Thy revealing presence and sustaining power.

May the hearts of the citizens of our beloved country expand with pride as they see our leaders and chosen representatives maintaining their integrity in the face of the temptation to make expediency the standard and test of their action rather than truth and righteousness.

Give us courage and hope as we seek to bring about a closer fellowship and better understanding between all the nations. May we recognize our kinship and be conscious of how much we can do to minister to one another's welfare and happiness.

Together we penitently confess our sins and humbly beseech Thy pardoning mercy in the name of our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and a concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 7903. An act to amend chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, to extend the veterans' guaranteed and direct loan program for 2 years; and

H. Con. Res. 706. Concurrent resolution authorizing corrections in the engrossment of the bill H.R. 11602.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5196. An act to increase the maximum rates of per diem allowance for employees of the Government traveling on official business, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 11666. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists on its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. HICKENLOOPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3736. An act creating a commission to be known as the Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials; and

S. Con. Res. 112. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the two Houses from July 2, 1960, to August 8, 1960.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1509. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to provide "grandfather" rights for certain motor carriers and freight forwarders operating in interstate or foreign commerce within Alaska and between Alaska and the other States of the United States, and for certain water carriers operating within Alaska, and for other purposes;

S. 1965. An act to make uniform provisions of law with respect to the terms of office of the members of certain regulatory agencies;

S. 2197. An act to protect the public health by amending the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act so as to authorize the use of suitable color additives in or on foods, drugs, and cosmetics, in accordance with regulations prescribing the conditions (including maximum tolerances) under which such additives may be safely used;

S. 2857. An act to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act so as to provide for refunds of contributions in the case of annuitants whose length of service exceeds the amount necessary to provide the maximum annuity allowable under such act;

S. 3545. An act to amend section 4 of the act of January 21, 1929 (48 U.S.C. 345a(c)), and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 41. Joint resolution to establish a National Institute for International Health and Medical Research, to provide for international cooperation in health research, research training, and research planning, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 7593) entitled "An act to provide that the Civil Aeronautics Board may temporarily authorize certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. ENGLE, and Mr. COTTON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11998) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 26, 28, and 58, of the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 8229) entitled "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. KERR, Mr. FREAR, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, and Mr. CARLSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SALARY INCREASES FOR POSTAL AND OTHER FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is action on the veto message of the President on the bill (H.R. 9883) to adjust the rates of basic compensation of certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Under the Constitution, this vote must be determined by the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 345, nays 69, answered "present" 1, not voting 16, as follows:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Avery

NOT VOTING—16

Alford	Jackson	Steed
Barden	Keogh	Utt
Bentley	Mason	Vinson
Blitch	Minshall	Younger
Bowles	Morris, Okla.
Buckley	Powell

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill was passed, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Clerk announced the following pairs.

On this vote:

Mr. Minshall and Mr. Mason for, with Mr. Jackson against.

Mr. Keogh and Mr. Buckley for, with Mr. Avery against.

Mr. Younger and Mr. Morris of Oklahoma for, with Mr. Bentley against.

Until further notice:

Mr. Alford with Mr. Utt.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, I have a live pair with the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] and with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCKLEY]. If they had been present they would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the House.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained, and did not arrive on the floor of the House until the rollcall on the pay raise veto was concluded. Had I been present, I would have voted to override the President's veto.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, in overriding the President's veto of this pay increase, we have capitulated to the political pressure of lobbyists, in this case representing the postal workers unions. We are guilty of permitting legislative dictation. If one pressure group can do it, so can others. Then, in the aggregate total our representative government will fail. No longer will we have judicious study of legislation, but roughshod political dictation. This course can only result in the disintegration of our form of government and our society of free people. I condemn this pay raise as factually wrong and financially unsound, though politically expedient. Therefore, I voted to uphold the veto. The President's statement contains the facts, including his recommendation that the temporary 2.5 percent raise already in effect be made permanent, and indicating his willingness to go along with a further reasonable hike commensurate with increased living costs. That this bill goes far beyond those reasonable norms is manifest. To the extent that it does, we are simply rewarding one group—well organized Federal employees—at the expense of all other taxpayers. At this time, as much as ever, we legislators need to exercise self-discipline, letting November's votes fall where they may.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, the action of this House to override the veto of the President on H.R. 9883 leads me to state my own convictions on the objective of providing an adequate salary increase for postal workers and maintaining attractive pay levels for all Federal public servants.

No one can dispute these objectives.

I have long recognized the fact that the salaries of postal employees have not kept pace with compensation for comparable work in private employment. I strongly feel that it is our duty to provide adequate salaries for Federal employees.

But at the same time it is evident to me that H.R. 9883 is not the means to achieve the desirable end.

I believe the President's position is strong when he points out that the bill is "manifestly unjust."

He adds:

Were this measure to become law, the already conspicuous unfairness and discrimination in our antiquated Federal pay system would be greatly intensified.

In addition, he cited the fact that—the money cost * * * would impose an annual burden on the American taxpayer of three-quarters of a billion dollars and the money would not be wisely spent.

These are some of the reasons why I supported the President's stand.

Certainly another reason is that Congress itself has appropriated $500,000 for a study of the entire Federal pay structure. The results of this study, available in September, will, presumably, pave the way for a sound system of compensation for Federal employees.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this about the representatives of the postal employees who have contacted me. Whenever I have met with these representatives I have found them to be able and courteous people—sincere in their desire to help those whom they represent.

Mr. Speaker, I believe my record will show that I have consistently supported and worked for the well-being of our Federal employees—especially the postal workers. Therefore, I can wholeheartedly say that I am happy to see the deserving employees receive a salary increase. I only regret that, due to the bill's many failings, I could not in conscience vote to override the President's decision as to the overall impact of the bill.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, after much study of H.R. 9883, the entire bill, not just of the portion dealing with pay raises for postal employees, I am compelled to vote to sustain the President's veto. I do not agree with two major reasons the President gives for his veto, but it seems to me the other reasons against the total bill outweigh the reasons for it, especially since it is not necessary for the Congress to accept the unjustified portions of this bill in order to obtain the salary increase which the evidence has convinced me the postal workers are clearly entitled to.

In a free society there is one sure test of whether a pay scale is proper. Is the number of high-grade persons seeking the jobs increasing or decreasing? If the number is decreasing, the pay scale obviously is too low. That is the case with postal jobs in my city today. The number of superior individuals seeking employment in the postal service is much lower than it has been. This can only mean that, in comparison with other jobs, the pay and other rewards in these jobs are not as attractive as formerly, and not as attractive as they must be to get the kind and quality of employees the post office must have to give our people the good service they want and need.

I do not agree with the suggestion in the veto message that postal salaries should be raised by only the same percentage as the general cost of living has increased since the last pay raise bill. Most other workers in the United States have obtained from private employers wage raises larger than the increase in cost of living. I believe the U.S. Government ought to treat its employees at least as well as private industry—and the Government will have to do so if it is to get its work done well.

Also, I cannot go along with the argument that the postal employees cannot be given a suitable pay raise because the Post Office has such a big deficit. The postal workers are not responsible for that deficit; the Congress is. Not enough Members are willing to vote for higher postal rates to pay for increased costs. When wages and prices in the steel industry go up, the Defense Department does not refuse to pay the higher price required for steel for its ships and missiles. It pays what it has to pay to get what it has to have. The same should be true of the Post Office.

These are the strong reasons for a pay raise for postal employees. What are the reasons against passage of this total bill?

First. The bill does upset differentials in the postal service by granting a higher rate of increase—up to 8.8 percent—to some employees than to others—7.5 percent—performing the same work. This creates inequities within the service itself as well as giving the lowest percentage increase to those who are, as the President stated, the most underpaid in relation to persons doing similar work in private industry.

Second. There is no justification for including in this bill the same 7½ percent pay raise for Federal civil service employees as for postal employees. The Congress itself authorized and appropriated $500,000 for a comprehensive survey to guide it in determining just what adjustments ought to be made. It does not make sense for the Congress to act before it has the benefit of its own study, which is due to be finished by September.

Third. There is no justification for including in this bill a 7½ percent pay raise for salaries of our own congressional employees. No hearings were held or data gathered or even discussion by the committee on this matter.

Fourth. There is no justification for including in this bill a 7½ percent pay raise plus Federal retirement and life insurance benefits, for locally elected county stabilization and conservation committees. These are not Federal employees in any true sense. Doubtless they need and deserve adjustments in the terms of their employment, but again, no hearings were held or evidence presented. How can any one argue for the shot-in-the-dark effort which this bill makes?

Fifth. There is no justification for inclusion in this bill of a 7½ percent salary increase for all the employees in our Foreign Service, a quite separate body most of whose members are living and working under totally different conditions abroad. In fact, this section is the most incredible thing in the bill. Legislation regarding these employees is the responsibility of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee has studied the matter and reported out a bill some time ago to make the salary adjustments which the testimony indicated are needed.

The House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, for no explained reason, and without any hearings or requests for it to do so, and utterly ignoring the recommendations of those who have studied the matter, threw into the omnibus bill now before us a 7½-percent salary raise. Maybe it was thought that by putting everybody in the bill, whether justified or not, more support could be mustered for the one portion of the bill which is has been shown is justified. That is no way for the Congress to legislate.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of these difficult situations in which one wants to vote for the good provisions and against the bad sections. Unfortunately, this is not possible. So the final question becomes, should one swallow so much that does not belong in this bill in order to achieve the part which is good? I do not believe this would be right.

Moreover, it is not necessary. To sustain the veto kills this particular omnibus bill—but it does not remove all possibility of a proper pay raise for postal workers. I have introduced a bill, H.R. 12929, to provide a 7-percent across-the-board salary increase for postal employees along with a commission to develop a better pay system for the entire Federal Government, and to report its recomendations by February 15, 1961.

I chose that 7-percent figure because, as I have told representatives of our Minneapolis postal employees on several occasions, I am certain a bill with that figure will become law. I have been ready to vote for a bill that would provide even a 9-percent increase for the postal workers, because the case has been made for them. It has not been made as yet for the others.

So, on balance, I cannot conscientiously vote for this total bill. It obviously is going to be passed by the House over the veto. If it should fail in the other body, I shall press at once for action on my own bill and am sure the Congress will not finish this session without passing it or a similar bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, in expressing his disapproval of the Federal pay legislation before us—H.R. 9883—has accused postal employees of exerting flagrantly and in concert intensive and unconcealed political pressure on Members of Congress.

Never before in my experience has a veto message contained such intemperate and abusive language. Never before in my experience has a veto message contained such a grotesque perversion of fact.

The implication of the President's message is a gross libel on the integrity and moral stamina of the Congress. I resent the implication, and I feel certain that every thoughtful Member of this body resents it.

What does the President mean by "intensive and unconcealed political pressure"? Postal employees have merely exercised their constitutional right of direct petition. They have come to us for help and support, as they have always come to us when they were in need. They have presented their arguments in a dignified and compelling manner. They have proved to us that this administration has practiced economic discrimination against them. They have—in short—exercised effectively their rights and privileges as American citizens.

Have we come to such a pass in this democracy of ours that the exercise of the undisputed rights of American citizenship can be slandered as exerting "flagrant," "intensive and unconcealed political pressure"?

If any Member of this body is feeling political pressure today—where is that pressure coming from? I suggest it is not coming from the underpaid and economically desperate postal employees who are merely struggling to keep themselves and their families afloat on the rising sea of inflation.

No, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the political pressure is coming from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue—from the large gray building at the corner of 12th Street and the Avenue where a bitter and overly aggressive Postmaster General is quarterbacking this fight to deny postal employees their economic rights. That is where the pressure is coming from, not from the beleaguered and underpaid postal employees.

And are we to yield to such unconscionable pressure? No, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that we shall not do so.

We have heard the arguments, pro and con. We have expressed our wishes by an overwhelming vote in favor of this legislation. We did not cast our votes because of any so-called pressure. We cast our votes because the salary increase is justified, long overdue and desperately needed. We cast our votes in the interest of equity and common decency. And, Mr. Speaker, equity and common decency demand that we rise up and pass this legislation today, the wishes of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to legislation that would grant fair salary increases and other benefits for those employed in Government service. I have always supported legislation I thought was reasonable and fair for Federal workers. In fact, I have legislation pending at the present time for benefits on behalf of our Government workers. It should also be stated that more legislation for higher salaries and benefits was granted during the period that I was chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee than in any similar period in the past 30 years.

This legislation has not received the consideration to which it is entitled. It is inequitable. It is unfair to many of our Government employees. It was put through the House under a high pressure system. It was considered under a petition whereby Members were not even permitted to offer amendments.

We all approved the appropriation last Congress for an expenditure of $500,000 to develop information for a new improved concept for compensation of Federal employees. That study is already in progress and is scheduled to be completed at the end of this year.

I repeat I am in favor of providing equitable treatment for Federal employees as compared with those in private industry. This bill will cost the taxpayers of this country three-quarters of a billion dollars. I just do not believe the people of this country want this legislation in its present form. Neither do I believe they want their money expended unnecessarily as is being done in this bill.

This bill includes 1,600,000 employees in various jobs and in all parts of the world. No consideration is given with respect to length of service or amount of salary they receive at the present time.

Even though you voted against the President, which every Member has a perfect right to do, I think it might be well to give the President's views some consideration with respect to what his employees should be paid.

Let me repeat, I am in favor of fair and equitable treatment to all Government employees. I just do not believe this legislation meets that standard.

MAKING TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1961

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, under a special order of the House I call up House Joint Resolution 778, making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of applicable corporate or other revenues, receipts, and funds, for the several departments, agencies, corporations, and other organizational units of the Government, namely:

SEC. 101. (a) (1) Such amounts as may be necessary for continuing projects or activities (not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution) which were conducted in the fiscal year 1960 and for which appropriations, funds, or other authority would be available in the following appropriation Acts for the fiscal year 1961:

Legislative Branch Appropriation Act;

General Government Matters Appropriation Act;

Independent Offices Appropriation Act;

Department of Defense Appropriation Act;

Departments of Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare Appropriation Act;

Military Construction Appropriation Act;

Mutual Security and Related Agencies Appropriation Act;

Departments of State and Justice, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act;

Public Works Appropriation Act; and the Supplemental Appropriation Act.

(2) Appropriations made by this subsection shall be available to the extent and in the manner which would be provided for by the pertinent appropriation Act.

(3) Whenever the amount which would be made available or the authority which would be granted under an Act listed in this subsection as passed by the House is different from that which would be made available or granted under such Act as passed by the Senate, the pertinent project or activity shall be continued under the lesser amount or the more restrictive authority.

(4) Whenever an Act listed in this subsection has been passed by only one House or where an item is included in only one version of an Act as passed by both Houses, the pertinent project or activity shall be continued under the appropriation, funds, or authority granted by the one House, but at a rate for operations not exceeding the current rate or the rate permitted by the action of the one House, whichever is lower: Provided, That no provision which is included in any appropriation Act enumerated in this subsection but which was not included in the applicable appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1960, and which by its terms is applicable to more than one appropriation, fund, or authority, shall be applicable to any appropriation, fund, or authority provided in this joint resolution unless such provision shall have been included in identical form in such bill as enacted by both the House and the Senate.

(b) Such amount as may be necessary for continuing projects or activities which were conducted in the fiscal year 1960 and listed in this subsection at a rate for operations not in excess of the current rate or the rate provided for in the budget estimate, whichever is lower:

Department of Commerce: Bureau of Public Roads: Forest highways (liquidation of contract authorization).

SEC. 102. Appropriations and funds made available and authority granted pursuant to this joint resolution shall remain available until (a) enactment into law of an appropriation for any project or activity provided for in this joint resolution, or (b) enactment of the applicable appropriation Act by both Houses without any provision for such project or activity, or (c) August 31, 1960, whichever first occurs.

SEC. 103. Appropriations and funds made available and authority granted pursuant to this joint resolution may be used without regard to the time limitations set forth in subsection (d) (2) of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and expenditures therefrom shall be charged to the applicable appropriation, fund, or authorization whenever a bill in which such applicable appropriation, fund, or authorization is contained is enacted into law.

SEC. 104. No appropriation or fund made available or authority granted pursuant to this joint resolution shall be used to initiate or resume any project or activity which was not being conducted during the fiscal year 1960. Appropriations made and authority granted pursuant to this joint resolution shall cover all obligations or expenditures incurred for any project or activity during the period for which funds or authority for such project or activity are available under this joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This is the usual resolution providing for continuation of functions of Government during the fiscal year 1961 beginning today for which the annual supply bills have not been fully processed.

The House has adopted all 18 appropriation bills for the session.

The Senate has passed 15 of the bills.

Congressional action has been completed on 10 bills and conference reports on two more—the independent offices bill and the military construction bill—were filed last night and should be sent to the President by tomorrow.

Three bills are pending in the Senate. They are the public works bill, the mutual security bill, and the supplemental bill.

Two are in conference. Prospects for disposing of them are at the moment uncertain. In any event, we will have to adopt this resolution to provide for such functions as are not finally covered by the regular bills before the impending recess.

The resolution is in the usual stereotyped form adopted without controversy each year under similar circumstances. It does not appropriate beyond the provisions of the regular bills; all expenditures made under the resolution are chargeable to funds finally appropriated in the regular bills.

And following the custom of the past, no provision is made for starting any new project, function or activity. The key word in the resolution is "continue"—to merely continue activities and functions on an interim basis, and then only if proposed to be continued in the regular process as provided in the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we would normally supply at this time for the information of Members a brief résumé of the appropriations and related data but are unable to do so before disposition of pending conference reports. We will insert tentative tabulations and abbreviated data on the matter tomorrow, and a more complete résumé at the conclusion of the session.

Mr. TABER. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move to strke out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, there are 10 bills on which final action has not been taken or are otherwise in such shape that it would not be safe to leave them out of this resolution. This resolution permits the Government to continue its operations, not on any advanced scale but on a scale not greater than last year's figures and not more than the lower figure as they have been passed by both Houses. It is something that we have to do this year and it ought to be done today if the Government is to go on during the recess.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. PELLY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If the House turns down a motion to recess, would this continuing resolution still be advisable?

Mr. TABER. It would have to be, because there would be no way to take care of the payrolls that accrue after the 30th of June.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. PASSMAN. Is the mutual security bill going to be forgotten this year, or do you think it will be called up after we return?

Mr. TABER. They tell me that the prospects are that it will not be called until after we return.

Mr. PASSMAN. It did not turn out to be such an "emergency" after all, did it?

Mr. TABER. The only expenditures that they will be able to make under this resolution will be at the House rate of the House bill or the current rate, whichever is lower.

Mr. PASSMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I am not opposed to this resolution, but I do rise to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] a question. With the adoption of this resolution it will not be necesary, then, to rush conference reports through the House without adequate discussion of what has transpired in the other body with respect to appropriation bills and other matters; is that not correct?

Mr. CANNON. The House has passed all of the bills and the Senate has passed 15. Several bills have gone to conference. We have reported three more today, two of which are the independent offices bill and the military construction bill. But, the remainder, which have not yet been processed, will be continued. The present fiscal situation will be continued exactly as it is, and the money will, when it is finally appropriated, be taken from that part.

Mr. GROSS. With the adoption of this resolution, it will not be necessary to drive conference reports through the House under forced draft.

Mr. CANNON. It will not be necessary to perfect them now before we adjourn.

Mr. GROSS. I am pleased to have that statement, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I wanted to say; this resolution expires August 31 or earlier if the bills are disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think I might add that the House may be interested to know that the prospects indicate that we will this year be under the budget on the total appropriations for the year.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WORK PLANS APPROVED—COMMUNICATION FROM THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JUNE 30, 1960.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act, as amended, the Committee on Public Works has approved the work plans transmitted to you which were referred to this committee:

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES A. BUCKLEY,
Member of Congress, Chairman, Committee on Public Works.

State	Watershed	Executive communication No.	Committee approval
Alabama	Big Prairie and French Creeks	2,239	June 30, 1960
Pennsylvania	Mill Run	2,239	Do.
North Carolina	Town Fork Creek	2,307	Do.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TEAGUE of California. Mr. Speaker, our colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. YOUNGER] is in the hospital in Boston due to an emergency operation. There was an error yesterday in connection with rollcall No. 169, where he was paired "nay" on final passage, instead of "yea." I am told by the Parliamentarian that the permanent RECORD cannot be corrected except by the gentleman from California [Mr. YOUNGER], himself, when he returns. In the meantime, I am making this statement on his behalf as to how he would have voted.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION BILL 1961

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 12231) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman intends to take ample time to explain the bill; is that correct?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2062)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12231) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9 and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$148,407,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$609,501,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1 and 5.

Amendment No. 9—General provisions: Deletes language proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10—General provisions: Changes section number.

HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
CLARENCE CANNON,
CHARLES R. JONAS,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, the conference report provides $994,855,000 for the military construction program. This is $193,145,000 below the budget estimates; $72,372,000 below the Senate bill, and $118,710,000 above the House bill. The specific items added to the House bill are listed in the statement of the managers. The bill includes $70 million for additional facilities for the Titan ballistic missile. This estimate was not considered by the House. The House conferees accepted the Senate increases for the Army Reserve and Army National Guard construction programs as well as those for the Air National Guard.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The figure in the conference report is $118,710,000 above the House bill. Will the gentleman explain where that money is being expended and for what purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There was a series of increases. If the gentleman will check the conference report he will find them listed in detail. If the gentleman insists on going through the entire list, I will be glad to.

Mr. GROSS. No, I do not insist on that, but the increase above the House figure is a substantial amount. I just wondered if the chairman could tell us briefly where this increase is going.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The major item is $70 million for additional facilities in support of the Titan ballistic missile program.

This item was submitted to the Senate by the Department of Defense after House action on the bill.

Mr. JONAS. If the gentleman will yield, I will be glad to give the gentleman from Iowa a copy of the conference report. The items about which he asks are listed there.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I am led to believe from meager available information that the committee of conference, pursuant to the urging of the other body, included an item of $182,000 for a military reserve center at Troy, Ohio. May I ask the gentleman from California if that item was in the bill when it passed the House?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was not in the bill as it passed the House. It is, however, in the conference committee report.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 8, insert the following:

"MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

"For construction as authorized by title IV of the Act of June 8, 1960 (Public Law 86-500), to remain available until expended, not to exceed $20,000,000, to be derived by transfer from funds available to the Office of the Secretary of Defense for advanced research projects."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 5: Page 2, line 6, insert the following: Provided, That the words "solar furnace" under this head in the Military Construction Appropriation Act, 1959, are amended to read "solar facilities."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 11776) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2063)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11776) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 7, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 45, 49, 54, 62, 74, and 75.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 21, 40, 41, 43, 48, 51, 57, 58, 60, 68, 69, 70, and 76, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$19,405,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$373,064,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13½: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13½, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure proposed by said amendment insert "six"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$163,250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$7,507,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11776) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

TITLE I

Executive Office of the President

Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization

Amendment No. 1: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 2: Appropriates $24,700,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the House instead of $25,200,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 3: Deletes limitation language relating to the Interdepartmental Radio Advisory Committee as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 4: Provides for the employment of 2 consultants instead of one as proposed by the House and four as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment Nos. 5 and 6: Appropriate $16,000,000 for the Federal contribution program instead of $10,000,000 as proposed by the House and $22,000,000 as proposed by the Senate; and provide that $6,000,000 shall not become available until January 1, 1961, for matching grants for personnel and administrative expenses of State and local civil defense organizations as authorized by section 205 of Public Law 85-606, instead of prohibiting funds for such purpose as proposed by the House and providing $12,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 7: Deletes language proposed by the Senate relating to ratification of certain past expenditures under this appropriation head.

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $9,175,000 for emergency supplies and equipment instead of $6,950,000 as proposed by the House and $11,400,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Independent offices

Civil Aeronautics Board

Amendment No. 9: Appropriates $7,392,500 for salaries and expenses instead of $7,285,000 as proposed by the House and $7,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10: Appropriates $65,000,000 for payments to air carriers instead of $60,000,000 as proposed by the House and $68,984,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees agree with the statement contained in the Senate report relating to the need to reverse the trend of increased subsidy payments to air carriers. The Board should examine carefully and critically some of the administrative costs and allowances that make up expenses of the carriers. The amount of profit allowed the carriers by the Board is apparently being increased above the present 8 percent level. Careful consideration should be given to the granting of any increase, as other Government agencies allow only a 6 percent rate of return.

Civil Service Commission

Amendment No. 11: Appropriates $19,405,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $19,230,000 as proposed by the House and $19,580,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 12: Reported in disagreement.

Federal Aviation Agency

Amendment No. 13: Appropriates $373,064,000 for operating expenses instead of $365,245,000 as proposed by the House and $380,883,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 13½: Authorizes the purchase of six aircraft instead of five as proposed by the House and seven as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 14: Appropriates $163,250,000 for the establishment of air navigation facilities instead of $152,500,000 as proposed by the House and $174,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Federal Communications Commission

Amendment No. 15: Inserts travel limitation as proposed by the Senate and authorizes $165,000 instead of $172,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 16: Appropriates $13,085,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $12,935,000 as proposed by the House and $13,135,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Federal Power Commission

Amendment No. 17: Appropriates $7,663,500 for salaries and expenses instead of $7,532,000 as proposed by the House and $7,795,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 18: Reported in disagreement.

Federal Trade Commission

Amendment No. 19: Appropriates $7,507,500 for salaries and expenses instead of $7,415,000 as proposed by the House and $7,600,000 as proposed by the Senate. Special attention should be given to textile-labeling activities until the program gets organized.

General Services Administration

Amendment No. 20: Appropriates $165,075,000 for operating expenses of the Public Buildings Service instead of $160,850,000 as proposed by the House and $169,300,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 21: Inserts technical language as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $165,441,000 for construction of public buildings projects instead of $144,836,000 as proposed by the House and $171,980,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 23: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 24: Authorizes $633,250 for the project at Camden, Arkansas, as proposed by the House instead of $655,050 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 25: Authorizes $37,286,100 for the project at San Francisco, California, as proposed by the House instead of $38,296,900 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 26: Authorizes $7,636,400 for the project at Hartford, Connecticut, as proposed by the House instead of $7,816,400 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 27: Authorizes $1,094,000 for the project at Thomasville, Georgia, as proposed by the House instead of $1,119,600 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 28: Authorizes $284,750 for the project at Van Buren, Maine, as proposed by the House instead of $297,550 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 29: Authorizes $254,150 for the project at Vanceboro, Maine, as proposed by the House instead of $261,150 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 30: Authorizes $874,650 for the project at Detroit, Michigan, as proposed by the House instead of $895,050 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 31: Authorizes $586,500 for the project at Sweetgrass, Montana, as proposed by the House instead of $615,600 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 32: Authorizes $3,224,050 for the project at Bismarck, North Dakota, as proposed by the House instead of $3,283,050 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 33: Authorizes $3,867,700 for the project at Toledo, Ohio, as proposed by the House instead of $3,980,700 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 34: Authorizes $9,587,150 for the project at Memphis, Tennessee, as proposed by the House instead of $10,167,150 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 35: Authorizes $282,200 for the project at Dayton, Washington, as proposed by the House instead of $288,700 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 36: Inserts Senate language and authorizes $15,105,000 for Federal Office Building Numbered Eight in the District of Columbia instead of $15,794,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 37: Inserts Senate language and authorizes $20,031,100 for Federal Office Building Numbered Nine in the District of Columbia instead of $21,222,100 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 38: Inserts Senate language and authorizes $38,326,500 for Federal Office Building Numbered Ten in the District of Columbia instead of $40,803,500 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 39: Inserts Senate language and authorizes $6,375,000 for the United States Court of Claims and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals building in the District of Columbia instead of $6,491,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 40: Authorizes the limits of costs for a project to be exceeded by not to exceed 10 per centum as proposed by the Senate instead of 5 per centum as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 41: Inserts Senate language in this paragraph, instead of under sites and expenses as proposed by the House, authorizing $5,500,000 for the project at Chicago, Illinois.

Amendment No. 42: Appropriates $21,000,000 for sites and expenses for public buildings projects instead of $25,000,000 as proposed by the House and $19,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 43: Deletes House language as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 44: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 45: Deletes item proposed by the Senate for $3,800,000 for the construction of relocation facilities.

Amendment No. 46: Appropriates $3,978,000 for operating expenses of the Federal Supply Service instead of $3,716,500 as proposed by the House and $4,240,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 47: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 48: Deletes language requiring certain miscellaneous reimbursements to be promptly deposited into the Treasury as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 49: Deletes Senate language for an appropriation of $100,000 for the working capital fund.

Amendment No. 50: Authorizes $13,150,000 for the administrative operations fund instead of $13,000,000 as proposed by the House and $13,300,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 51: Strikes out language relating to extension and conversion projects as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 52: Reported in disagreement. The language proposed by the Senate relative to allowing local governmental units a reasonable period of time in which to perfect a comprehensive and coordinated plan of use and procurement for surplus real estate and buildings is not a direction for the General Services Administration to take just any price for such properties.

Housing and Home Finance Agency

Amendment No. 53: Appropriates $20,000,000 for housing for the elderly instead of $5,000,000 as proposed by the House and $50,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 54: Deletes Senate language earmarking $150,000 for housing for the benefit of elderly persons who are members of an Indian tribe.

Interstate Commerce Commission

Amendment No. 55: Appropriates $20,138,500 for salaries and expenses instead of $19,777,000 as proposed by the House and $20,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration

Amendment No. 56: Authorizes $5,375,000 for expenses for travel instead of $4,900,000 as proposed by the House and $5,849,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 57: Approximates $170,760,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $166,500,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 58: Authorizes the purchase of sixty passenger motor vehicles as proposed by the Senate instead of forty-five as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 59: Appropriates $621,453,000 for research and development instead of $602,240,000 as proposed by the House and $671,453,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 60: Appropriates $122,787,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $107,275,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 61: Inserts Senate language and authorizes $10,000 for scientific consultations and any emergency or extraordinary expense instead of $20,000 as proposed by the Senate.

National Capital Housing Authority

Amendment No. 62: Restores House language providing an appropriation of $40,000 for operation and maintenance of properties.

National Science Foundation

Amendment No. 63: Appropriates $175,800,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $160,000,000 as proposed by the House and $191,600,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Securities and Exchange Commission

Amendment No. 64: Appropriates $8,912,500 for salaries and expenses instead of $8,525,000 as proposed by the House and $9,300,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 72: Authorizes $503,500 for administrative expenses for public facility loans instead of $477,000 as proposed by the House and $530,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 73: Authorizes $8,550,000 for administrative expenses of the Federal Housing Administration instead of $8,450,000 as proposed by the House and $8,650,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 74: Restores House language authorizing $50,000,000 for nonadministrative expenses of the Federal Housing Administration instead of language proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 75: Deletes language proposed by the Senate to authorize nonadministrative expenses for the Federal Housing Administration up to 15 per centum in excess of the amount specified in the bill on a contingent basis.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 76: Deletes House language as proposed by the Senate requiring that committees of expert examiners and boards of civil service examiners be included within the limitation on employees engaged in personnel work.

ALBERT THOMAS,
SIDNEY R. YATES,
CLARENCE CANNON,
HAROLD C. OSTERTAG,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman if he will explain the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I will do my best.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I will attempt briefly to explain the conference report. May I say I hope it meets with the approval of the House. I doubt if there are very many items that will give us too much concern.

The budget estimate was for 22 independent offices, and in round figures it was $8,400 million. We cut the budget about $235 million. When it came to the other body, the other body added about $275 million over and above the budget estimate. Then we went to conference, and there are 77 items in disagreement; 70 of them are in the conference report. We bring only seven items in technical disagreement. In fact, there are really no items in disagreement.

I will state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] that we have completed our conference, and we compromised and reduced the figure of the other body by about 55 percent.

If there are no further questions on the conference report——

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. I want to commend my chairman, the gentleman from Texas, on doing an excellent job, as he always does. I notice the position of the House has been receded in about 20 different instances. I am principally concerned at this time about the public buildings program. Funds for some five or six additional new buildings in the District of Columbia are being provided. It appears to many that the District is already saturated with Federal public buildings under construction. I wonder if we might be able to reduce some of the expenditures for public buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the distinguished gentleman who serves on this subcommittee and knows about as much about this bill as I do or anybody else—he is a hardworking Member—we had three of these buildings in our bill when it left the House. At that time they were subject to a point of order. They had to be approved, not by the House of Representatives or the other body but by the appropriate legislative committee of the House and the appropriate legislative committee of the Senate, and there was a little disagreement between the two committees. Now they have all agreed, and there are four of these buildings in here at a total cost of in the neighborhood of $79 million.

There is no question about it; it is a lot of money. Your committee, as you will recall, reduced construction costs on these projects by 15 percent, and on one building it was reduced from $23 million to $15 million.

I join my friend in the thought that this building program in the District of Columbia has been sufficiently saturated to last a few years.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. EVINS. I notice the conference report states that the funds for this building program have been increased from $144 million to $165 million, and in addition there is a provision which allows an overrun of 10 percent instead of 5 percent as recommended by the House. Will this provision permit contractors to expend 10 percent more money than the estimated cost?

Mr. THOMAS. No; it is not an overrun. You recall we put in 5 percent within the sum of money appropriated. We gave our distinguished friend Mr. Floete, whom we all admire and who is one of the finest administrators in the entire Government service. We allowed him certain latitude. If he can reduce a project below the figure we have allowed, and should need a little more for another project up to 10 percent, that is all right. But he always has to remain within the sum apropriated.

Mr. EVINS. I commend my friend and am glad to have his explanation.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. I would like to say to the chairman of the Independent Offices Subcommittee that there is one item with which I am concerned and with which I think the membership of the House ought to be concerned, and that is the creation of a new division within the Federal Communications Commission established primarily for the purpose of monitoring TV performances. When the FCC appeared before the Independent Offices Subcommittee there was no testimony with reference to this item. There was no request by the FCC for additional employees to monitor the entire TV area. When the FCC Chairman and his staff came before the Senate Committee on Independent Offices they requested the creation of 25 additional jobs and the appropriation of an additional $300,000 for the purpose of monitoring TV programs.

I think the setting up of a monitoring unit is a dangerous precedent to establish. I do not think that any governmental bureaucratic monitoring unit is going to improve television in any respect. It will not improve the scripts, and it will not make better shows. In my judgment I think the public itself is best able to judge precisely what it wants; I do not think the Federal Government ought to go into the field of telling people precisely what they ought to have.

Frankly, I think it is inspired by the fact that the FCC is concerned over the criticism it has received in the past couple of years and now they are tumbling over each other before the country and the Congress to show they are now doing something.

I think it is bad practice. I hope that the FCC will be careful to guard against any form of censorship; when this new section is set up.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on the omnibus rivers and harbors authorization bill. I am very grateful to the House conferees for accepting the Senate committee's inclusion of flood control proposals for the Chicopee River Basin and the Westfield River watershed. These projects will be of vital importance to my congressional district, which has suffered terrific losses in the past from the floods on the Connecticut, Chicopee, and Westfield Rivers.

Earlier this year I had introduced a bill, H.R. 11470, to provide for flood control measures in the Chicopee River Basin, based upon the recommendations of the Army Corps of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. The omnibus authorization bill had already passed the House, last year as a matter of fact, and was pending in the Senate Public Works Committee when the Army Engineers made the recommendations. I testified in behalf of my bill when the Senate committee held its public hearings, and asked that these projects be included. The Senators were kind enough to accede to my request.

Mr. Speaker, my bill calls for the construction of a dam and reservoir on Conant Brook, 2 miles southeast of Monson, Mass., at an estimated cost of $2,060,000; construction of local protective works on the Chicopee River at Chicopee Falls, Mass., at an estimated cost of $1,860,000; and construction of local protective works on the Chicopee, Ware, and Quaboag Rivers in Palmer, Mass., at an estimated cost of $1,260,000. Again, I want to thank members of the House-Senate conference for including these projects in the omnibus authorization bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, our very able and genial colleague from Massachusetts always makes a good statement and certainly he has just made one. We discussed this matter before we went to conference. I may say that I was almost of the same opinion that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] was. We talked with gentlemen in the other body and they assured us—if you will get their report and read it you will understand—and they came out and said flatly not one penny of this money will be spent for censorship. There is not a cent in here for censorship. I see the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS], of much fame, sitting here. I understand he is interested in this matter. His committee also urged that we adopt or go along to some degree with the Senate in this matter.

I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts to a large extent that it should not be permanent because if it is permanently necessary our beloved chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] ought to write some more legislation. This is not a new precedent by any means. The Federal Trade Commission has been monitoring a few programs around the clock for 18 months or 2 years. This is simply eyes and ears to see what is going on, to see if this law that these gentlemen are trying to pass is correct. I will join the gentleman that we will not let them go wild.

Mr. BOLAND. There is nothing more permanent than temporary employees in the Government service.

Mr. THOMAS. And the gentleman is helping all the time to reduce agencies.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. I would like to know what is going on.

The SPEAKER. I think the gentlemen who are explaining the bill should take the well of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the other body would have done with this particular request if a request by some agency to establish a similar compliance division for newspapers had been suggested?

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, as the gentleman knows, they have no jurisdiction over newspapers.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. AVERY. I want to comment on the same item in the report as did the gentleman from Massachusetts. I cannot agree that the precedent of monitoring commercials by the Federal Trade Commission is any justification for commencing a new precedent of monitoring TV programs content. The FTC is not concerned with programs; they are concerned with commercials only. You can say the monitoring is not censorship, but I do not think anybody can argue persuasively there is a distinct difference between monitoring and censorship. Monitoring is only the first step.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us go on with this conference report. We cannot seriously disagree with the gentleman's point of view, and we are not. I will give you my word, and to the gentleman from Massachusetts as well, we are not going to let them run hog wild on this program. It looks to me like it should be reduced a little bit in 1 or 2 years. Your point of view and ours is not too far apart.

Mr. AVERY. There is no hearing record on the part of the House that would substantiate this request; is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS. I listened to the very able debate by the gentleman's distinguished committee. There was plenty of argument on both sides. I thought maybe we were holding the hand of your distinguished committee and backing you up a little.

Mr. AVERY. The gentleman does not want to leave the inference that our distinguished chairman had suggested this item should be agreed to on the part of the House conferees?

Mr. THOMAS. I see your distinguished chairman in the front row, and I will let him speak for himself.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. One of the purposes of this appropriation is to provide a check on performance of programs which they promised. Legislation permits of a certain type of program, and the employees of FCC will check to see that the law is complied with. I see nothing wrong with that, in view of the fact that there has been so much evidence of payola, rigging of quiz programs, and other unwholesome practices in broadcasting that have been going on, and I personally support the appropriation for the checking and correction of these practices. I hope that the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman for his great contribution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman if those two buildings that were taken out of the appropriation bill on the point of order——

Mr. THOMAS. By the Gross point of order; yes, sir.

Mr. GROSS. Well, that is a pretty good point of order, I will say.

Mr. THOMAS. No argument on that point.

Mr. GROSS. Are they provided for in this bill; the buildings?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; they are.

Mr. GROSS. Well, let me ask the gentleman if the amendment on page 16 of the bill still prevails.

Mr. THOMAS. They are provided for in this bill; the four of them.

Mr. GROSS. Well, are they in there under this language: "subject to the provision of any such approval adopted by the Committee on Public Works."

Mr. THOMAS. That approval has been granted, and we will give you the dates of the two bodies, the other body and our own body. The language is in the bill, and it was put in by the other body, and, as a matter of ultraprecaution, we did not strike it out.

Mr. GROSS. So the authorizing language has gone through?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. On this monitoring provision, has the gentleman consulted the gentleman from California [Mr. Moss]? I am asking in good faith.

Mr. THOMAS. No; we have not.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. For more than 4 years he has been chairman of the subcommittee asking the departments for information. Just a couple of weeks ago, we put through a bill which enabled the Commissioner to monitor information which we should have as to a certain project. What is going to be the effect now if you get this in? Are the findings of the Moss committee, which are valuable, to be disregarded?

Mr. THOMAS. May I say to our beloved friend, it was my understanding that the gentleman from California [Mr. Moss] was more or less concerned with the agencies' witholding information in the form of printed releases.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Is that true with the newspapers? They were the ones that were pushing that issue. Here, if I get it right, you want the right, or this Commission, to have the authority of monitoring; is that right? Does that mean suppressing?

Mr. THOMAS. Of course it does not.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What does it mean?

Mr. THOMAS. It means you are giving them a little money to listen to the programs, and when they listen to them, that is all the authority they have, to be honest about it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If that is all there is to the legislation why pay anyone to listen?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield, since my name has been brought into this?

Mr. THOMAS. I will be delighted to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concern of some people about providing additional employees, but the Federal Communications Act itself specifically prohibits censorship. You might call this compliance or monitoring or whatever you want to, but the fact remains that the Federal Trade Commission would tell us that in matters of this kind they have no jurisdiction; it is the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission. The Federal Communications Commission would say "We do not have any agency personnel set up for this kind of program." Now, are we going to proceed with this kind of a procedure where no one has anything to say whether or not these matters of deceptive practices, and so forth, are to be looked into? That is all this does, and I think it should be approved.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Is it not a fact that the very thing that is being questioned here today has been done ever since the act was put on the statute books?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, of course. The act specifically says there will be no censorship.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OSTERTAG].

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees I should like to say that I believe we brought back a good and reasonable report. It is a sound compromise with the Senate on this important appropriation bill which covers funds of many independent agencies. I think it is important for us to bear in mind that this bill in its entirety as it was submitted by the budget amounted to $8,417 million. The Senate increased it over the budget, but in resolving the differences of all these independent agencies, this conference report comes back to you $151 million less than the Senate appropriation bill as passed by the other body. It is $125 million over the bill as passed by the House. In this difference or increase over the original bill, you will find the restoration of funds for certain public buildings which have since been authorized. I think we have arrived at a sound and sane solution of all these items. I am pleased with the agreements reached with the conferees of the other body, and recommend the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, can he tell me what is the total overall increase over the House bill in the appropriation for NASA?

Mr. THOMAS. Thirty-nine million dollars.

Mr. OSTERTAG. The amount as it comes back to us in this conference report is exactly the same as submitted by the budget. That is approximately $39 million over the House Bill as we passed it.

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Some amount was restored for salaries; is not that correct?

Mr. OSTERTAG. It was restored to the budget level. This is an increase of over $4 million for this purpose, and I might add that funds have been restored for research and construction to the budget level. This totals about $39 million.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. YATES. As a matter of fact, I had a conference with the head of the Space Agency yesterday and he said that he thought the amount was satisfactory for his purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HERLONG].

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, for the second time in this graduation season the press last Wednesday night reported a disgraceful incident which reflects, not on the great organization concerned, but on the training which some of our youth is receiving.

I refer to the action of a high school honor graduate about 2 weeks ago in refusing to accept the American Legion's good citizenship award because, he said, he could not respect its policies; and to the account of the exhibition of boorish conduct which on Wednesday greeted a similar award to a young man who is said to have an appointment to the U.S. Naval Academy.

What are these policies of the American Legion which some of our brightest youth proclaim that they cannot respect?

To uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States of America.

To maintain law and order.

To foster and perpetuate a 100-percent Americanism.

To inculcate a sense of individual obligation to the community, State, and Nation.

To combat the autocracy of both the classes and the masses.

To make right the master of might.

To promote peace and good will on earth.

To safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom, and democracy.

I state as a general principle that any American should subscribe wholeheartedly and enthusiastically to those policies which I have just quoted. God help our country if the preservation of our way of life is ever entrusted to and depends on those who proclaim their disrespect for our country and for its Constitution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I want to join with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVINS] in objecting to the program of spending millions upon millions of dollars for more buildings in the District of Columbia. I regret very much that the committee saw fit to put millions for that purpose in this bill after it was stricken when the bill was originally before the House.

Mr. THOMAS. We will try to hold it down in the future.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 12, insert the following: "not to exceed $6,000 for emergency and extraordinary expenses to be expended under the direction of the Director for such purposes as he deems proper, and his determination thereon shall be final and conclusive; and not to exceed $900,000 for expenses of travel;".

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named therein insert $2,500.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12: Page 6, line 22, insert the following: "and the Act of August 28, 1938 (49 Stat. 956), as amended by the Act of August 27, 1951 (65 Stat. 198), is hereby repealed."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 18: Page 13, line 23, insert the following: "Provided, That the Commission is authorized, subject to the procedures prescribed in the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, but without regard to the numerical limitations contained therein, to place six General Schedule positions in the following grades: four in Grade GS–18, one in grade GS–17, and one in grade GS–16; and such positions shall be in addition to positions previously allocated to this agency under section 505 of said Act."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 23: Page 16, line 18, insert the following: "subject to approval of any such project by resolutions adopted by the Committee on Public Works of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively,".

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 44: Page 19, line 9, insert the following:

"CONSTRUCTION, FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING NUMBERED 7, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The appropriation contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1959, under the head 'Construction, United States Court of Claims and Federal Office Building, Washington, District of Columbia' is hereby made available for expenses necessary for the preparation of plans and specifications for a building in Washington, District of Columbia, for use of agencies of the executive branch of the Government without provision of space for the United States Court of Claims."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 47: Page 22, line 14, insert the following: Provided further, That during the current fiscal year, there shall be no limitation on the value of surplus strategic and critical materials which, in accordance with section 6(a) of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98e(a)), may be transferred to stockpiles established in accordance with said Act: Provided further,".

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: After the word "transferred" insert "without reimbursement".

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 52: Page 26, line 9, insert the following: "In disposing of surplus real estate and buildings a reasonable period of time shall be allowed for local governmental units to perfect a comprehensive and coordinated plan of use and procurement."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD CONTROL ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 7634), authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALTER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2064)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7634) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7634) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

NAVIGATION PROJECTS

The following Senate amendments added to the House-passed bill the following navigation projects. In every instance these projects were reported by the Corps of Engineers, cleared through the various executive agencies, and transmitted to Congress since the House acted upon the bill last year. The detailed report on each of these projects can be found in Senate Report numbered 1524 of this Congress. The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments: 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33.

The navigation projects covered by these amendments are the following:

(1) Eastport Harbor, Maine: Senate Document Numbered 98, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $595,000.

(2) York Harbor, Maine: House Document Numbered 395, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $391,000.

(3) Pepperell Cove, Maine: House Document Numbered 284, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $170,000.

(5) Little Narragansett Bay and Watch Hill Cove, Rhode Island and Connecticut: House Document Numbered 396, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $98,000.

(6) Mamaroneck Harbor (East Basin), New York: House Document Numbered 209, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $105,000.

(7) Wilmington Harbor, Delaware: Senate Document Numbered 88, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $351,000.

(8) Ocracoke Inlet, North Carolina: House Document Numbered 408, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $4,623,000.

(10) Palm Beach Harbor, Lake Worth Inlet, Florida: House Document Numbered 283, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $4,980,000.

(11) Little Pass, Clearwater Bay, Florida: House Document Numbered 293, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $104,000.

(12) St. Marks River, Florida: House Document Numbered 224, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,711,000.

(13) Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Alabama, at Jackson lock and dam: House Document Numbered 50, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $120,000.

(14) Pascagoula Harbor, Mississippi: House Document Numbered 98, Eighty-sixth Congress, maintenance.

(16) Biloxi Harbor, Mississippi: House Document Numbered 271, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $326,000.

(25) Milwaukee Harbor, Wisconsin: House Document Numbered 285, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $38,000.

(26) Manistee Harbor, Michigan: House Document Numbered 358, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,735,000.

(27) Detroit River, Trenton Channel, Michigan: House Document Numbered 319, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $8,570,000.

(28) Fairport Harbor, Ohio: House Document Numbered 347, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $2,768,000.

(29) Rochester Harbor, New York: House Document Numbered 409, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $2,445,000.

(30) Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors (West Basin), California: House Document Numbered 401, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,768,000.

(31) Monterey Harbor (Monterey Bay), California: House Document Numbered 219, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $3,989,000.

(32) Noyo River and Harbor, California: House Document Numbered 289, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $370,000.

(33) Snohomish River (Everett Harbor), Washington: House Document Numbered 348, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $3,011,000.

Amendment No. 4: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 9: This is a technical amendment only and its substance is repeated in Senate amendment numbered 14. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 15: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to cause an immediate study to be made of Pascagoula Harbor to determine whether further modification of the project is justified, and if modification is found to be justified by the Secretary of the Army, is approved by the President, and not disapproved by Congress within 60 days after submission of a report to Congress (such 60 days to run only when Congress is in session) then the project will be authorized.

Amendment No. 17: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 18: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 19: This amendment would strike out the navigation project on the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway, channel to Port Mansfield, Texas. This project is stricken because it has been authorized by separate legislation, Public Law 86–248. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 20: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 21: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 22: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 23: This amendment would authorize the Chief of Engineers to relocate the Illinois Central Railroad to the extent required by the construction of the Barkley Dam project in Kentucky so as to eliminate and prevent interference with and disturbance of municipal and private facilities in Lyon County, Kentucky, not otherwise affected by the construction of the project, substantially in accordance with alinement "D" shown on certain plans on file with the Chief of Engineers. The House recedes.

BEACH EROSION CONTROL

The following Senate amendments added to the House-passed bill the following beach erosion projects. In every instance these projects were reported by the Corps of Engineers, cleared through the various executive agencies, and transmitted to Congress since the House acted upon the bill last year. The detailed report on each of these projects can be found in Senate Report numbered 1524 of this Congress. The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments: 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, and 41.

The beach erosion projects covered by these amendments are the following:

(35) Wessagussett Beach, Weymouth, Massachusetts: House Document Numbered 334, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $132,000.

(36) Pemberton Point to Cape Cod Canal, Massachusetts: House Document Numbered 272, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $139,300.

(37) Cape Cod Canal to Provincetown, Massachusetts: House Document Numbered 404, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $178,000.

(39) New Jersey Coast from Barnegat Inlet to Cape May Canal, New Jersey: House Document Numbered 208, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,714,000.

(40) Presque Isle Peninsula, Erie, Pennsylvania: House Document Numbered 397, Eighty-sixth Congress, periodic nourishment.

(41) Orange County, Newport Bay to San Mateo Creek, California: House Document Numbered 398, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $256,000.

Amendment No. 34: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to cause an immediate study to be made of Hilo Harbor, Hawaii, to determine whether a project for tidal wave protection is justified, and if found to be justified by the Secretary of the Army, is approved by the President, and not disapproved by Congress within 60 days after submission of a report to Congress (such 60 days to run only when Congress is in session) then the project will be authorized.

Amendment No. 38: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 42: Senate amendment No. 42 would add a new section 103 to the bill which amends the last paragraph of section 2 of the River and Harbor Act of July 13, 1930.

The purpose of section 103 is to delete from section 2 of the 1930 act the requirements that civilian members of the Board be selected from among the State agencies cooperating with the Department of the Army and that their salaries be paid by their respective States. In lieu thereof, the proposed amendment provides that the civilian members of the Board shall be selected by the Chief of Engineers with regard to their special fitness in the field of beach erosion and shore protection. It is further provided that such civilian members shall be paid not in excess of $100 per day for each day of attendance at Board meetings, not to exceed 30 days per annum, in addition to their traveling and other necessary expenses, which sums are to be paid by the Department of the Army.

In addition to attendance at Board meetings, members devote considerable time and effort in preparing for the meetings due to the increasing number, size, and complexity of projects being considered. Accordingly, the compensation of civilian members of the Board for attendance at Board meetings, which is provided for by this section, is considered to be just and reasonable.

In addition to the foregoing, changes in the 1930 act, this amendment also includes some desirable editorial changes.

The amendment agreed to by the committee of conference to Senate amendment No. 42, striking out the language "preferably from among the State agencies cooperating with the Department of the Army", is to make the language of the section more consistent with the basic purpose of the amendment and remove any implication of possible conflict of interest on the part of a member of the Board.

Amendment No. 43: This amendment adds a new section 104 to the bill.

The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of the Army to donate and convey by quitclaim deed to the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in 6,175.21 acres of land acquired by condemnation proceedings in Putnam and Marion Counties, Fla., during the period 1930–35 to be used as right-of-way for the Atlantic-gulf ship canal project.

During the period 1930–35 the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida acquired 12,980 acres of land in its own name and at its own expense for conveyance to the United States for use in connection with the proposed Atlantic-gulf ship canal, authorized by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. The authorization required local interests to provide land required for the project purposes. However, the ship canal authority did not have the power of eminent domain and requested the United States to institute condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of those lands required for the project but which could not be acquired by direct purchase. In the condemnation proceedings the United States acquired title to 6,175.21 acres of land at a cost of $71,700 which was paid by the ship canal authority.

Construction on the Atlantic-gulf ship canal project consisted of incompleted abutments, piers for a bridge, and canal excavations, performed by the United States as an emergency relief project at an aggregate cost of $4,535,867. The canal project was modified and redesignated the cross Florida barge canal by the act of July 23, 1942. No funds have been appropriated for construction of the project since its authorization.

While not required for project purposes, a large portion of the land acquired by the United States has been leased for agricultural and grazing purposes. Seventy-five percent of the funds received from such leasing is returned to the State of Florida for public purposes in the counties in which the land is situated. Several easements for road rights-of-way and right-of-way for an electric transmission line have been granted by the Department of the Army, during the time title to the land has been held by the United States. Some timber has also been sold from the land.

The Federal and State lands are interspersed. The cost of the management of the lands and other resources could be reduced if title were centralized in either the State or Federal Government. Since the ship canal project is now inactive, and the barge canal project would result in requiring a different area of land than that which would be required for the ship canal, transfer of the ship canal authority lands to the United States at this time is not justified. Further, the Florida Ship Canal Authority desires to sell those lands that will not be required for the modified barge canal project, and to use the funds to acquire new lands that will be required for the barge canal project.

The committee of conference believes this procedure advisable, and believes the language of section 104 adequately protects the interests of the Federal Government, and also gives the ship canal authority sufficient latitude to sell lands not required for the modified project. These required lands will remain readily available for reconveyance to the United States when needed, and construction heretofore performed will be maintained and preserved. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 44: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to cause an immediate study to be made of the Middle Decatur Bend of the Missouri River, to determine whether modification of the Missouri River project is justified, and if modification is found to be justified by the Secretary of the Army, is approved by the President, and not disapproved by Congress within 60 days after its submission to Congress (such 60 days to run only when Congress is in session) then the project will be authorized.

Amendment No. 45: This amendment adds a new section 106 to the bill.

The Hildebrand lock and dam on the Monongahela River above Morgantown, W. Va., is nearing completion. During construction of this project, the contractor improved an existing road to the vicinity of the damsite for access purposes and for delivery of material and supplies. Further improvement of the road is necessary to permit its use as a permanent access road to the completed project. An agreement has been reached between the Corps of Engineers and the West Virginia State Highway Department on this matter. It is believed that this amendment is necessary to permit the Corps of Engineers to make the necessary improvements to this road as a project feature of the Hildebrand lock and dam, and its use as a permanent access road to the project. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 46: This amendment adds a new section 107 to the bill.

Section 107 would authorize the Secretary of the Army to allot from river and harbor appropriations not to exceed $2 million for any one fiscal year for construction of small river and harbor improvement projects not authorized by Congress, which will result in substantial benefit to navigation, when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such work is advisable. The section provides that not more than $200,000 shall be allotted at any single locality for each fiscal year, that certain local cooperation provisions shall apply, and that the projects shall not commit the United States to any additional improvement, other than routine maintenance. The provisions would apply to low water access navigation channels from the existing channel of the Mississippi River to established harbor areas located along that stream.

The Corps of Engineers now has authority for construction of small flood control projects, with a limit on costs of $400,000, without specific congressional authorization. It should have similar authority with respect to small navigation projects. In addition, the committee was advised of several locations on the Mississippi River where the river has moved away from established harbors, leaving grain elevators, wharves, and docks, without access to the river channel. Section 107 would provide the necessary authority to dredge and maintain a navigation channel from the channel in the Mississippi River to harbor areas heretofore or now established.

The new section includes the following criteria to insure that economic projects are selected, and to protect the Federal investment.

(1) The projects will be approved by the Chief of Engineers;

(2) Economic justification is required as for flood control projects;

(3) The allotment shall complete the Federal part of the project;

(4) Local interests are required to furnish lands, and in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers may be required to hold and save the United States free from damages, and provide additional requirements of local cooperation deemed necessary by the Chief of Engineers;

(5) The Chief of Engineers is authorized in his discretion to require non-Federal cost sharing because of the recreational or otherwise local nature of benefits;

(6) Projects constructed under this authority are to be considered as authorized projects for purposes of maintenance.

The conference committee amendment strikes out the words "heretofore or" for the purpose of insuring that only future appropriations will be available for the purposes of this section. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 47: This amendment added a new section 108 to the bill the purpose of which is to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey surplus lands at water resource development projects to a State, political subdivision thereof, port district, port authority, or other body created by a State or through a compact created between two or more States, at the fair market value as determined by the Secretary, whenever he determines that the development of public port or industrial facilities will be in the public interest, will not interfere with the operation and maintenance of the project, and that the disposition of the property for these purposes will serve the objectives and purposes of the project within which the land is located. Where more than one applicant seeks the same land, the Secretary will give preference to the body whose intended use of the land would in his opinion best promote the purposes for which the project was authorized. Terms, conditions, reservations, and restrictions deemed necessary for development, maintenance, or operation of the project would be included in the deed of conveyance. Public notice would be given prior to conveyance of any land, and proceeds would be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The Flood Control Act of 1944 authorizes the Chief of Engineers to construct, maintain, and operate public parks and recreational facilities in the Corps of Engineers reservoir areas, and to grant leases and licenses for park and recreational purposes, with preference to Federal, State, or local governmental agencies, which may also be granted use of property, without monetary consideration, for any public purpose whenever the Secretary of the Army determines it to be in the public interest. The Secretary may grant leases for nonexcess property, and easements for rights-of-way across reservoir land, upon receipt of adequate consideration, when considered to be in the public interest. Public agencies frequently experience difficulty in selling bonds for construction of port or other facilities on leased property, as bondholders require that such agencies possess title in fee to the land on which their installations are to be located.

It has been the policy of the Corps of Engineers to review the requirements of the water resource development projects, and to make available any parts that can either be disposed of as no longer required, or leased when not required for the time being. Recognizing the benefits to be derived from public facilities at reservoir projects, their development by interested States and local agencies had been encouraged under leases granted pursuant to existing authority.

When land is no longer required for any departmental use it is reported to the General Services Administration for disposal or reassignment in accordance with the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act. Although that act authorizes the negotiated disposal of real property in specified circumstances, including sales to States and their political subdivisions, there is no authority to grant an absolute priority for the sale of real property to States and local agencies for port and industrial development. Section 108 would provide the Secretary of the Army with authority for that specific purpose. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 48: This amendment is of a technical nature. The House recedes.

NAVIGATION SURVEYS

The following Senate amendments added to the House-passed bill directed navigation surveys to be made at the following localities. The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments: 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, and 57.

These amendments cover the following navigation surveys:

(49) Prospect Harbor, Maine.

(50) Channel across Santa Rosa Peninsula and Santa Rosa Island, Florida, to connect East Bay with Santa Rosa Sound and Little Sabine Bay with the Gulf of Mexico.

(51) Channel from vicinity of Avalon, Florida, to the waters of Escambia Bay.

(52) Little Bay De Noc, Michigan.

(53) Ship canal between Tacoma and Seattle, Washington.

(54) Point Roberts, Washington.

(55) Deep-water harbor in the Maalaea Bay Area, Island of Maui, Hawaii.

(56) Deep-water harbor at Kahaluu, Island of Oahu, Hawaii.

(57) Coastal waters, State of Hawaii, investigation of sites for possible use as anchorage areas for handling of explosives; areas of investigation to be designated by such State's Governor's Advisory Committee on Explosives.

Amendment No. 58: This amendment added a new section 110 to the bill. It abandons the project for a navigation channel in the Saint Jones River, Delaware, upstream from Lebanon, Delaware, and declares that river upstream from Lebanon, Delaware, not to be a navigable water of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 59: This is a technical renumbering amendment. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 60: This amendment is a technical amendment made necessary by the passage of time. The House recedes.

FLOOD CONTROL

The following Senate amendments added to the House-passed bill the following flood control projects. In every instance these projects were reported by the Corps of Engineers, cleared through the various executive agencies, and transmitted to Congress since the House acted upon the bill last year. The detailed report on each of these projects can be found in Senate Report numbered 1524 of this Congress. The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments: 61, 65, 66, 67, 73, 74, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 89, 90, 91, 92, 95, 100, 105, 106, 109, 114, and 115.

The flood control projects covered by these amendments are the following:

(61) CONNECTICUT RIVER BASIN

(65) PAWCATUCK, CONNECTICUT

The project for hurricane-flood protection at Pawcatuck, Connecticut, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 212, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated Federal cost of $409,000.

(66) HOUSATONIC RIVER BASIN

The project for flood control dams and reservoirs on the Naugatuck River, Connecticut, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 372, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $10,230,000.

(67) STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

The project for hurricane-flood protection at Stamford, Connecticut, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 210, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated Federal cost of $3,030,000 for construction, and at an estimated Federal cost of maintenance and operation of $31,000 annually.

(73) LOWER MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The project for flood control and improvement of the lower Mississippi River, adopted by the Act of May 15, 1928 (45 Stat. 534), as amended and modified, is hereby further modified and expanded to include the following items of work and the authorization for said project is increased accordingly:

(74) (a) In addition to previous authorizations, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000,000 to provide for the continued prosecution of the channel improvement feature of the project.

(77) The comprehensive plan for improvement of the Trinity River and tributaries, Texas, as authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1945, is hereby modified to include the following projects:

(78) (a) The project for flood protection on Big Fossil Creek in the Richland Hills area, Texas, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 407, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,861,400.

(79) (b) Modification and extension of the Fort Worth Floodway on the West Fork of the Trinity River and tributaries, at Fort Worth, Texas, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 402, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $2,241,000.

(80) BRAZOS RIVER BASIN, TEXAS

In addition to previous authorizations, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $21,000,000, for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan for the Brazos River Basin authorized by the Flood Control Act of September 3, 1954.

(81) RED-OUACHITA RIVER BASIN

The general plan for flood control and other purposes on Red River, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana, below Denison Dam, Texas and Oklahoma, as authorized by the Flood Control Act of 1946, and amended and supplemented by subsequent Acts of Congress, is hereby further modified to provide for additional improvements for flood control, drainage, and other purposes, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers as follows:

(82)(a) McKinney Bayou, Arkansas and Texas: House Document Numbered 220, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $346,400.

(83)(b) Maniece Bayou, Arkansas: House Document Numbered 288, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $668,400.

(89) RIO GRANDE BASIN

The project for improvement of the Rio Grande Basin is hereby authorized substantially as recommended by the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 94, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $58,300,000.

The approval granted above shall be subject to the following conditions and limitations:

Cochiti Reservoir, Galisteo Reservoir, and all other reservoirs constructed by the Corps of Engineers as a part of the Middle Rio Grande project will be operated solely for flood control and sediment control, as described below:

(a) the outflow from Cochiti Reservoir during each spring flood and thereafter will be at the maximum rate of flow that can be carried at the time in the channel of Rio Grande through the middle valley without causing flooding of areas protected by levees or unreasonable damage to channel protective works: Provided, That whenever during the months of July, August, September, and October, there is more than two hundred twelve thousand acre-feet of storage available for regulation of summer floods and the inflow to Cochiti Reservoir (exclusive of that portion of the inflow derived from upstream flood-control storage) is less than one thousand five hundred cubic feet per second, no water will be withdrawn from storage in Cochiti Reservoir and the inflow derived from upstream flood-control storage will be retained in Cochiti Reservoir.

(b) Releases of water from Galisteo Reservoir and Jemez Canyon Reservoir during the months of July, August, September, and October, will be limited to the amounts necessary to provide adequate capacity for control of subsequent summer floods; and such releases when made in these months, or thereafter, will be at the maximum rate practicable under the conditions at the time.

(c) Subject to the foregoing, the storage of water in and the release of water from all reservoirs constructed by the Corps of Engineers as part of the Middle Rio Grande project will be done as the interests of flood and sediment control may dictate: Provided, That the Corps of Engineers will endeavor to avoid encroachment on the upper two hundred and twelve thousand acre-feet of capacity in Cochiti Reservoir, and all reservoirs will be evacuated completely on or before March 31 of each year: And provided further, That when estimates of anticipated streamflow made by appropriate agencies of the Federal Government indicate that the operation of reservoirs constructed as a part of the Middle Rio Grande project may affect the benefits accruing to New Mexico or Colorado, under the provisions of the eighth unnumbered paragraph of article VI of the Rio Grande compact, releases from such reservoirs shall be regulated to produce a flow of ten thousand cubic feet per second at Albuquerque, or such greater or lesser rate as may be determined by the Chief of Engineers at the time to be the maximum safe flow, whenever such operation shall be requested by the Rio Grande compact commissioner for New Mexico or the commissioner for Colorado, or both, in writing prior to commencement of such operation.

(d) All reservoirs of the Middle Rio Grande project will be operated at all times in the manner described above in conformity with the Rio Grande compact, and no departure from the foregoing operation schedule will be made except with the advice and consent of the Rio Grande compact, and no departure from the foregoing operation schedule will be made except with the advice and consent of the Rio Grande Compact Commission: Provided, That whenever the Corps of Engineers determines that an emergency exists affecting the safety of major structures or endangering life and shall so advise the Rio Grande Compact Commission in writing these rules of operation may be suspended during the period of and to the extent required by such emergency.

(e) the foregoing regulations shall not apply to storage capacity which may be allocated to permanent pools for recreation and fish and wildlife propagation: Provided, That the water required to fill and maintain such pools is obtained from sources entirely outside the drainage basin of the Rio Grande.

(90) UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER BASIN

(91) In addition to previous authorizations, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $12,000,000 for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan for the Upper Mississippi River Basin, approved in the Act of June 28, 1938, as amended and supplemented by subsequent Acts of Congress.

(92) The flood protection project on Redwood River at Marshall, Minnesota, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 417, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $2,252,000.

(95) The report of the Chief of Engineers on Wilson Dam and Reservoir, Saline River, Kansas, submitted in compliance with Public Law 505, Eighty-fourth Congress, published as Senate Document Numbered 96, Eighty-sixth Congress, is hereby approved, and construction of the project as a unit of the comprehensive plan of improvement for the Missouri River Basin authorized by the Flood Control Act approved December 22, 1944, is hereby authorized at an estimated cost of $18,081,000.

(100) The project for flood protection on Cheyenne River and tributaries, South Dakota and Wyoming, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 280, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $272,000.

(105) The project for flood protection on Lynn Camp Creek at Corbin, Kentucky, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in the House Document Numbered 282, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $645,000.

(106) The project for flood control and allied purposes on Laurel River, Kentucky, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 413, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $21,900,000: Provided, That construction of the project shall not be commenced until the agency designated to market the power has entered into an agreement which would insure that the power would be sold at rates sufficient to repay with interest within 50 years all costs allocated to power.

(109) The project for flood protection on the West Branch of the Mahoning River, Ohio, authorized in Public Law 85–500, in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document 191, Eighty-fifth Congress, is hereby modified to provide that the entire local share of cost for water for pollution abatement and for municipal and industrial water supply purposes is $5,200,000, of which $3,230,000 will be paid in cash during construction, and the unpaid balance at the time the project is placed in useful operation, $1,970,000, may be paid in cash at that time or repaid on an annual basis in accordance with the principles of title III of said Public Law 85–500.

(114) SACRAMENTO RIVER BASIN

The project for flood protection on the Sacramento River, California, authorized by the Flood Control Act approved March 1, 1917, as amended and modified by subsequent Acts of Congress, is further modified substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 108, Eighty-sixth Congress, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $14,240,000 for the prosecution of the initial phase of bank erosion control works and setback levees on the Sacramento River.

(115) LAS VEGAS WASH, NEVADA

The project for flood protection on Las Vegas Wash and tributaries, Nevada, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 405, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $13,410,000.

Amendment No. 62: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Chicopee River, Massachusetts, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 63: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Westfield River, Massachusetts, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 64: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Farmington River, Connecticut and Massachusetts, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 68: This amendment increases the authorization from $1,000,000 to $23,000,000 for the central and southern Florida comprehensive plan for flood control. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 69 and 70: These amendments modify the central and southern Florida comprehensive plan for flood control to include a project for canals, levees, and water control in the Nicodemus Slough area, Glades County, Florida, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 53, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $318,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 71: This amendment provides that the levees around Lake Okeechobee, Florida, shall be known and designated as the Herbert Hoover Dike. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 72: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 76: This amendment struck from the House bill the Bardwell Reservoir on Waxahachie Creek in connection with the plan of the improvement of the Trinity River, Texas. This project was stricken because it has already been authorized. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 84: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the East Point, Louisiana, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 85: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to cause an immediate study to be made of emergency bank protection at Garland City, Arkansas, to determine whether the project is justified, and if found to be justified by the Secretary of the Army, is approved by the President, and not disapproved by Congress within 60 days after its submission to Congress (such 60 days to run only when Congress is in session) then the project will be authorized.

Amendment No. 86: This amendment increases from $32,000,000 to $50,000,000 the authorization contained in this bill for the plan of development for the White River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 87: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize modification of the existing flood protection project for Village Creek, White River, and Mayberry Levee Districts, White River, Arkansas, substantially in accordance with plan I as contained in House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, with a requirement for a restudy to be made by the Chief of Engineers of plan III with a report to Congress of his findings as a result of that restudy. This authorizes the project but it is not contemplated that construction proceed until after the report of the resurvey of plan III is submitted and Congress has had an opportunity to act thereon.

Amendment No. 88: This amendment increases from $95,000,000 to $179,000,000 the authorization contained in this bill for the plan of development for the Arkansas River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 93: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to provide for the construction of a highway bridge across the Coralville Reservoir at or near the Mehaffy site. The principal difference between the amendment proposed to be offered and Senate Amendment No. 93 are as follows: (1) the site is to be mutually satisfactory to the Army, the chief engineer of the Iowa State High Commission and the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, Iowa, (2) the chief engineer of the Iowa State Highway Commission is also required to approve the plans for the bridge, and (3) before the awarding of any contracts for construction local interests are required to contribute for the cost of construction such amounts as the Secretary of the Army determines to be equitable, the United States to pay all other costs.

Amendment No. 94: This amendment increases from $132,000,000 to $207,000,000 the authorization contained in this bill for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan for the Missouri River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 96: This amendment authorizes the modification of a project for flood protection in the Gering and Mitchell Valleys in Nebraska to provide needed protection in Gering Valley. It further provides that construction was not to be initiated until the feasibility of the report had been submitted for approval of the Public Works Committees of Congress.

The amendment of the conferees would provide that construction would not be initiated until the feasibility report had been approved by the President and not less than 60 days continuous session of Congress had expired without the Congress disapproving such report.

Amendment No. 97: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to cause an immediate study to be made of the flood control project at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, to determine whether modification of the project is justified, and if modification is found to be justified by the Secretary of the Army, is approved by the President, and not disapproved by Congress within 60 days after its submission to Congress (such 60 days to run only when Congress is in session) then the project will be authorized.

Amendment No. 98: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Vermillion River, South Dakota, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 99: The purpose of this amendment is to insure that the Federal cost of the highway bridge authorized by this section will not exceed $4,500,000.

Amendment No. 107: This is a technical amendment for the purpose of inserting the document number for this project.

Amendment No. 108: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Loyalhanna Creek, Pennsylvania, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 110: This is a technical numbering amendment. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 111: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Gila and Salt Rivers, Arizona, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 112: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the project for flood protection on Tahchevah Creek at an estimated cost of $1,105,000 with a requirement that non-Federal interests shall bear 50 percent of the cost of the project.

Amendment No. 113: This amendment increases from $30,000,000 to $32,000,000 the authorization contained in the bill for the comprehensive plan approved in the Act of August 18, 1941, as amended and supplemented, relating to the Los Angeles River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 116: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Gleason Creek, Nevada, as this Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 117: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to authorize the plan for flood protection on the Jordan River Basin, Salt Lake City streams, Utah, as the Senate amendment would have authorized it with an additional provision that non-Federal interests should contribute to the total cost of the project not less than 20 percent of the cost allocable to local flood protection benefits.

Amendment No. 118: This amendment increases from $90,000,000 to $148,000,000 the authorization contained in this bill for the projects and plans for the Columbia River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 119: This amendment modifies the projects and plans for the Columbia River Basin to include the project for construction of the Foster Reservoir on the South Santiam River, Willamette River Basin, Oregon, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 104, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $17,340,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 120: This amendment added a new section 204 to the bill.

This new section 204 would authorize Federal participation, to the extent of flood-control benefits only, in the proposed multiple-purpose Merced River development, including the Bagby, New Exchequer, and Snelling Dames and Reservoirs to be constructed on the Merced River by the Merced Irrigation District of California. This degree of participation is similar to authorizations prevously granted for the Oroville and Cherry Valley Reservoirs, also in California. There are adequate safeguards in the proposed amendments to protect the interest of the United States. These principal safeguards are as follows:

(a) The actual amount of Federal contribution shall be determined by the Secretary of the Army in cooperation with the Merced Irrigation District, and shall be subject to a finding by the Secretary of the Army, approved by the President, of economic justification for the flood-control allocation.

(b) Prior to the Federal contribution an agreement must be reached between the Federal Government and the Merced Irrigation District, assuring that the reservoir will be operated so as to produce the flood-control benefits upon which the allocation is predicated.

(c) Operation of the dam for flood control shall be in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Army in accordance with existing law, which is similar to other dams not under the jurisdiction of the Corps of Engineers but having flood-control benefits, for which operating rules are prescribed.

(d) The rate of contribution on an annual basis during the construction period shall not exceed an amount which reflects the relative value of the flood-control portion in comparison to the total cost.

(e) The authority is limited to 4 years, and if construction is not undertaken within that period, the authority shall expire. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 121: This amendment added a new section 205 to the bill.

This section would authorize Federal participation to the extent justified by flood-control benefits only, in the proposed multiple-purpose dam and reservoir, or dams and reservoirs, to be constructed on the Mokelumne River by the East Bay Municipal Utility District of Oakland, Calif. This degree of participation is similar to that authorized by section 104, and in previous authorizations granted for the Oroville and Cherry Valley Reservoirs, also in California. There are the same safeguards for the protection of the interests of the United States in this project as was included for the Merced River development included in section 104, and for previous similar authorizations. In addition, provisions have been made to include adequate provision for mitigation of damages to fish and wildlife, consistent with the other purposes of the project. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 122: This amendment added a new section 206 to the bill.

The purpose of section 206 is to authorize the Secretary of the Army, through the Chief of Engineers, to compile and disseminate information on floods and flood damages, including identification of areas subject to inundation by floods of various magnitudes and frequencies. Authority would also be given to provide advice to local interests for their use in planning to ameliorate flood hazards. Section 206 would authorize the allotment from flood control appropriations of sums not to exceed $1 million in any one fiscal year for compilation and dissemination of such information.

This legislation would meet a growing need at the local level for information about flood problems, damages, and hazards, and measures for their amelioration. Data and engineering advice would be made available for specific localities only upon the request of a State or responsible local governmental agency and upon the approval of the Chief of Engineers, Department of the Army. Information and assistance of this kind would provide a basis at the local level for the planning of flood control projects, for the regulation of flood plain use in many rapidly growing communities, for city planning (especially in the planning of urban renewal projects), for the development of flood insurance programs, and for other purposes. Such a program could yield large returns in the form of reductions in future flood losses and should reduce future demands for Federal expenditures for flood-control works.

The conference committee amendment strikes out the words "heretofore or" for the purpose of insuring that only future appropriations will be available for the purposes of this section. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 123: This amendment added a new section 207 to the bill.

This section authorizes the Chief of Engineers to utilize existing public roads as a means of providing access during construction to authorized water resource development projects, if he determines it to be in the public interest and would result in a saving in Federal cost over the cost of constructing a new road at Federal expense. The Chief of Engineers would be authorized to improve, reconstruct, and maintain such roads, or contract with the local authority having jurisdiction over the roads to accomplish the necessary work, and he may acquire necessary lands or easements if deemed advisable. Upon completion of the project, if considered necessary, the road will be restored to as good condition as it was before using for access purposes, after which the responsibility of the Chief of Engineers for improvement, reconstruction, and maintenance would cease.

This section also clarifies the responsibility of the Chief of Engineers with respect to replacement of existing public roads necessitated by construction of water resource development projects, as to service to be provided and design standards. The design standards for the substitute road will be based on the traffic existing at time of taking, in determination of the classification of the substitute road.

Amendment No. 125: This a technical renumbering amendment. The House recedes.

FLOOD CONTROL SURVEYS

The following Senate amendments added to the House-passed bill directed flood control surveys to be made at the following localities. The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments: 126, 127, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, and 134.

These amendments cover the following flood-control surveys:

(126) Ogunquit, York, Wells, Kennebunk, Kennebunkport, Biddeford, Saco, Old Orchard, Cape Elizabeth, Portland, and Phippsburg, and adjacent coastal areas, Maine.

(127) Patuxent River, Maryland.

(129) Indian River and other streams draining into Indian Lake and Lake Michigan in the vicinity of Manistique, Michigan.

(130) Atherton Creek, San Mateo County, California.

(131) Wildcat and San Pablo Creeks, Contra Costa County, California.

(132) Streams in Marin County, California, flowing into Richardson Bay, an arm of San Francisco Bay, including Coyote Creek and Arroyo Corte Madera del Presidio Creek.

(133) Island of Hawaii, State of Hawaii, construction of dikes, barriers, or walls, to protect lives and property from lava flows resulting from volcanic eruption.

(134) Kahoma Stream, Island of Maui, Hawaii.

Amendment No. 128: Senate amendment numbered 128 provided for a flood control survey at the Pithlachascotee River and certain other specified areas in Florida. The conference substitute was designed to correct a typographical error contained in the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 135: This amendment added a new section 209 to the bill authorizing the Chief of Engineers to investigate and study in cooperation with Texas State agencies with a view to devising effective means of recharging and replenishing the Edwards Underground Reservoir as part of the plans for flood control and water conservation in the Nueces, San Antonio, and Guadalupe River Basins of Texas. It requires a contribution on the part of the State to the extent that the Secretary deems appropriate and requires a joint report signed by representatives of Texas and the Chief of Engineers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 136: This amendment added a new section 210 to the bill. It provides, in addition to previous authorizations, an authorization of $60,000,000 for continuing the works in the Missouri River Basin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 137: This amendment added a new section 211 to the bill. This section authorizes the Secretary of the Army to pay to any bona fide lessee or permittee owning improvements which are or were situated on a railroad right-of-way the fair market value of any such improvements which have been or will be rendered inoperative or be otherwise adversely affected by the construction of the Tuttle Creek Reservoir project on the Blue River, Kansas, as determined by the Secretary or by the United States District Court for the District of Kansas on which jurisdiction is conferred for purposes of making this determination. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to provide necessary funds for this purpose from any moneys appropriated for the construction of the Tuttle Creek Reservoir project. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 139: This amendment is a technical renumbering amendment. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 140: This is an amendment redating the bill made necessary by the passage of time. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 152: This is an amendment to renumber title IV of the Senate amendment as title III, made necessary in view of the fact that the Senate receded on all of title III as proposed to be added by their amendments.

Amendment No. 153: Reported in disagreement. The managers on the part of the House intend to offer a motion to establish as a declaration of policy that owners and tenants of property acquired for public works projects be paid a just and reasonable consideration therefor and to authorize the Secretary of the Army in negotiating for the purchase of such property to pay a purchase price which will take into consideration that policy.

Amendment No. 163: This is a technical renumbering amendment.

CLIFFORD DAVIS,
JOHN A. BLATNIK,
ROBERT E. JONES,
JOHN F. BALDWIN, Jr.,
WILLIAM C. CRAMER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, because the conference report and statement has been made a part of the RECORD, and further because the report and statement is in document form, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the conference on the part of the House and Senate was a thorough and exhaustive one on this public works authorization bill.

The House will recall that on July 16, 1959, this House unanimously passed its bill. Some projects were added in the other body.

We come back today with a bill confident that it has met all of the objections of the interested agencies and the Budget Bureau, and we are equally confident that it will receive careful and favorable attention by the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CRAMER. Is it correct that the conference report, as reported by the conferees, eliminated projects that were disagreed to by the Executive?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMER. And it brought them into conformity with Executive recommendations with these amendments; and, in effect, the House bill as it passed the House in July was in conformity and this report brings the Senate bill substantially into conformity?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMER. The House bill included only $658 million. The Senate increased it to $1,580 million. In other words, the Senate added about $924 million. Of course this caused us considerable concern. The reasons for that increase are threefold. First, there were $359 million worth of projects added. I ask the gentleman if that is not correct.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMER. Resulting from increases in modifications of flood control basic authorizations necessitated between the time when the House passed the bill nearly a year ago and when the Senate passed the bill recently.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMER. And, second, about $300 million was added in rivers and harbors, which were processed and cleared in the passage of time between when the House passed the bill and when the Senate passed the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct. The House must know we have to authorize these basin projects in advance so that they will have an umbrella under which the appropriation can be worked. We had to increase the monetary authorizations to take care of the situation which the gentleman from Florida has stated.

Mr. CRAMER. I have had some questions asked on this side with regard to the bill. This $924 million added in the Senate included about $357 million, plus $300 million, as I have stated for a total of $657 million was added as a result of the passage of time and is not in controversy. This, third, leaves only about $170 million of projects in controversy. Is that not correct?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. CRAMER. And of this $170 million of projects in controversy, the conferees excluded from the bill approximately $125 million worth of Federal money involved in those projects, leaving about $45 million of those projects. I ask the gentleman if it is not correct that those $45 million worth of projects were brought into conformity with recommendations by the Bureau of the Budget and the Corps of Army Engineers.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is right.

Mr. CRAMER. I think this job is a monumental one on the part of the House conferees in that it recognizes the sound principles established in the final passage of the 1958 authorization bill which had been twice vetoed by the President because of its pork barrel nature.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. What I am just hearing now shows that the passage of time can be very expensive, does it not?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. It is regrettable that this bill was not acted on by the other body at the time we acted so promptly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee who has done such an able job of bringing this bill to the floor with the conference report today: Could you tell us the reasons why the conferees did not adopt the provisions inserted by the Senate Committee on Public Works for the establishment of a commission to study the adequacy of compensation in Federal real property land acquisitions as proposed in my bill, H.R. 1066?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am glad to answer the gentleman from New York. The House Committee has had no hearings at all on this important item. It was thought that this should be a matter which should have early attention in the Congress next year.

Mr. TELLER. The gentleman knows that I have long advocated that in the matter of land acquisition the Department of the Army should pay reasonable compensation for property in some additional amount not specified in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think I can clarify that. In other words, the Department of the Army would not be required to pay the reimbursal price. But that section more appropriately provides for the relief of congestion now in the Federal courts. Prolonged condemnation proceedings, will be made unnecessary.

Mr. TELLER. Are not the people of this country entitled to the same kind of treatment when their property is condemned by the Federal Government? We are proposing to give different treatment to people whose property is condemned by the Army.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I cannot agree with the gentleman for I think this is a very fair provision. I see nothing unfair or inequitable about it.

Mr. TELLER. I think it is a fair provision, but should it not be extended to apply to all the people of the country?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. We expect; to go into that next year. I am glad the gentleman brought it up.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on the floor of the House on many occasions, the problem of adequate compensation to those affected by Government improvement projects has long been of concern to me. For this reason I sponsored a bill in the 85th Congress and reintroduced in the 86th Congress which was referred to the Committee on Public Works. I understand that the executive agencies have no objection to the bill and some of them have even endorsed the commission study.

I was, therefore, gratified when the Senate committee, after considering the matter, added certain provisions concerning land acquisition to the rivers and harbors bill providing, among other things, for a commission along the lines that I have urged. My gratification, of course, was short lived because of the action of the conferees in taking out this provision. In place of the study commission it is my observation that, while well-meaning high-sounding phrases have been inserted in the conference report—and in the amendment to the act—as to the intent of Congress concerning payment in land acquisitions, they will be of no effect in relieving those who are hurt by any project; but, contrariwise, they will not even give moral support to people in my district who are just as effectively displaced by urban renewal and other city-type projects as those who are displaced by the Secretary of the Army in rural-type flood protection projects.

The need for uniformity was never greater. Proof of this is the fact that we have seen again in this session of Congress further random effort on a piecemeal basis to take care of isolated cases of inadequate compensation paid in connection with Federal projects.

It is my hope that the House Committee on Public Works will promptly move to consider H.R. 1066, which I have referred to before and which is pending before the committee. Because it is my thought, Mr. Speaker, that in the circumstances where the other body has already indicated its concurrence in this approach that, if the Public Works Committee could hold hearings on the bill and report it out after the recess, we could still adopt the authorization for the commission this session of Congress and have the study begun immediately without further delay.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 7634. It has been a privilege to serve as one of the five House conferees on this measure, under the able chairmanship of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]. The House conferees had a preliminary meeting at which we agreed that we were highly desirous of obtaining a bill that the President would feel he could properly sign. We therefore took the position that we must eliminate those projects which were not economically justified, and provide that those projects on which departmental reports have not been filed, should not be constructed until such reports are filed. Fortunately, the Senate conferees agreed with us that this course of action should be taken. As a result, the conference report has eliminated a number of economically unjustified projects and requires the filing of favorable departmental reports before a number of other projects can be constructed. In addition we have reduced the Federal contribution on a considerable number of additional projects. We have saved the taxpayers over $138 million in the elimination of projects and in the reduction of Federal contributions on other projects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 15: Page 5, line 7, insert:

"Pascagoula Harbor, Mississippi: Modification of the project authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1954 (Public Law 790, Eighty-third Congress), House Document Numbered 98, Eighty-sixth Congress, to provide for a channel thirty-eight feet deep and three hundred and twenty-five feet wide through Horn Island Pass, thence thirty-five feet deep and two hundred and seventy-five feet wide through Mississippi Sound and up the Pascagoula River to the vicinity of the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corporation, in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers, at an estimated cost of $850,000, subject to conditions of local cooperation as prescribed by the Chief of Engineers;".

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Pascagoula Harbor, Mississippi: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the project authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1954 (Public Law 790, Eighty-third Congress), House Document Numbered 98, Eighty-sixth Congress, to determine if further modification is warranted, and further modification of the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 34: Page 11, line 7, insert:

"Hilo Harbor, Hawaii: Emergency construction of a seawall to protect against tidal waves and excessive high tides, in accordance with plans on file in the office of the Chief of Engineers, at an estimated cost of $7,000,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 34 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Hilo Harbor, Hawaii: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of a seawall to protect against tidal waves and excessive high tides, and the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 44: On page 17, line 14, insert:

"SEC. 105. That the project for improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, Iowa, and the mouth, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved March 2, 1945, is hereby modified to provide for a lake in the abandoned river channel of the Missouri River between river miles 710 and 715 for recreational purposes, by means of: (a) Construction of a levee extending along the left bank of the new channel to be constructed in the Middle Decatur Bend area of the Missouri River; and (b) construction of hydraulic-fill closures at both ends of the old channel, substantially in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers, at an estimated Federal cost of $155,000: Provided, That responsible local interests furnish assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of the Army that they will (a) hold and save the United States free from damages; and (b) maintain and operate the project modification after completion in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Army."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 44 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 105. The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the project for improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, Iowa, and the mouth, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved March 2, 1945, to determine if modification is warranted to provide for a lake in the abandoned river channel of the Missouri River between river miles 710 and 715 for recreational purposes, by means of: (a) Construction of a levee extending along the left bank of the new channel to be constructed in the Middle Decatur Bend area of the Missouri River; and (b) construction of hydraulic-fill closures at both ends of the old channel, and such modification is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 62: On page 26, line 17, insert:

"The plan for flood protection on the Chicopee River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated June 1, 1960, at an estimated cost of $5,180,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 62 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The plan for flood protection on the Chicopee River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 434, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $5,180,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood-control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood-control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 63: On page 26, line 22, insert:

"The project for flood protection on the Westfield River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated June 1, 1960, at an estimated cost of $3,240,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for flood protection on the Westfield River, Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 109, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $3,240,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood-control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood-control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 64: On page 27, line 3, insert:

"The plan for flood control and related purposes on the Farmington River, Connecticut and Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in its report dated March 29, 1960, at an estimated cost of $12,052,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The plan for flood control and related purposes on the Farmington River, Connecticut and Massachusetts, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document Numbered 443, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $12,052,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 84: On page 32, line 9, insert:

"(c) East Point, Louisiana: House Document Numbered 406, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $273,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) East Point, Louisiana: House Document Numbered 406, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $273,000. No obligation shall be incurred for the cost of this project where the flood control benefits are exclusively for local flood control, as determined by the Secretary of the Army (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights), unless the State or one or more other non-Federal entities shall have entered into an agreement in advance to assume at least 20 per centum of the cost (except costs of planning, design, and acquisition of water rights) of the completed project allocated to the production of local flood control benefits, payable either as construction proceeds or pursuant to a contract providing for repayment with interest within 50 years. The actual cost, or fair market value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, and work performed or services rendered prior to completion of construction of the project, which are furnished by a non-Federal entity, shall be included in the share of the cost to be borne by the non-Federal entity."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 85: On page 32, line 12, insert:

"(d) Garland City, Arkansas, Emergency Bank Protection: In accordance with plans on file in the Office of Engineers, at an estimated cost of $1,750,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(d) Garland City, Arkansas: The Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause an immediate study to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of emergency bank protection at Garland City, Arkansas, and the project is hereby authorized as determined to be justified by the Secretary of the Army with the approval of the President, unless within the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the report is submitted to it such report is disapproved by Congress."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 87: On page 32, line 22, insert:

"Modification of the existing flood protection project for Village Creek, White River and Mayberry Levee Districts, White River, Arkansas, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with plan III, as contained in House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,322,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Modification of the existing flood protection project for Village Creek, White River, and Mayberry Levee Districts, White River, Arkansas, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with plan I as contained in House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, at an estimated cost of $294,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause a restudy to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of plan III as contained in the House Document Numbered 225, Eighty-sixth Congress, and to report to Congress his findings thereon."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 93: On page 37, line 10, insert:

"The project for the Coralville Reservoir on Iowa River, Iowa, as authorized by the Act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1215), is hereby modified to provide for construction of a highway bridge across said reservoir at or near the Mahaffy site, to replace the existing bridge crossing of Johnson County on County Road Y, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, at an estimated cost of not to exceed $1,180,000: Provided, That local interests shall construct all necessary approaches to the bridge site, and provide without cost to the United States all lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for construction of the bridge."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The project for the Coralville Reservoir on Iowa River in Iowa, as authorized by the Act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1215), is hereby modified in order to provide for a highway bridge across Coralville Reservoir at or near the Mehaffy site, such site to be mutually satisfactory to the Secretary of the Army, the chief engineer, Iowa State Highway Commission, and the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, Iowa, to replace the previously existing bridge crossing of Johnson County on County Road Y. Such bridge shall be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of the Army and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the chief engineer, Iowa State Highway Commission: Provided, That prior to the award of any contract for the construction of the bridge or the approach roads authorized by this paragraph, local interests, acting through the Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, Iowa, shall contribute toward the cost of the construction of such bridge and approach roads such amounts as the Secretary of the Army shall determine to be equitable, and the United States shall pay all other costs of such bridge and approach roads."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 96: On page 38, line 13, insert:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 153: On page 68, line 18, insert:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 401. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that owners and tenants whose property is acquired for public works projects of the United States of America shall be paid a fair and equitable amount for the property acquired and reimbursed for their actual losses."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 301. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that owners and tenants whose property is acquired for public works projects of the United States of America shall be paid a just and reasonable consideration therefor. In order to facilitate the acquisition of land and interests therein by negotiation with property owners, to avoid litigation and to relieve congestion in the courts, the Secretary of the Army (or such other officers of the Department of the Army as he may designate) is authorized in any negotiation for the purchase of such property to pay a purchase price which will take into consideration the policy set forth in this section."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 154: On page 69, line 1, insert:

"DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

"SEC. 402. Within six months after the date that Congress authorizes construction of a water resource development project under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Army, the Corps of Engineers shall make reasonable effort to advise owners and occupants in and adjacent to the project area as to the probable timing for the acquisition of lands for the project and for incidental rights-of-way, relocations, and other requirements. Within a reasonable time after initial appropriations are made for land acquisition or construction, including relocations, the Corps of Engineers shall conduct public meetings at locations convenient to owners and tenants to be displaced by the project in order to advise them of the proposed plans for acquisition and to obtain their comments thereon. To carry out the provisions of this section, the Chief of Engineers shall issue regulations to provide, among other things, dissemination of the following information to those affected: (1) basis and procedures for appraisals; (2) basis for offer to purchase property without going to court; (3) legal procedures in condemnation proceedings; (4) entitlement to payments for moving expenses or other losses not covered by appraised market value; (5) occupancy during construction; (6) removal of improvements; (7) payments required by occupants of Government acquired land; (8) deposits as advances to land and property owners; and (9) use of land by owner when easement is acquired. The operation of this section and the functions performed under it shall be exempt from the operations of the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, as amended (60 Stat. 237).

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

"SEC. 302. Within a reasonable time after initial appropriations are made for land acquisition or construction, including relocations, the Corps of Engineers shall conduct public meetings at locations convenient to owners and tenants to be displaced by the project in order to advise them of the proposed plans for acquisition and to afford them an opportunity to comment. To carry out the provisions of this section, the Chief of Engineers shall issue regulations to provide, among other things, dissemination of the following information to those affected: (1) factors considered in making the appraisals; (2) desire to purchase property without going to court; (3) legal right to submit to condemnation proceedings; (4) payments for moving expenses or other losses not covered by appraised market value; (5) occupancy during construction; (6) removal of improvements; (7) payments required from occupants of Government acquired land; (8) withdrawals by owners of deposits made in court by Government; and (9) use of land by owner when easement is acquired. The provisions of this section shall not subject the United States to any liability nor affect the validity of any acquisitions by purchase or condemnation and shall be exempt from the operations of the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, as amended (60 Stat. 237)."

On page 10 of the House Engrossed bill, line 14, strike out "Numbered ——," and insert in lieu thereof "Numbered 41,".

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

(Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to speak out of order.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I always like to take my colleagues into my confidence as quickly as possible in connection with action that I contemplate taking concerning the House of Representatives as such. In connection with the motion for an adjournment to a time certain, commonly referred to as a recess, when I offer the motion it will be to August 15, not August 8.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman when he proposes to offer the resolution?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a question of fact.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. This is made with the best of motives. I want the Members to hear this statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman has the best of motives, may I ask that he refrain from exercising his right in this case? In the last days, may I not have enough influence with the gentleman to ask that?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I should like to do something to please the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. That would not please me.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. It would not please you?

Mr. McCORMACK. It would not.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then I will not do it.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right. I want to call to the attention of the Members important facts.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I did not withdraw my point of order. In view of the fact that it would not please the gentleman I do not want to do it. I insist on the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. Will the gentleman then withdraw his point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have to count, whether or not the gentleman yields back his time.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the majority leader that it would please him if I did withdraw it. Being very, very desirous of doing something to please him, I do withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. McCORMACK. I realize the feeling of the Members. I have the same feeling myself of the desire to adjourn sine die. On the other hand, we have the Democratic Convention starting on July 11 and the Republican Convention on July 25. I might say that the viewpoint of the leadership in the House has proven recognition of the fact that the Republican Convention, starting on July 25, probably would not finish July 30 or 31, and between that period and August 8 would be a very short period of time. It was consideration along that line that influenced the Speaker, and the leadership of this body.

Of course nobody would expect us to finish our business until our work is completed. There is nothing sacred about June 30, Congress adjourning sine die. As a matter of fact, I cannot remember when we did adjourn on June 30, sine die. There has always been a hangover after the end of the fiscal year. We are practical men, and we have to be practical in our considerations.

I assume that my Republican friends, now that they realize it will be August 15 instead of August 8, and I will stand pat on that and you have my word for that, I am sure they recognize that the Democratic National Convention is going to take place on July 11, and I am sure they would not want to do anything that would interfere with that taking place.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course.

Mr. GROSS. With former President Truman apparently out of the Democratic convention, I wonder if it will be held as scheduled.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would say that President Truman is our problem and not your problem. Governor Rockefeller is your problem.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am not so much worried about former President Truman. The thing that worries me is whether or not you can have an official Democratic convention without having "Fishbait" Miller there.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say as an individual, and again my friend from Ohio is pleasantly probing, may I say as an individual that with Bill Miller—I never refer to him as "Fishbait," because Mrs. McCormack told me many years ago that after a person arrives at a certain age they should not be called by a nickname. She has a profound influence upon me. So you will understand it is the good influence and sound advice of Mrs. McCormack that a person after a certain age should not be called by a nickname, and I think there is a great deal of logic to it. In my opinion, a serious mistake was made when "Fishbait" was not asked. That shows how human we are when all of us have a little lapse at times.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Having had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. McCormack, I am satisfied that she has such a great influence on you.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do not worry about that.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Because my good wife has an influence on me. As vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, I am going to do the best I can to see that William Miller, alias "Fishbait" Miller, is invited to go to the Republican National Convention.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure my friend from Ohio, with the generous and gentlemanly disposition that he has, would not want to put Bill Miller in the position where he might have to pass upon such an invitation.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I just wanted to correct the gentleman from Ohio and also the majority leader. It is Dr. William Miller. He has an honorary doctor's degree, and he should be referred to as Dr. Miller.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I add to that statement by saying I have been here long enough to learn that when I really want to find out what is going on around this House I go to Dr. William Miller.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman. As majority leader, I would find my work immeasurably more difficult if it were not for Bill Miller. He serves all of us, without regard to party.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I, too, was interested in the Fishbait Miller story, and especially that the Democrats cannot afford to send him to the convention. I am glad to see the Democrats being so careful with their own money.

Mr. McCORMACK. We Democrats are always, unfortunately, in that position where money is concerned; but somehow or other we manage to struggle along.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HAYS. I am glad to hear the majority leader say that this resolution will go to the 15th of August, because it may be that the Republican Convention will last even longer. I heard from one of the very high officials of the Republican Party in my State, up in the ranks of vice chairman or somewhere around there, that the keynote speaker might be so carried away as to say that Chiang Kai-shek should be nominated. That really would throw them into an uproar.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give my colleagues some information as to the duration of previous sessions of Congress. The 1st session of the 80th Congress met on January 3, 1947. There were recesses of a week or two and the session adjourned on Sunday, December 19. In the 2d session we met on January 6, 1948. There were recesses during the session from June 20, 1948, to July 26, 1948, and from August 7, 1948, to December 31, 1948; and then we adjourned on Sunday, December 31.

The 81st Congress met on January 3, 1949, the 1st session, and adjourned October 19 of that year.

The 2d session of the 81st Congress met on January 3, 1950. There was the Easter recess, of course, from April 6 to 18, and then we were in recess from September 23, 1950, to November 27, 1950, and then finally adjourned on January 2, 1951.

The 1st session of the 82d Congress met on January 3, 1951, and outside of the Easter recess there was a recess from August 23, 1951, to September 12, and adjournment was on October 20 of that year. The 2d session of the 82d Congress met on January 8, 1952. There was the customary Easter recess. We finally adjourned that year on July 7, 1952.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. If my memory serves me correctly, the Republican Convention was the following day in Chicago. We worked right up until that time.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to answer that. I am just giving some facts showing that there is always this uncertainty.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PELLY. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would indicate as he goes through how many of these Congresses went for 3 months without doing any real work?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is another question. This Congress, of course, spent a protracted period of time on amendments to the civil rights bill. This has been a historic Congress in many respects. The admission of Hawaii into the Union is a matter of history. The constitutional amendment regarding the District of Columbia voting rights for President and Vice President is a historical event. I do not want to get into that at this time, when I am just trying to give some information to my colleagues to show that when the resolution comes up there should not be any opposition.

Mr. PELLY. The point I am raising is that we from the Pacific coast do not find it easy to sit around from Friday to Tuesday. We have a hard time with these recesses.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand the gentleman's situation; but when we go over from Thursday to Monday, we have completed the week's work available at that time, and the gentleman knows as well as I do it crowds up toward the end of the session. I personally sent two letters to chairmen of standing committees urging them to get bills out of their subcommittees and the full committee, bills that must be acted on during the session, recognizing months ago in my own mind the difficulty that might present itself as we approached June 30.

Mr. PELLY. If the gentleman will yield further, I certainly do not object; I favor the Members having an opportunity to go to their conventions. It is an important thing for everyone.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I know the gentleman wants to give all the facts. I think he will remember that when the 80th Congress adjourned in June of 1948 and came back in the fall it came back in a special session called by President Truman. It had completed all its work when it adjourned.

Mr. McCORMACK. We did not adjourn on June 30.

Mr. JUDD. We adjourned sometime in June of 1948.

We adjourned in June sine die, and were called back by President Truman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think we adjourned in June. It may have been in July.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct, as far as I know. The question I want to ask is simply this: If we reconvene on August 15, can the gentleman give us an estimate as to the time it will be necessary to finish the business by the House at that time?

Mr. McCORMACK. I wish I could answer that question. I cannot give an answer because that is dependent upon the considerations of the other body.

Mr. HOEVEN. May I say that the distinguished majority leader in the other body said, according to press reports, he thought 2 or 3 weeks would be sufficient. Would the gentleman concur in that estimate?

Mr. McCORMACK. I would think, knowing the majority leader of the other body, his personality and his qualities of leadership, that any opinion he expressed in that respect would be one we might give serious consideration to. On the other hand, there are times when majority leaders do not have complete control of the situation.

Mr. HOEVEN. I understand that, but will not the distinguished majority leader join me in expressing the hope we can conclude our business by Labor Day?

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely. If we pass the aid-to-school construction bill, the minimum wage bill, and the housing bill I think we can get through.

Mr. HOEVEN. By Labor Day?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GUBSER. I would like to make a suggestion to the distinguished majority leader, if I may. I do not think that any personal inconvenience to Members of Congress should be considered because we are elected to accept that inconvenience. But I am thinking of members of our staff. I would respectfully suggest to the majority leader that in the event that a Member requires that members of his staff go to the home district and then return following the recess, some consideration should be given to remuneration of those staff members in the way of transportation costs only. I hope the majority leader will consider that matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not immune to such consideration, but I have not complete control over that.

Mr. GUBSER. It is also my understanding that is a privilege which is accorded staff members in the other body.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I would like to inquire of the majority leader, and I assume we are going to recess, what the program is for this body before the recess comes up? In other words, what is to be considered before the recess?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state. I can state the program for today, but I am unable to state what it will be tomorrow. I shall do so later in the day.

In the 83d Congress, the 1st session met on January 3, 1953. Outside of Easter recess, the House adjourned on August 3, 1953. It did a pretty good job that year.

The second session met on January 6 and, outside of the Easter recess, adjourned on August 20. The Senate was in recess from August 20 to November 8 and from November 18 to November 29. The final sine die resolution was December 2, 1954.

The 1st session of the 84th Congress, outside of the Easter recess, adjourned sine die on August 2, 1955.

The second session met on January 3 and adjourned on July 27, 1956.

I may say that were it not for the conventions I am satisfied we would be able to adjourn this month. I have that firm conviction. I think the conventions bring about this situation that confronts us at the present time.

The 85th Congress, 1st session, outside of the Easter recess, adjourned on August 30, 1957.

The 2d session of the 85th Congress met on January 7, 1958, and adjourned August 24, 1958.

The 1st session of the 86th Congress met on January 7, 1959, and we adjourned September 15. I just wanted to give this information to show that we always, of necessity, have gone beyond June 30. I would like to have stayed here and adjourned sine die. I would like to have had the situation such where we could, but the situation is such where we cannot. In accordance with records of past sessions of Congress, they have gone well into July, and sometimes later months of the year. And, I repeat, I am satisfied that we would have been able to adjourn substantially before the end of July if it were not for the fact that two important national conventions take place this year; national conventions that we know are a very important part in the life of our country, not the life of the political parties alone but the life of our country, because no matter what one may say about a convention, out of that convention comes the nominee of the Republican Party and the nominee of the Democratic Party, and some one of those nominees for President and Vice President is going to be the next President and the next Vice President of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I certainly agree with the gentleman's statement with respect to these conventions. Certainly nobody would want to deny the members of either party the opportunity to attend their convention. Maybe the gentleman can refresh my memory, since he has looked up the record, but the gentleman, I think, said that the 1956 adjournment, which was the last presidential election and the last year of a national convention, that we adjourned July 27. My memory seems to indicate that we adjourned prior to the convention of either party. Does the gentleman recall, Were the conventions in that year in August rather than in July? Maybe the gentleman can refresh my memory.

Mr. McCORMACK. My record here—and might I again take the House into my confidence—was prepared for me by the famous Dr. Miller, in whom everybody has such confidence. My record, as prepared for me by Dr. Miller, is that we adjourned August 2, 1955, the first session, and in the second session July 27, 1956.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. But in both of those years, I think the gentleman will agree with me, we adjourned before. Really the issue we have before us is the issue of getting through before the convention so that we do not get legislation thrown into the superpolitical charged atmosphere of a postconvention session. At least in 1952 and again in 1956, at least in those cases we adjourned prior to the convention. We arranged our business in such a way as to do so.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, the conventions must have occurred at a later date.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is right. Of course, in 1952 they did not, but what we did is we went right up to the day before the convention, because I remember Members having to fly out early that morning in order to get to Chicago in time for the national convention the next day.

Mr. McCORMACK. All I gave this information for was to show that the sessions have gone beyond June 30. I thoroughly recognize and appreciate the feeling of the Members. I feel it myself.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. There is a suggestion here that we could go almost to July 9 and still accommodate the desires to go to the convention.

Mr. McCORMACK. I assure the gentleman that a careful survey has been made. I think we could have completed the business of the House. We could have completed the business of the House because we could get final action on certain bills. But, after a careful survey, it was recognized that the other body just could not complete their business, and it would be unreasonable to expect it. And, if they could not, the logical thing to do was to take the recess Saturday rather than some day next week.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I certainly agree.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CRAMER. I should like to ask a question of the majority leader as to when this recess motion is expected to come up on the floor of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to answer that now. That is a matter of consultation. Of course, it cannot be later than tomorrow. I am not trying to avoid a direct reply, but I do not know. Again, it depends on what happens in the other body.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. May I ask the majority leader, in view of what he has just said, is that classified information?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

IRON ORE IMPORTS ENDANGER TACONITE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, according to a recent issue of Steel magazine the production of steel will drop to 60 percent of rated capacity during the July 4 holiday week. Roger Blough, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corp., confirmed this prediction the other day when he stated production of steel would level off at around 58 percent of rated capacity and remain at that level until August.

The drop in steel production will, of course, hit hard at steel-mill employees whose jobs are directly affected. Iron ore miners in northern Minnesota will also be hard hit since the demand for iron ore declines in direct ratio to cutbacks in steel production. As was pointed out recently in an article entitled "The Iron Ore Industry in Minnesota," by George Seltzer, associate professor of economics and industrial relations at the University of Minnesota:

> The level of iron ore operations in Minnesota is dependent upon factors external to the State. It will be noted that the demand for iron ore, like that of other primary materials, is derived from the goods ultimately produced. In 1955, for example, iron blast furnaces, steel furnaces, and sintering plants [whose output is used almost exclusively in iron and steel production] accounted for more than 124 million of a total of some 125 million long tons of iron ore consumed in the United States. It is obvious, then, that the rate of iron-ore operations in Minnesota is affected most directly by the level of iron production and steelmaking activity in the United States.

In other words, the demand for iron ore is directly related to variations in general business activity throughout the country, particularly variations in production of steel. During the recession of 1953–54, for instance, when steel production dropped from full capacity in 1953 to less than 70 percent capacity in 1954, Minnesota iron ore shipments dropped from 81,511,000 tons in 1953 to 49,081,000 tons in 1954. Production in 1955 climbed to 70 million tons; dropped slightly to 63 million in 1956; rose again to 68 million tons in 1957. During the 1957–58 recession when steel production fell from full capacity in December 1956 to less than 55 percent of capacity in the first half of 1958, Minnesota iron ore shipments dropped again to a low of 42,836,000 tons in 1958.

IRON ORE IMPORTS CONTINUE TO RISE

A drop in steel production with the accompanying cutback of domestic iron ore production this year raises the question once again of iron ore imports which do not seem to be affected in the same degree by steel cutbacks as is domestic production. Iron ore imports have increased four-fold since 1950, from 9.2 million net tons to 39.9 million net tons in 1959. The great bulk of the increase comes from Canada and Venezuela. In 1950, 2.1 million net tons of iron ore were imported from Canada. Last year Canadian imports totaled 15 million tons—a sevenfold increase. Venezuela, in 1950, was not a source of iron ore for this country. Last year 15.2 milion tons were imported from that country.

Steel magazine predicts that more than 44 million tons of iron ore—a new record—will be imported by American steel mills this year. These imports are expected to fill about 33 percent of our steel mills' total requirements of 135 million tons.

According to Steel magazine the reason for the great increase in importation of iron ore is twofold. First, because iron ore is becoming a scarcer natural resource in this country. Second, because it is cheaper to mine ore and transport it at the lower wage rates in foreign countries and in foreign ships than it is to pay the American rates.

U.S. IRON ORE SUPPLY PLENTIFUL

It is certainly true that the domestic supply of high-grade, direct-shipment iron ore is dwindling. But to say that iron ore is becoming a scarce natural resource in this country simply is not true. According to a geological survey recently published by the Department of Interior, the United States has approximately 84 billion net tons of iron ore resources. At the present rates of use this is enough iron ore to last for the next 622 years.

Admittedly, the survey's total of 84 billion tons includes only about 11.2 billion tons of crude ore reserves which the Department of Interior says can be used under present economic and technological conditions. That is enough for the next 82 years at present consumption—time in which the remaining 72.8 billion tons can be developed as a source of iron ore.

Thus it seems apparent that the real cause of the spurt in iron ore importation seems to be strictly economic and not out of any true concern for the conservation of a natural resource. As Business Week for August 9, 1958, put it:

> The issue now is mainly over where the mining industry will do its new capital spending—here or abroad.

In other words, will the U.S. iron ore mining industry develop their newly acquired holdings of high-grade, direct-shipment iron ore abroad or will it develop low-grade deposits which abound in great quantity in the United States?

MINNESOTA TACONITE DEVELOPMENT

In northern Minnesota, for instance, we have at least 5 billion tons of usable magnetic taconite, a superhard rock laced with iron. Some estimates of taconite reserves go as high as 10 billion tons. Three tons of taconite produce one ton of high-grade iron ore. Thus, assuming the lowest estimate to be correct, 1.7 billion tons of usable high-grade iron ore are waiting to be developed in northern Minnesota, enough to furnish our entire iron ore needs from this single source for 12½ years. Keep in mind that these estimates relate only to magnetic taconite. According to Professor Setzer:

> There are also large quantities of nonmagnetic taconite which are not suitable for commercial beneficiation by present methods. Research in this latter area is in process.

In recent years, more than $600 million in private capital has been invested in northern Minnesota for magnetic taconite development and already two plants with a potential of 25-million-ton combined capacity are in operation. Just recently the Reserve Mining Co., the first plant of its kind in this field, announced a $100 million expansion of its Babbitt-Silver Bay plant which began operations in 1956. The Erie Mining Co. began taconite operations in 1957 at its Hoyt Lakes plant.

However, the taconite surface has hardly been scratched in northern Minnesota. At the same time, the largest producers of once plentiful Minnesota high-grade iron ore have taken the lead in developing foreign ore fields while all but neglecting their own huge taconite holdings in northern Minnesota.

The United States Steel Corp., for instance, an extensive importer of iron ore from Venezuela and elsewhere, has not installed commercial-scale taconite facilities but limits its program in Minnesota to a "pilot" taconite research plant. In April 1958, the president of United States Steel, Clifford F. Hood, told the Governor of Minnesota:

> It is doubtful that the output of additional taconite facilities would find a market except at the expense of existing Minnesota production.

Not long afterward, United States Steel announced plans to build an iron-ore taconite concentrating mill in the Quebec, Canada, area capable of producing 8 million tons of concentrates—one plant with two-thirds the present capacity of Minnesota's two existing taconite beneficiation plants. It is obvious that the development of iron-ore sources elsewhere can only have the effect of extending the timelag in the installation of additional taconite processing facilities in Minnesota, in addition to reducing demand for existing Minnesota production.

FEDERAL ACTION REQUIRED

Thus, the issue facing the major segments of the domestic mining industry has obviously been resolved and the decision to invest abroad has been made. The resolving of this issue at the private level has had grave public consequences. Unemployment in northern Minnesota and other iron ore mining areas is heavy and persistent and has been for the past 3 years. Most of these areas are single-industry areas depending almost entirely on the iron ore mining industry. The decline of the domestic iron ore industry will result also in our dependence on foreign sources of iron ore which could be disastrous in time of national emergency. Finally, imports have delayed the development of the taconite industry.

The most striking aspect of the decision by the mining companies to develop their foreign holdings is that it is done with the obvious blessing and encouragement of the Federal Government, and especially the present administration through favorable trade treatment and tax policies.

For instance, iron ore duties were removed in 1913 and today iron ore continues to come into this country absolutely duty free under paragraph 1700 of the Tariff Act of 1930. Pursuant to a concession granted by the United States in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade the duty-free status of iron ore was bound against imposition of any import restrictions. According to a 1955 Tariff Commission report to the House Committee on Ways and Means:

> So long as this concession remains in effect any legislation providing for a duty on imports of iron ore or any other import restrictions would be inconsistent with international obligations of the United States.

On June 20, 1960, I received a report from the Tariff Commission which stated that its position has not changed since 1955. Therefore, any legislative proposals to impose import duties or quotas on iron ore obviously stand no chance of passage or approval. Even if such a bill could possibly pass Congress it would be swiftly vetoed by the President. The introduction of such legislation is an obvious gimmick to create an appearance of action when in fact it is nonexistent.

Protected in its duty-free status by not only our own laws but by international commitments as well, the importation of foreign produced iron ore has grown, as we have seen, by leaps and bounds. Up until just recently imports were of little consequence in the total iron ore picture. But when an imported natural resource commodity suddenly becomes the source of one-third our national needs it is time to take another look and not necessarily be bound by a tariff decision made in 1913 and continued ever since.

ESCAPE CLAUSE INVESTIGATION

An iron ore import investigation was started in January 1959, by the Tariff Commission, which held 1 day of hearings on the subject. It was conducted under the provisions of section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930 pursuant to a resolution adopted July 29, 1958 by the Senate Committee on Finance.

The resolution called for a report by the Tariff Commission on or before March 1, 1959, which was to contain a description of the domestic industry, domestic production, foreign production, imports, consumption, channels of distribution, U.S. exports, prices of domestic and imported ore, the U.S. customs treatment since 1930 and a summary of the facts obtained in the investigation.

This was a worthy objective. Since last March, when the report was submitted, we have had accumulated and compiled in one volume all the information we knew to exist before. The Tariff Commission's study turned up nothing new and made no recommendations. It was a monumental and valuable work of factfinding but little else since we know that any tariff or quota legislation which might possibly grow out of it would be opposed by the Tariff Commission and the President on the ground that any legislative restriction of iron ore imports would be inconsistent with our international obligations.

It must be remembered, however, that the iron ore trade agreement concession in the GATT is subject to the "escape clause" of that agreement under which the concession may be withdrawn or modified under conditions set forth in section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended. That section established procedures for invoking the escape clause of trade agreements whenever, as a result in whole or in part of the duty or other customs treatment reflecting a trade-agreement concession, a product is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities, either actual or relative to domestic production, as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive products. An interested party who believes the foregoing conditions exist with respect to a product on which a concession has been granted in the GATT may file an application with the Tariff Commission for an investigation under section 7 of the extension act. In addition, such an investigation can be initiated by Congress. I am pleased to announce that the Senate Committee on Finance has adopted a committee resolution which directs the Tariff Commission to initiate an escape-clause investigation pursuant to section 7 of the Trade Agreements Act of 1951, as amended to determine whether iron ore is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities, either actual or relative, as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic iron mining industry. It is only logical, in view of the Commission's 1959 report, that this investigation be made. This escape-clause investigation is in conformity with existing law and merely goes the next step beyond the Tariff Commission's investigation of last year to the consideration of the feasibility of controlling to a limited degree at least the importation of iron ore so that this country will not become a dumping ground for foreign ores to the detriment of our own domestic iron ore industry, especially the infant industry taconite.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

In addition to the escape-clause investigation, I propose the enactment of legislation known as the trade adjustment program. Under my proposal, the Tariff Commission would follow its present procedure of holding hearings to determine the extent of injury resulting from increased imports. If a finding of injury is made and the President, as is his right under existing law, does not alter existing trade practices which caused the injury, then the area affected would be entitled to certain types of assistance.

Workers would have available to them supplementary unemployment compensation benefits, earlier retirement under social security, retraining for new job opportunities, and transportation to new areas of employment.

Industrial firms would be able to obtain loans, technical information, and the privilege of accelerated amortization for the purpose of development of new or different lines of production.

Communities or industrial development corporations within communities would have access to loans, technical information, and market research.

A brief summary of my bill, prepared by the Library of Congress, follows:

ANALYSIS OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1960

1. Authorizes the appointment of a special board to be known as the Trade Adjustment Board consisting of five officers and employees of the executive branch of the Government who will serve without additional compensation to their normal salaries as Government employees. Permits the Board to conduct hearings, to secure information, subpena witnesses, and to provide assistance to communities, industries, business enterprises, and individuals in order to facilitate adjustments made necessary by the trade policy of the United States.

2. Permits the President to refuse to accept the recommendations of the Tariff Commission under the mechanisms of the escape clause, etc., and to invoke this act after which the Board shall receive applications from communities, industrial development corporations, business enterprises, employees, or organizations representing employees for certificates of eligibility. The Board shall issue such certificates to parties engaged in the production of articles identical to or competitive with the articles found to need tariff adjustment by the Tariff Commission.

3. Directs the Board in determining eligibility to consider the extent to which the employees and business enterprises or communities are affected by the injury suffered by the domestic industry and whether communities, business enterprises, and industrial development corporations have developed satisfactory programs for adjustment.

4. Permits loans for economic adjustment purposes under the Small Business Act without the usual limitation on the amount to be loaned.

5. Authorizes the Secretary of Labor to enter into agreements with States whereby supplementary unemployment compensation benefits may be paid to individuals eligible for the benefits of this act. Such payments would be equal to 66⅔ percent of his average weekly earnings to extend for a period of 52 weeks.

6. Directs the Secretary of Labor to provide suitable vocational rehabilitation training for unemployed individuals and authorizes him to certify older workers to be unemployed as a result of the international trade policy of the United States and amends the Social Security Act to permit individuals to retire at age 60.

7. Permits eligible business enterprises and communities to take advantage of accelerated amortization provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

The enactment of such a program is a necessary "backstop" to the escape-clause proceeding. Even if a finding of an injury is made by the Tariff Commission under an escape-clause action there is no assurance that anything will be done about it by the President. The Tariff Commission's inquiry goes only to the question of the injury itself and not to the many extra factors which the President will take into account in reaching a final decision. If these extra factors result in the President's not taking action then the affected area is left with what it had to start with—an injury with no relief. The trade adjustment program recognizes the importance of a liberal trade policy but recognizes also the Federal Government's responsibility to those areas adversely affected by that policy through no fault of their own.

CONCLUSION

In the past I have taken a firm stand against iron ore import quotas or tariffs. I have always supported our reciprocal trade program and have long recognized the need to develop a supplemental source of iron ore outside our own borders. With our growing population and expanding industrial base we will need all the ore we can get from all sources. However, with the development of the Canadian and Venezuelan ore fields and with new finds in Brazil and Africa just beginning to produce, it has become apparent that U.S. producers have turned to foreign ores for more than a supplement to their domestic supply. What is more they have done so with the help of Federal policies and to the detriment of the development of our own domestic supply of low-grade iron ores.

Under these circumstances we are no longer dealing with a traditional trade problem. This is not a case where foreign goods are competing unfairly with American products thus promoting their importation. This is a case of a foreign commodity owned and produced by U.S. interests coming into the country under the most favorable trade and tax conditions thereby making it possible for those same U.S. interests to ignore domestic resources which must be developed to insure a continued adequate supply of iron ore within our borders.

Under the escape-clause investigation, consideration will now be given to a possible restriction of iron-ore imports, especially during periods of slack iron-ore demand due to steel production cutbacks. It should be completed in the next 6 months. Next January Congress can then consider enactment of the trade adjustment program. Mr. Speaker, the development of taconite and the general expansion of the economic base of northeastern Minnesota is important to the entire Nation. I am pleased that the problem is finally receiving proper national attention and consideration.

PAYMENTS TO BERNALILLO COUNTY, N. MEX.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 11545) to amend the act of October 31, 1949, with respect to payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care for certain Indians.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am wondering how much time this bill is going to take.

Mr. ROBERTS. It will require no time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ROBERTS]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the next to the last proviso in subsection (b) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act authorizing an appropriation for the construction, extension, and improvement of a county hospital at Albuquerque, New Mexico, to provide facilities for the treatment of Indians", approved October 31, 1949, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1960" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1963."

With the following committee amendment:

First page, line 10, strike out "1963" and insert "1961".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO AMEND FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 561 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9996) to amend section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to prescribe procedures to insure that foreign excess property which is disposed of overseas will not be imported into the United States to the injury of the economy of this country. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Government Operations, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume; following which, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 561 provides for consideration of H.R. 9996, a bill to amend section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to prescribe procedures to insure that foreign excess property which is disposed of overseas will not be imported into the United States to the injury of the economy of this country. The resolution provides for an open rule, with 1 hour of general debate.

The purposes of H.R. 9996 are to revise and improve existing law dealing with the importation of foreign excess property; to make unlawful the importation of such property if it would result in undue loss of production or employment in the United States; to give the Secretaries of Commerce and Agriculture authority to make determinations and regulations to carry out the law; to provide for forfeiture of property imported in violation of law and other penalties; and to permit the temporary importation of property for certain purposes under bond.

Foreign excess property is property owned or controlled by an agency of the U.S. Government, not required for its needs but located outside of the continental United States and certain territories. Under existing law, such property may be disposed of by sale or otherwise, but only with a condition forbidding its importation into the United States unless a determination is made that its importation "would relieve domestic shortages or otherwise be beneficial to the economy." Application for a determination or permit must be made by the importer. If granted, the property may be brought in.

The principal effect of the bill would be to permit the importation of foreign excess property unless it would result in undue loss of production or employment in the United States.

There is general agreement that the present law is deficient in various respects and after experience of 11 years should be reviewed.

Although there is little doubt that the Congress intended a restrictive policy when it enacted the law in 1949, there is now some question whether or not the fears of a great influx of foreign excess property into the economy were fully justified. It is also questionable whether or not the present distinction between foreign and domestic excess property is a practical one.

There has been little in the way of hard evidence that domestic industry has been hurt solely because of the importation of foreign excess property. Manufacturers and some dealers generally favor the restrictions imposed by the law, it is true, but this seems today to be based more on their general economic policy than on tangible cases of harm.

Foreign excess property is a small fraction of the total excess property disposed of each year and, according to information from the Department of Defense, is a declining amount.

The law imposes no restrictions on the disposition of domestic surplus property and except for advice given to the Department of Defense by the Department of Commerce under a voluntary agreement, there is no brake on its entry into the domestic market.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition to the rule. There may be objection to the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, from the Washington Post of this morning, I read the following:

Representative HOWARD W. SMITH, Democrat, of Virginia, leader of southern forces in the House, said that if Democrats "vote as they've been talking" a lot of them would vote against the recess plan. But it was expected that when it comes to a vote few Democrats would vote against RAYBURN on a procedural matter of this sort. It would constitute a vote of no confidence in the leadership.

RAYBURN said the recess resolution will pass and was quoted as saying that only a "legislative idiot" could believe that Congress can finish its work in another week.

Take that statement apart and put it together again and you have this: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]: "If Democrats vote as they have been talking"—and I assume they will, because I know they are conscientious and sincere—"a lot of them would vote against the recess plans." Then our respected and beloved Speaker, if correctly quoted, which we doubt, said only a " 'legislative idiot' could believe that Congress can finish its work in another week." See where we get. The gentleman from Virginia and others apparently will vote to recess because they think, as do most Republicans, that the House can finish all worthwhile business not later than a week from today. By "worthwhile" I mean sound, constructive legislation—not vote-buying measures. We have the distinguished Speaker saying that only a "legislative idiot" could believe that Congress can finish its work in another week. If we cut out campaigning conventions, considerations of unnecessary bills, we might even finish tomorrow.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. It seems to me this proves that difference of opinion still makes horseraces.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is true. I do not know about horseraces. I never lost any money on that, but I cannot agree that even a losing horse is a running "idiot." Those who vote to recess may be statesmen.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Perhaps the wisdom of delaying or recessing this Congress so that we can give more thought to the pending legislation will be more dramatized when I call the gentleman's attention and the body's attention to the fact that the minimum wage bill which we passed in rather hasty manner yesterday, according to the best figures I can get from experts, actually will exclude 14 million Americans who are now not covered by the act that we passed. This is the result of moving in haste on a vital matter.

I had thought of raising a question of the privilege of the House. Then, because that must be accompanied by a resolution, I could not figure out just what to put in the resolution, whether to have the House pass a resolution declaring that the Washington Post was once more mistaken or that someone had not correctly evaluated the voting intentions of our southern Democrats.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Some of us, and I am one of them, intend to vote against this resolution. In what category does the gentleman fall?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman belongs to that group of so many of us who will vote against the resolution but will not cry if the Democrats pass it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. I suggest that perhaps the Speaker could call that up tomorrow when he calls for a vote, if he says the intelligent should vote "aye" and the idiots should vote "no."

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course I think we could have finished our legislative work earlier if we had held fewer hearings—not made so many studies, confined our efforts to sound constructive legislation, not adjourned so many times on Thursday to the following Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to find out whether I will be opposed to this rule or not.

This bill, of course, is to permit excess Federal property abroad to be shipped back to this country. On page 5 of the committee report it is stated that under regulations established by the Department of Commerce, various authorizations may be given, and then it says:

If the authorization is granted, the goods may be entered duty free.

This is an amendment to the existing Federal Property Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended. Section 402 of that act is set out. But the question I would like to ask is where in the present law the Federal Property Administrative Services Act is a provision under which the Department of Commerce issues regulations permitting any goods to come in duty free? I cannot find it. I wonder if the Rules Committee had that information.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think the answer to the gentleman's question is based on the fact that these goods belong to the U.S. Government.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. But they are sold.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. They are not sold until they arrive back in the United States.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I think the gentleman is in error, although I could be the one who is in error. Actually it says the property is sold, and when sold may be imported back to the United States by the purchaser.

Now here is a situation in regard to other property that is abroad that might have been manufactured in the United States. If it is sold to another person and that person wants to bring it back to the United States, the ordinary duty that might apply on that kind of property is applied.

I would like to know whether or not the Secretary of Commerce has been acting under proper authority in the law in issuing such a regulation. I would like to know specifically where in the law he obtains that authority.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman: If goods are produced, manufactured abroad, and purchased abroad, is there still a tariff duty?

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Oh, yes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Now it is my understanding—and we spent 2 years on hearings on this legislation—that the Department of Commerce has consistently, under a license arrangement, permitted the reentry of these goods for sale in the United States, and the goods reimported, goods owned by the U.S. Government and manufactured in this country. It is to be presumed that the Department of Commerce had complete authority from someone, whether from your committee or the Congress or the Department of Justice, that there would be no duty assessed.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. That is the reason I raised the point in the discussion on the rule, because if there is a provision which would apply to the Tariff Act, which is in the jurisdiction of the committee of which I have the privilege of serving, the Ways and Means Committee, I was trying to find out where in the original act this authority might be vested. I cannot find it here, and without knowing where that authority is, it would seem to me this bill should not come before the House at this time until that point is determined, because I think this is very crucial in this debate that would be forthcoming.

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MEADER. I am glad the gentleman called attention to that passage on page 5 of the report. I will be frank to say that I was not aware of it.

I do not believe there is anything in the legislation before the House today, or which will come before the House if the rule is adopted, which would affect any tariff provisions which would have application to the United States surplus property sold abroad that is duty free today. It will be duty free under this bill; if it is not this bill could not make it duty free. It does not purport to affect that portion of the law. I am not aware, therefore, of the need for the statement in the report and I think it would be in order to address this question to the majority, because the preparation of a report always lies in the hands of the majority side of the committee, and I believe they could explain it better than it could be explained by some member on the minority side.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As I understand, pages 4 and 5 refer to existing law. It is not what is contained in the report that will be made in order by the rule.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I will say that had I been able to study this bill more fully I would have appeared before the Rules Committee, but I think under present circumstances we should give the bill consideration and when we get into general debate I will go into it in some detail.

At this point I would add, I have had an opportunity to check the law and I find the basic authority for goods manufactured in the United States which had been shipped abroad to be imported duty free lies in the Tariff Act of 1930, title 19, United States Code, section 1201, paragraph 1615 as amended by the Customs Administration Act of 1938. Before the 1938 amendment the importing of U.S. produced goods had to be done by the owner or in the owner's behalf to escape duty. However, the 1938 amendment changed the law so that the sole test of whether the goods will be duty free is whether they were produced in the United States and ownership is no criteria. Accordingly, the committee is correct in stating that the authority to allow U.S. surplus property of U.S. manufacture sold abroad to be imported into the United States by the new owner is well established in the law. However, I believe surplus property of the United States abroad which is not of U.S. manufacture or even U.S. made property to which value has been added through maintenance, repair, or addition cannot be admitted duty free when sold abroad as surplus.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Government Operations, but was reported by the Committee on Rules only after the adoption of certain amendments by the committee which will be offered by the committee if the rule is adopted and the bill is considered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman tell me how far the Rules Committee went into a discussion of this legislation?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It went far enough into the whole matter that it did not report a rule on the legislation as reported from the Committee on Government Operations, but instead advised the committee the bill would not be acceptable for a rule unless certain technical amendments were included by the Committee on Government Operations. The committee met and unanimously adopted the amendments and reported back to the Rules Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman will yield further, did they submit in their report to the committee any explanation that showed the different types of these surpluses?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes, we had rather complete information. The hearings are available. The details will be explained when we get into a consideration of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman well knows that in the State of West Virginia we have one of the largest tool plants in the country. I am speaking of the Baldwin-Ames plant at Parkersburg, West Virginia. They violently oppose this legislation. Right now products from West Germany are practically driving them out of business.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think the gentleman has confused the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act with this measure.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I have not.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This bill would not permit the bringing into this country of any foreign manufactured products.

Mr. BAILEY. But, however, the products come in here they are going to cause a glut on the American market.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This bill specifically prohibits such a thing from happening. American industry and labor are safeguarded.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall listen with considerable interest to debate on the bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PUCINSKI].

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House to what happens when we try to stampede legislation through this body. Yesterday, if you recall, a motion was sustained to end debate on amendments to the minimum wage bill in 20 minutes which allowed about a minute apiece. An amendment to the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Mississippi and he was limited to less than a minute to discuss his amendment. At the time I am sure no one knew the effect of that amendment, simply because we were not permitted to examine it, but we know now that it is going to eliminate from fair labor standards coverage 14 million people now covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

This amendment, as it appears in the RECORD, will leave 10 million people covered instead of the 24 million that have been covered by the act since it was adopted in 1938, and it will further reduce the coverage proclaimed by the sponsors of the substitute bill adopted yesterday who told the House their bill would extend covering to 1.4 million. Under the Smith amendment that figure will be reduced to 500,000.

What the Smith amendment does is to say that the fair labor standards shall apply, for practical purposes, only to those who work in cities of 250,000 or more. The sponsors of the substitute bill are today faced with the prospect of having forced upon the House legislation which instead of increasing minimum wage coverage for underpaid Americans, as our committee bill originally proposed, would actually remove from the Fair Labor Standards Act some 14 million American workers. The coalition was so anxious to pass the substitute measure that reason and sound judgment was swept aside by passion. Now, we are faced with the possibility of having no improvement in minimum wage standards, despite President Eisenhower's plea for such legislation, because the members of his own party rammed this poorly drafted amendment through the House.

These are the consequences brought about by trying to rush and ram legislation through this body. It will continue to exist so long as the coalition insists on sweeping aside committee recommendations and writing ill-conceived legislation on the floor of the House.

So there can be no question as to the accuracy of my interpretation of this amendment, I should like to read to the House a letter I have just received from the U.S. Department of Labor:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, WAGE AND HOUR AND PUBLIC CONTRACTS DIVISIONS,
Washington,. D.C.

Hon. ROMAN C. PUCINSKI,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PUCINSKI: This is in response to your oral request for a summary of the effects of the Smith amendment to the bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act which was passed on June 30, 1960.

This amendment would appear to broaden the "area of production" exemption, section 13(a)(10) of the act, so that it would apply to any individual employed in a county in which an agricultural or horticultural commodity, including livestock or poultry, is produced in commercial quantities, except that the exemption woud not extend to employment in the corporate limits of a city of 250,000 or more population. The result would probably confine minimum wage and overtime protection under the Fair Labor Standards Act, with few if any exceptions, to employment in the large cities.

As I read the amendment, its enactment would remove 14 million of the 24 million workers now protected by the minimum wage provisions. The great bulk of these workers would also be denied overtime protection to which they are presently entitled.

Additionally, it appears that as a result of the amendment, the number of newly covered workers would be 500,000 instead of 1.4 million as estimated before the Smith amendment was added.

In reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 30 (p. 15223), it would seem that the amendment was intended to concern only the agricultural processing industries. However, the text of the amendment seems to go much further as indicated above.

Sincerely yours,
CLARENCE T. LUNDQUIST,
Administrator.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that these are the type of mistakes that can be made and will be made so long as this Congress insists on ramming legislation through in a hurry by permitting a coalition to gag discussion on these vital issues. This is a mistake that could affect 14 million workers. Actually it seems to me this mistake could very well preclude any extension or improvement in the Fair Labor Standards Act this session.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUCINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WOLF. I want to congratulate the gentleman for making this statement. The information he is giving us is very important. I feel it should be heard by all the Members. I hope the gentleman will bring this to the attention of the other body. I congratulate him for taking such prompt action and bringing to our attention the full effects of this amendment.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH].

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 172]

Alford	Garmatz	Pilcher
Anfuso	Jackson	Preston
Auchincloss	Johnson, Calif.	Roosevelt
Bennett, Mich.	Jones, Ala.	Shelley
Bentley	Karth	Sheppard
Blatnik	Kearns	Smith, Iowa
Blitch	Keogh	Smith, Kans.
Bowles	Kilburn	Spence
Brown, Mo.	McMillan	Steed
Buckley	Macdonald	Taylor
Budge	Mason	Teague, Tex.
Burdick	Minshall	Thompson, N.J.
Cooley	Mitchell	Tollefson
Diggs	Morris, Okla.	Vinson
Durham	Passman	Younger

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 386 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

AMENDING FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT OF 1949

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that due to my error in drafting the amendment or an error in the transcription, the amendment which I offered yesterday to the substitute bill which was adopted by the House could be so interpreted that it would under any condition take out from coverage any workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act other than those who would be subject to the interpretation of the area of production in agricultural areas.

The amendment, as I stated on the floor, is designed only to write into law a definition of "area of production," whereas today that term is subject to definition by the Secretary of Labor. As I drafted the amendment it was to the effect that workers in agricultural processing and handling industries within counties where that agricultural commodity is grown commercially would be exempt from the law. That has been the intent of the Congress since the first act was passed. But because the definition has been left to the Secretary of Labor there has been some confusion, as I pointed out. They have used the figure of 2,500, where an establishment is in a town of that size or within 1 mile of it. My amendment is to eliminate that unfair coverage in that case and in others.

Because of the mistake in the drafting of the amendment I have already been in conference with the chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor to make it clear that there was no idea whatsoever that the amendment did anything more than what I have just said.

On yesterday time did not permit full explanation of the legislative intent of the amendment. I feel sure the Members of the House know I would not under any circumstances mislead them about any feature of legislation or amendment I might offer, and I think my legislative intent was clear. Unfortunately, yesterday, I did not have a great deal of time to explain the amendment. There certainly was no effort made to put it through without explanation. When the distinguished chairman of the committee sought to limit debate I objected in order to get more time.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I want to thank him for the explanation he is making.

I think there is no question but what the amendment will be promptly rewritten to properly carry out the purpose for which it was offered, and I hope no Member of the House will entertain any idea that I had the slightest ulterior purpose in mind when I offered the amendment.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. I would like to say that the gentleman discussed his amendment with me and the impression I got at that time is as he expressed it here today.

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. I feel sure that the Senate in its consideration of the legislation will correct the situation.

AREA OF PRODUCTION

Let me emphasize that my amendment is designed to do just one thing, and one thing only. It defines the area of production of any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including livestock and poultry, to include every county in which the commodity is commercially produced, the only limitation being that the area of production shall not include a city with a population of 250,000 or more, as reported in the 1960 census.

The need for this amendment is clear. When the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938, Congress recognized the need for exempting certain types of employment relating to agriculture. Included among these are processes and operations involved in preparing for market and handling agricultural commodities. This exemption was applied within the area of production of the particular commodity involved. The Congress, however, gave the Secretary of Labor the authority to say what the area of production included.

Unfortunately the Secretary of Labor's definition of "area of production" has led to considerable inequity and confusion.

The extent to which this definition has nullified the intent of Congress is illustrated by the fact that cotton warehouses located in my home county, where growing cotton is the major source of income of the people, are not considered by the Secretary's definition, to be in the area where cotton is produced.

My amendment simply defines the area of production and in no way changes the type of workers exempted. To repeat, the area of production of an agricultural commodity under the definition includes the counties in which the commodity is grown commercially—except for cities of over 250,000 population.

The act as changed by my amendment would read as follows:

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 13. (a) The provisions of sections 6 and 7 shall not apply with respect to (10) any individual employed within the area of production, which shall include all of each county in which any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including livestock and poultry, is produced in commercial quantities, except that it shall not include the corporate limits of a city or municipality having a population in excess of two hundred and fifty thousand as reported in the 1960 census, engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas to make a unanimous consent request.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks immediately following the vote to override the veto on the pay raise bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BALDWIN] for a consent request.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my remarks in the RECORD immediately before the passage of the conference report on H.R. 7634.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. QUIE] for a consent request.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD following the vote to override the veto on the pay raise bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9996) to amend section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to prescribe procedures to insure that foreign excess property which is disposed of overseas will not be imported into the United States to the injury of the economy of this country.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 9996 with Mr. BOLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] for 30 minutes.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to take some time and move rather slowly on this legislation. From the conversations I have heard during the discussion on the rule, it is obvious there is a great deal of misunderstanding concerning this legislation. I will do my best to clarify exactly what we are attempting to do here and I hope to dispel any misunderstanding. I want to start out by assuring my colleagues that the committee in bringing out this bill does not seek to do injury to anyone, it does not seek to do injury to any industry, any business, or to the economy of the United States. Quite the contrary, we were very mindful of these factors and we believe that we have taken them carefully and fully into consideration. I am sure when I have concluded my discussion most of you will agree with me.

I would like to start out and get the frame of references on this legislation—that is, the act itself. We are dealing with the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, as amended, particularly and specifically with a section thereof. I want to briefly review the declaration of policy on the part of Congress in adopting that original act which we now seek to amend by this legislation.

Section 2: It is the intent of the Congress in enacting this legislation to provide for the Government an economical and efficient system.

Then it goes into other matters down to subsection (c):

The disposal of surplus property.

This is a part of the congressional intent in passing the act.

An economical and efficient system for the disposal of surplus property.

Still reading from the act:

The term "excess property" means any property under the control of any Federal agency which is not required for its needs and the discharge of its responsibilities as determined by the head thereof.

The term "foreign excess property" with which the section we seek to amend specifically deals means any excess property located outside the continental United States, Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Going over to the section of the act which this bill specifically seeks to amend:

SEC. 402. METHODS AND TERMS OF DISPOSAL. Foreign excess property—

And keep in mind the definitions which I have just alluded to—may be disposed of by (a) sale, exchange, lease, transfer—

And so forth—

but in no event—

This is the present law I am reading—shall any property be sold without a condition forbidding its importation into the United States.

In other words, the disposing agency overseas shall sell the property but only with a condition forbidding its importation into the United States. I emphasize that fact because this is a contractual provision between the disposing agency of the U.S. Government and the purchaser at the time. This is one of the problems with which we deal. The act provides a condition forbidding property importation unless the Secretary of Agriculture, in the case of agricultural commodities, or the Secretary of Commerce, in the case of other property, determines that the importation of such property would relieve domestic shortages or otherwise be beneficial to the economy of this country. Upon such a finding, then the condition no longer applies, an import permit is issued and the property may then be brought in. This is the present law.

Now, keeping that frame of reference, I would like to discuss very briefly how the Committee on Government Operations got into this problem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. I was following your reading on page 2 of the bill——

Mr. FASCELL. I was reading out of the act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. The comittee report does not agree with what you read. In section 402 "injurious to the economy of this country" is the way the law reads at the present time, and you are striking that language out.

Mr. FASCELL. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. That provision there is the way it was originally in our legislation. That is now being changed by virtue of the amendment.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Now, the Committee on Government Operations got into this problem back in 1958. I want to bring this out, because I have been asked the question, where did this bill originate? So, I want to tell you. It originated with the committee and with the department. Back in 1958 we had some complaints from manufacturers and dealers with respect to the administration of the present law. Basically the complaint was that because of administrative difficulties within the department there did not seem to be any definite criteria for determination on when property would come in and when it would stay out. It seemed like one case would be decided one way one time and another way another time. This was what the committee was confronted with when it held hearings in 1958 on this particular section of the law.

We went into this matter and took a considerable amount of testimony, mind you now, dealing with the administration of the present law by the Department of Commerce. We got through with those hearings and we issued a report which basically said to the Department, "All right, now, let us tighten up your procedure there so that anybody that comes to you will have definite rules to follow, and also let us set out criteria so that any businessman, be he a manufacturer, dealer, or importer, can come here and each will understand and see for himself what these criteria are."

The Department went ahead. They shuffled some personnel around, issued rules and regulations, and they began to follow the recommendations of the Committee on Government Operations with respect to this law.

After a period of time, about a year, we found that by the establishment of rules and regulations, and by the establishment of procedures and criteria, the complaint was then made on the other side of the scale that the administration of this law now had become so strict that it was hurting other American businessmen, the importers. So, we held hearings on this complaint.

Basically the committee has agreed that as a result of the department trying to comply with the original recommendation of the Committee on Government Operations it has brought about this result. We therefore took upon ourselves, the committee and the Department, to examine the law to determine what could be done or what should be done with respect to its modification, to improve its administration, to make it more equitable for everyone. The result of that has been this bill. We have been at this a long time, mind you, starting back in 1958.

The counsel for the Department of Commerce testified, speaking with respect to the effect of the administrative problems of the present law:

The administration of section 402 has been troublesome in the extreme.

This is the Department speaking now.

The criteria expressed in section 402 have been difficult to interpret and to apply.

We, as I say, have worked with the Department in arriving at the language which they feel would be suitable, which they feel is proper to carry out their responsibility as expressed.

They believe at the present time, and the committee is so advised in writing, that the present bill as reported by the committee, with the committee amendments, will do the job.

I want to refer also specifically to the testimony of Mr. Drumm in the committee hearings. He was the Assistant Director of that section in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Drumm, according to the thinking that you have done, would the change from the general criteria of injury to the economy to the new language "production and employment—make any real difference in the amount of goods that would be imported into the country?

Which is the criteria.

We will get into that question. He says not necessarily so, but—

We have a more readily workable basis.

Then again he says:

So if you apply the criterion of production and employment—

Which we do in this bill—

I think you have something that is more readily measurable.

This is the language which we have incorporated in the bill.

Let us examine the bill itself and its purposes. First of all, we provide that it shall be unlawful to import foreign excess property. You will recall that under the present law it does not state that at all. It says that property shall be sold only with a condition of sale, et cetera. That is a contractual obligation between the U.S. Government and the first purchaser. It does not affect any subsequent purchases for value, in good faith, without knowledge. It cannot be enforced, has not been enforced, and there is no way to enforce it.

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield.

Mr. BRAY. I am at a loss to understand exactly how this operates. This applies to property owned by the United States abroad and it has to do with shipping it back into the United States, is that correct?

Mr. FASCELL. Well, yes, it does. It is property that is owned abroad and which is disposed of abroad under the terms of this law.

Mr. BRAY. And then is returned to the United States, is that right?

Mr. FASCELL. No, sir; it is not returned automatically. It has to be sold.

Mr. BRAY. Let us assume we had goods in Italy owned by the United States. They sell it to someone abroad. This has to do with his bringing that property back into the United States?

Mr. FASCELL. Yes, sir. This bill provides that it shall be unlawful to bring that property into the United States unless a determination is made—and I will go into that if the gentleman will permit me to finish——

Mr. BRAY. I just want to get at what specific goods this applies to.

Mr. FASCELL. It applies to any property within the definition that I gave a moment ago under the present law which applies to excess property.

Mr. BRAY. I understand that, but I wanted to know whether it would apply to surplus rifles that would be sold abroad.

Mr. FASCELL. Any excess property.

Mr. BRAY. It would apply to excavating machinery, armament, things of that kind?

Mr. FASCELL. Any excess property. If the gentleman will permit me to finish, I will explain it. We do not change the definition of property at all. We do not enlarge upon it, we do not diminish it. I think I understand what the gentleman is driving at, but in order to be absolutely clear I will repeat it. That is the reason I started out by defining what we mean by excess property, and foreign excess property. The definition is still in the law. We do not change it. We do not add to it, we do not take from it. But we do make it unlawful to import.

That is what this bill does. It is not now in the present law. It is not unlawful under the present law. The present law only provides a condition. Under the proposed amendment we make it unlawful to bring property in unless there has been a determination. That means we are tightening up the law in that respect because this brings them under existing criminal laws, the Smuggling Act. We also provide in here something that is not provided in the present law—forfeiture of property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Right in line with what the gentleman is saying, turning to page 4, is not this what the present law provides? It determines that the importation of such property would be injurious to the economy of this country. Have you not changed that language and changed the burden of proof?

Mr. Chairman, I realize the Committee on Government Operations has spent a considerable amount of time studying this problem and would like to resolve it to the satisfaction of all concerned. The committee is to be commended for its thorough consideration of the problem. Unfortunately, I must disagree with the solution proposed by the committee. The solution is not going to please anyone and we will be confronted with this same problem next year.

Under the present law, at least we have a standard that is measurable. Under the committee's proposal, the Secretary, at best, would be in the realm of speculation. If he could determine the impact on production and employment as the result of one or more shipments of foreign excess property for sale on the domestic market, he would be much wiser than Solomon.

The committee report would indicate that we should concern ourselves with the revenue that would be derived from the sale of this foreign excess property on the domestic market. According to testimony before the committee, the Government realizes 7 percent of acquisition cost on sales of foreign excess property, while it only realizes 5 percent on the sales of surplus property disposed of in the United States. There is no indication that we are having difficulty in disposing of foreign excess property to foreign buyers. The economics of this situation and the justification for bringing this property back into the United States is beyond my comprehension. For every unit brought back it means one less unit produced in the United States. For the loss of every unit produced in the United States, we have lowered the number of productive hours of our workers. With less production and less employment, we have less Federal, State, and local taxes. We realize more on the disposal of foreign excess property than we do on disposal of domestic surplus—yet the only real benefit of bringing this property back would be lower domestic production and employment. We realize less on the sale and we realize less in the way of taxes—yet it is claimed that the return of this property would have an overall benefit.

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is not correct. I should like to go ahead and finish my statement. We have been over that once before. I will show what the amendments have done.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. If the gentleman will yield, may I suggest that he refrain from yielding until he has completely explained the bill to the House. I think the Members will better understand the provisions and what the gentleman is trying to explain.

Mr. FASCELL. I appreciate the gentleman's making that comment. I should like to finish my statement, and I believe that will answer many of these questions.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has raised the point, although unfortunately it is not correct. We do not use the words "injurious to the economy of this country." That was the original bill. That language has been changed, those criteria have been changed by a committee amendment that was adopted unanimously which says that it shall be unlawful to import such property into the United States after such sale or other disposition unless the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of Commerce determines that importation of such property would not result in undue loss of production or employment in any industry in the United States. The gentleman's copy of the bill does not have that in there. These are the committee amendments that have been adopted by the committee.

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. On page 2, what the gentleman read is not included in the bill.

Mr. FASCELL. I said that. The gentleman is correct. That is not there. That is an amendment which is a committee amendment, which is at the desk.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a clarification?

Mr. FASCELL. Yes.

Mr. STRATTON. Will my friend tell me if it is not correct that the action being taken in regard to splitting this legislation was at the request of those who wanted to import this material into this country? The reason it has been introduced is to make it easier to bring this material in. The situation was lax, then they tightened it up. Now the committee, as I understand it, is offering this bill so as to make it easier to bring this material into this country.

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is entitled to his own interpretation, if he wants to put that interpretation on it. I say that is not a fair or reasonable interpretation. The Department feels that having a more definite and measurable criteria this might liberalize the present law with respect to the issuance of permits for the importation of property. But before you get all excited and jump down my back and say that we are opening the floodgates to foreign properties coming into the United States, let me finish my statement. Then I will yield for more questions.

No. 1, as I stated, we make it unlawful now, and it is not unlawful in the present law. Does the gentleman or anybody state that is a liberalization or tightening of the law? From where I stand it is a tightening of the law. You can interpret it any way you like. We change the criteria. The criteria in the present law I read, and I will do it again:

> Unless the Secretary * * * determines that the importation of such property would relieve domestic shortages or otherwise be beneficial to the economy of this country.

We changed that criterion and we changed it because the Department said that the new criterion is one which they feel is more readily measurable and definable and more equitable in its interpretation, and will relieve them of a tremendous administrative problem which they have had on this law. So we say it shall be unlawful to import unless the Secretary makes the interpretation that it would result in undue loss of production or employment.

Then we added another amendment: "In any industry in the United States."

Mr. FLYNT. I dislike to interrupt, but if the gentleman will yield, is it not true that the committee amendment, as adopted by the Committee on Government Operations, is exactly as it appears on page 2, lines 9, and 10, rather than the language that the gentleman has just quoted?

Mr. FASCELL. I am happy to explain this again. The language "in any industry" which does not appear on page 2 of the bill is a subsequent committee amendment.

Mr. FLYNT. Would it not be more accurate to call it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. FASCELL. You can call it that if you like. But it was an amendment adopted unanimously by the committee. The only reason it does not appear is because this arose during the discussion on the rule.

Mr. FLYNT. Will you explain the meaning of the italic after the words stricken out in the preceding language?

Mr. FASCELL. That is a committee amendment.

Mr. FLYNT. The committee amendment does not contain the language that the gentleman quoted, but the amendment to the committee amendment would purport to do that.

Mr. FASCELL. All right. Technically, the gentleman is correct. Nevertheless the language is in the amendment at the desk to do what I have said. It was felt this would be a more accurate definition.

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WIER. I gather now that many of us have received considerable mail from the manufacturing companies.

Mr. FASCELL. I appreciate that.

Mr. WIER. But I imagine from listening to your explanation that many of those letters of protest have come as a result of the original bill?

Mr. FASCELL. That is true.

Mr. WIER. As I understand you now, these changes you made were since this propaganda went out?

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I tell you that in my honest judgment this committee has done everything in the world it could possibly do to protect American industries. The American importer still has to go to the Department, still has to get a determination.

We have not gone into other facets of this problem which bear on the equity of the situation, and I would like to do that before I yield any further.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Florida will proceed.

Mr. FASCELL. I am going to move along quickly now into the remaining parts of the bill. We have already covered two points so far showing what we seek to do under this bill: Make it unlawful to import, which is not in the present law; and we changed the criteria, which the Department feels is better.

We now come to something else. We give the Secretary of Commerce specific power to make rules and regulations dealing with this problem, something he has never had in the law heretofore. He has done it, but he has not done it under authority of law. Under this bill we give him that authority. That is not liberalizing. If anything it looks to me as though we are tightening up the law.

The next thing we do is this: The Secretary has been allowing the importation of this foreign excess property under bond for the purpose of being refurbished and repaired and then to reexport that property. It does not enter the economy of the United States at all. He has been doing that administratively. Under this bill we give him the authority to do it by law.

A number of Members have gotten letters and complaints expressing fears about the effect of property admitted under bond. The administration, even without the proposed law, has not been admitting that property into the economy of the United States. This bill will give him no right to do that. It continues, however, a very helpful practice of bringing excess property in under bond and allowing it to remain here for repair and refurbishing. That helps our economy. The person is then allowed to reexport it.

It looks to me as though we are tightening up the law.

Let us briefly get into another part of this problem. How big is it? What are we talking about in terms of size? Let us examine it. Here is a report of record; a report from the U.S. Department of Commerce made to our committee on foreign excess property for the calendar year 1959. In 1959 there were 370 cases considered by the Department. Listen to this: There were 370 cases considered by the Department. Approved for import, 68; disapproved for import, 272. Acquisition cost of property covered by the import applications received in 1959, was $75 million. In other words, the total value acquisitionwise of property for which application was approved was $75 million; disapproved, around $65 million worth. Acquisition cost on which authorization was issued was only $10 million worth. But only $3 million of property was finally imported.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-four Members are present, not a quorum.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 173]

Abbitt	Davis, Tenn.	Preston
Abernethy	Diggs	Rogers, Tex.
Alford	Evins	Scherer
Aspinall	Harrison	Smith, Iowa
Auchincloss	Jackson	Smith, Kans.
Barden	Kearns	Smith, Va.
Bennett, Mich.	Keogh	Springer
Bentley	Kilburn	Steed
Blatnik	Lesinski	Taylor

Bonner	Mason	Vinson
Bowles	Minshall	Willis
Brown, Mo.	Mitchell	Wilson
Buckley	Morris, Okla.	Withrow
Burdick	O'Hara, Mich.	Younger
Celler	Pilcher
Cramer	Powell

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 9996, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 383 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The Committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida, Mr. FASCELL.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has been so absorbing and exciting that I have run out of time. My colleagues have been promised time by me. I hope they will take time when we read the bill under the 5-minute rule, and I will be glad to answer any questions, and I am sure my colleagues on the minority side will do a very fine job.

Let me say this, we are not opening the floodgates for the importation of a lot of property. We are not trying to injure domestic industry, whether it be manufacturers or dealers or sales people. We believe we have a law which the Department says they can administer equitably. It gives them a provision for enforcement which will do a good job. I know many of you are concerned because you have heard from your people that this may injure them.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida if the committee did not amend the bill in an effort to protect domestic industry.

Mr. FASCELL. The gentlemen is absolutely correct. It has been pointed out before that many letters that expressed concern over this matter were probably directed to the original bill. The committee amendments which will be offered we believe take care of most of those objections, if not all. We believe we have a good bill and I trust it will be supported.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be able to help clear up some of the misunderstanding about this legislation if I am given an opportunity to make a statement without interruption, following which I will be glad to answer any questions I can, or to yield to my other colleagues on the committee.

First of all, let me say that for a number of years we have had a law, as explained by the gentleman from Florida, on the statute books, that permits the Department of Commerce in practically all cases—the Department of Agriculture in connection with a few—to issue licenses for the importation of Government-owned surplus property that was purchased in the United States and shipped overseas, then reimported into this country for sale.

For some time those import licenses were issued rather generously by the Department of Commerce. As suggested, there was a great deal of complaint from different industries in the United States that too many of these goods were flowing back into this country.

First of all, I think I should point out that it is the law, and the rule, that as much of this surplus property as possible shall be sold overseas before any is reimported into the United States.

Next, let me say very frankly to you that there have been a great many American manufacturing concerns that have not been at all dilatory in selling everything they possibly could to the Federal Government, whether the Federal Government wanted it, or needed it, or did not.

Let me also say that there has been a demand on the part of certain people called American taxpayers to recover something from the sale of this surplus property, and from all the money invested in it, that some part of it should be returned to the Treasury.

As a result of these complaints from industry against the licensing system of the Department of Commerce under which these goods flow back into the United States—we held hearings for months, and months, and months, during practically all of 1958. We found there was a good deal of justification to the complaints that had been made by some industries and some manufacturers as to the rather heavy shipment of these surplus commodities into this country. As a result of those hearings, and because we had the Department of Commerce officials before us they decided to tighten up on these licenses but asked us to give them a new and better law under which to operate. Thus this bill was brought into being, based on the recommendations of the Department of Commerce and officials of other departments of the Federal Government. However, the committee finds it did not go far enough to properly protect American industry and labor from these imports. Remember, it has not been unlawful, and is not now under present law, to import these surplus commodities back into this country after a license is issued by the Department of Commerce. There is nothing in the present law that prevents it. So we wrote into the pending bill a new concept, a new idea, to protect American industry and American labor from this flow of goods into this country.

We provide in this bill that it shall be unlawful to reimport these surplus goods unless certain things are first found by, either the Secretary of Agriculture in a few instances as the case may be, or the Secretary of Commerce in most instances, as is usually the case. For the first time it will be unlawful to import these commodities, and if anyone does import them in violation of the proposed law he will be guilty, under the Smuggler's Act, and could be prosecuted and sent to prison.

Now, let us go on for a moment. Unlawful unless what? Remember, there are amendments in this bill, you will see some of them, not all of them, others will be offered by the committee. Unlawful "unless the Department determines that the importation of such property"—to wit, this surplus property—"would not result in any undue loss of production or employment in any industry in the United States."

That is one of the amendments which will be offered. There has to be a positive finding by the Department before it will be lawful to import any of these surplus goods. There must be a finding it will not injure any industry or cause any unemployment, or affect production. None of that. This is pinned down, and it was my amendment that was adopted unanimously by the Committee on Government Operations, after the Rules Committee requested, that tightened the bill up.

I made that request, and I put in the words and suggested the amendment "in any industry."

What does that mean? It means on an application to import or reimport screwdrivers, the Department will not have to check the economy or the whole industrial picture of the United States or the national employment picture. The Department finds out whether or not it will have any undue effect on the screwdriver manufacturers in the United States, of which there may be a half dozen. It does not have to check everything. It might create unemployment in one district, but that might not affect the whole industrial picture, or the employment picture, in the entire United States. That is why we pinned it down in this bill to "any industry."

In other words, the Department cannot let it come in unless it makes an affirmative finding that it would not be injurious to the production of, or to the employment situation in, any industry in the United States.

Now, let me give you a few facts. I know that you have had a lot of letters, telegrams and messages from some of your industries back home. I know exactly why these messages were sent to you—and from whom they came—let me put it that way. I had notice served on me by the man who inspired them. Out in Ohio we call such men molders of public opinion and directors of legislative activity. This gentleman notified me and other members of the committee that he would build a fire under the committee, and under the bill, by putting the heat on, and so forth. He represents just one organization in this town, or just one group. Of course, he has a right to do so, I do not criticize him for that, but I know there has been a great deal of misinformation sent out because I have received hundreds and hundreds of letters from manufacturers and other organizations who thought this bill would injure them, but did not know or understand what was in it.

I sent copies of the bill out to many of these same manufacturers, in my State especially, and asked them to have their attorneys go over the legislation thoroughly. At least 75 percent came back and said "We do not see anything harmful in the bill, we think it will be helpful. This will protect our industry, this will protect us from these surplus importations."

This bill will not cause unemployment or reduce production in this country, or here at home. I have had attorney after attorney, some of them representing the biggest corporations in the United States, say that this bill gives American industries more protection than they have ever had under the present law, or ever will have.

Now, let us get down to brass tacks. If you want to follow the suggestions made by one man who represents one organization, all right. Maybe he does not want this bill enacted, I do not know. Maybe somebody can make more money under the old law, I do not know; but I do know that practically everybody who has read and studied this law, as it is amended, or will be amended by the committee amendment, says it gives greater protection than they have ever had before.

The Department of Commerce sets down guidelines, and it makes it easier for it to determine whether or not these importations would be injurious to production or to employment, because it only has to check within the one industry. Of course, anybody who is being injured by such a suggestion, to wit, the application for the right to import these goods, will immediately make a complaint. He will immediately say, "No, this will hurt us; this will cause greater unemployment in our industry," and then the Department cannot issue an import license under this bill. I do not know what more anyone wants to protect his industry. I think this is something that has to be done. I am not in the import business; I do not have any stock in any factory that would be affected by this bill one way or the other. So far as I am concerned, I do not give a whoop what you do about it, except I just hate to see a lot of my good friends and colleagues misled by the activities, and the messages sent out by one individual to a lot of people who have perhaps not read the bill, because every time we send them a copy of the bill as amended and explain it to them, almost unanimously—not quite, but almost unanimously—they come back and say this proposed law is wonderful; that it gives more protection than they ever had before. And, I do not like personally—and I say it to the gentlemen here at this time—to have some fellow primarily interested in some little group put the heat on me and, as he told the committee, he will make us all jump through the hoop. If you want to do that, all right; I do not care what you do, but I will not jump. I will stand on my own two feet, and not let any special paid representative of any group tell me what I am going to do as a Member of this body. I hope he will not be able to tell you what you should do. Anybody who wants to can disagree with this legislation. He can vote any way he feels about it. Here are the facts.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Florida that this bill does in some respects tighten up the present situation, and I am in favor of that. But I have some questions about the language on page 2, line 9, the committee amendment, with the additional language which will add "in any industry," which is at the Speaker's desk. I would like for the gentleman from Ohio, who has said this language will require a positive determination by the Secretary that the importation of these articles will not result in any loss of production or employment, to tell me what the word "undue" in that line means.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Well, if it means one person is out of a job, that would not be undue unemployment. There has to be some discretion. You cannot just say that we are going to have to let a janitor go. It is unlawful unless the Department first finds out it will not do that.

Mr. JONAS. But he has to find that it will not result in undue unemployment.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is right. The Department has to find that it will not result in those things, and the word "undue" means exactly what you and I understand the English language means. If it is inconsequential, does not have any real effect, then, of course, it is not undue. If it does have a real effect, it is an undue injury.

Mr. JONAS. Of course, it has an undue effect on the person who loses his job.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, if you get down to where you say it shall not affect any individual in the Nation at any time, that is going a little far afield. You cannot just say it affects a person by the name of Brown, who is paying taxes, for he ought to get a little money back for him without injuring anyone.

Mr. WALLHAUSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WALLHAUSER. I would like to say that I have had more than one industry communicate with me.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, sure. They broadcast these letters and telegrams from Washington all over; I know that.

Mr. WALLHAUSER. I should like to ask whether in the word "industry" you mean to include wholesalers, retailers, distributors?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Certainly, anybody connected with production and sale of any particular commodity.

Mr. WALLHAUSER. Furthermore, can the gentleman tell me how the Secretary of Commerce can determine in advance what influence it will have on any industry?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. He would be required to determine that as set out under this act. It is unlawful for him to issue any permit for these goods to come in unless he first checks with the industries affected to see what the results would be. And if he finds that the results would be bad, as stated in the bill, then he does not have the authority to give the license that the gentleman mentioned and the imports could not come in.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman has said that the passage of this bill would be helpful to the taxpayer. I wonder if the gentleman would not agree that under the present law it would be possible for an individual to have purchased some of this material for perhaps 2 or 3 cents on the dollar, to own it today; and if this legislation is adopted he would then be in a position to sell it at a substantial profit, but there would be no return to the taxpayers.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Whatever he paid for it would be returned to the taxpayers. To be frank with the gentleman, I do not know very many people who do not have the profit motive in mind when they buy from or sell to the Government.

Mr. STRATTON. If the man had already paid for it, whatever money was going to accrue to the U.S. Government has already accrued. The effect of this bill would be to make it possible for him to sell it here when otherwise he would not be able to.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If it has been imported he has the right to sell it. He has the right to sell it now under the proposed law.

Mr. STRATTON. Not in this country.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. He has the right under the present law to sell it if he has already legally brought it in or imported it.

Mr. STRATTON. He cannot import it without having gotten this certification.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, but they have been getting them. Why does not the gentleman come down here and hear the testimony, or attend some of these hearings. It is surprising how much you can learn when you have been around here a few years.

Mr. STRATTON. I appreciate I can be instructed by the gentleman. May I suggest the gentleman look at page 6 of the report. The report says that the reason for the introduction of this legislation was that importers of foreign excess property have been complaining that its application has amounted to a virtual moratorium.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As I explained in the beginning, when the first complaints were made, the Department ruled one way and let everything come in. Then after we jumped on them and had some hearings, they ruled the other way for awhile. Next month, if you leave the law as it is, and do not adopt this proposed legislation, they might decide to open the importation door for everything again, or the next man who is in charge of that office may decide to do so.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mrs. CHURCH. I thank the gentleman for his explanation. This proposed legislation still is bitterly opposed by many in my district. Do I understand that there is to be another amendment other than the committee amendment, to be offered?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The other amendment, the one that is not in the bill, consists of the words "in any industry" in the United States. That is added. It pins it down to any industry.

Mrs. CHURCH. It was my understanding that there was to be another amendment offered which would even more definitely protect American industry. The gentleman is not aware of that?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. There may be other amendments offered.

Mr. FLYNN. There is another amendment at the desk.

Mrs. CHURCH. I shall reserve my question, then.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand another gentleman has an amendment. That would come when we read the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MICHEL. May I say that I feel the same way the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS] indicated about the words "undue injury." For instance, in the tractor industry, perhaps the importation of 1 or 2 is not so many, or 25. But the kind of machines produced in our district sell for roughly $40,000 and represent 2,500 to 3,000 man-hours of work on each machine.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand the gentleman's problem. I think I know the company he has in mind, the Caterpillar Tractor Co. at Peoria, Ill. I have had communications from them. There is no question in my mind that the gentleman is right, that under this law the importation of 1 machine that takes 2,500 man-hours to build would be bound to have some injurious effect on the industry, or on employment, because they would not need those men to do the work if such a machine was imported.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JONAS. I looked up the word "undue." It means "excessive" or "immoderate." And a synonym for the word is "extreme."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not know which dictionary the gentleman consulted.

Mr. JONAS. The dictionary right here on the floor.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. But if you have a synonym that would be better than "undue" I would be willing to accept it.

Mr. JONAS. It means extreme.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not think that is the way it would be interpreted.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. (After counting) 120 Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Let me say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I know he is a very close student of the English language. If he would rather have in place of the word "undue," and will offer an amendment to insert the word "harmful", to read "a harmful loss of production and employment," I should be glad to accept an amendment of that type, personally.

Mr. ROUSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROUSH. My question is simply this: Do the new criteria which the present bill provides for make it easier or more difficult to import these surplus goods?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think it will make it more difficult, and you certainly would make it more fair. This bill would be a better guarantee that it would in no way injure American production or employment in these factories or within any industry, not generally all over the country, but within the industry.

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HECHLER. I gather that the gentleman's opinion is that the word "undue" is subject to the rather subjective judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce. I wonder if there is any standard by which those Cabinet members can judge.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As to the word "undue" the same thing happens under the present law. There has to be someone to administer, and make the final decision, in these cases. As I have said, if the word "harmful" would be more helpful than the word "undue", and would be interpreted as the gentleman from North Carolina has suggested he interprets it, it is perfectly satisfactory to me, because we would not support the making of a law where there would be any real harmful effect, whether we said "undue" or "harmful", or what.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. This material that has been imported and is in bond at present in this country—the gentleman from Florida mentioned it earlier—would this in any way affect that material which we now know is being held in this country?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If it is in bond, under a license permitted under the present law he could sell. If it is in bond, but not licensed, in other words, just for transportation out of this country to some place else, then of course it would come under the new law, if this bill became law was first passed before any import license was granted.

Mr. MICHEL. The gentleman stated in answer to a question by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROUSH], that this would not change the situation. Why, if it does not help the situation, do we want it?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Because they have not been helped by the present situation, but they have been sold a bill of goods by a certain group that seem to have a special interest.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not know whether I have any time left.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I want to ask with reference to two provisions. One is on page 2, such property may be disposed of without advertising when the head of the executive agency concerned finds that by so doing it would hurt the industry.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think that is in the general law now.

Mr. YATES. He may dispose of it without advertising. That is in the current law?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think so.

Mr. YATES. Is there also a provision in the current law that says the head of the agency may authorize the abandonment of foreign excess property?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It is my understanding there is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MEADER].

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has made an effort to strike a balance between conflicting interests. The manufacturers of property which becomes surplus abroad do not want any of it to come back here and impair their market in any way. The consumers of that equipment, particularly where it may be in short supply here, would like to get it if they can find it in any surplus property abroad.

Then also we have the interest of the taxpayers and businesslike operations of the Federal Government. When we have property we do not need, what we ought to do is to dispose of it as quickly as we can and get the best return we can out of it and not hang on to it. We should not clutter up the disposal processes so that the taxpayers do not get anything out of the property which they own. Limiting markets in which surplus property can be sold is one way of impeding the disposal process and impairing a reasonable return from surplus property.

Now this has been quite a spirited discussion, much more so than the importance of the subject matter justifies. I would like Members to turn to page 16 of the hearings, to the testimony of Colonel Rey, Defense Department disposal, March 1 of this year:

Colonel REY. There has been very little coming into this country. Are you interested in what we are disposing of?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Colonel REY. This has been a declining program for the last year or so. We hit our peak during fiscal year 1959.

The volume of disposals tapered off during the latter half of fiscal year 1959, and the figures I have available thus far for fiscal year 1960 disposal show a further decrease.

We are running right now roughly at about 50 percent of what we disposed of during fiscal year 1959 in the way of usable property, which is the type of property that the importers may be interested in purchasing in our oversea areas. At the present time thus far this fiscal year we have disposed of $200 million at acquisition cost of usable property in the foreign areas. This compares with a total during fiscal year 1959 of $735 million at acquisition cost.

I say this has been a downward trend, and it appears that it will continue that way because the vast bulk of supplies that were available in our oversea depots in places such as Japan and Air Force depots in the oversea areas has been pretty well cleared out now.

We have pretty well leveled off, and I would say that the volume for the next fiscal year, at least as best I can see it, will be approximately $350 to $400 million at acquisition cost of the property we will dispose of.

Of that, better than 90 percent is being purchased by buyers who are located in the countries where we are selling or in an adjoining country.

A very small percentage of buyers are coming from the United States or from other countries outside the country where we are selling. A good example here, for our sales in Japan we probably have 100 American buyers and we have over 2,000 buyers who are located in the Far East who are buying that property.

Of this, less than 10 percent is sold for export. The American buyers have been successful I would say on less than half of that. So when we start talking about what the departments sells overseas, which may eventually come into this country, I think we are down to a pretty low figure. We may be talking about $15 to $20 million at acquisition costs. That is my best estimate at this time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would you estimate the amount of goods disposed of as domestic surplus property, by way of comparison?

Colonel REY. We are comparing usable property running around $2 billion at acquisition cost domestic versus, as I say, $15 million or $20 million which might possibly come into this country as foreign excess imports.

And across the board this is pretty much generally the same type of property.

Now on some items, we may have an accumulation in the oversea area of a particular item that we do not have available here. But across the board we are talking about pretty much the same property types that we are disposing of in the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON. So that even though you may not want to make a judgment on the basis of specific industries, you would certainly conclude that on the basis of the economy as a whole, the importation of this foreign excess property is a negligible factor.

Colonel REY. It is a very small percentage of what we are disposing of overall when you compare foreign excess with surplus property disposal or sales.

Thus, we are talking about $15 million or $20 million worth of property overseas at its acquisition cost. We are annually disposing in this country of surplus property of the United States, at the rate of about $2 billion a year. This is not going to involve any great loss of employment and production in this country if only $15 million or $20 million worth of surplus property at acquisition cost owned by the Federal Government overseas is brought back to this country.

I think the committee did the best it could do. Perhaps there is some elasticity in the word "undue."

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MONAGAN. Is it fair to say with reference to that figure actually involved that the value would be about 5 percent?

Mr. MEADER. I would not have the figure, but I was giving the acquisition cost. As we all know, surplus property does not sell at its acquisition cost ordinarily.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. Since there has been some question about the word "undue," I wonder if the gentleman would accept an amendment to strike out "undue" and substitute the word "any"?

Mr. MEADER. If you want to prohibit outright the importation of any surplus property, that might be one way of doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY].

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, in legislation of this type that comes before us, the important thing to find out is the extent to which the business community is affected.

Bear in mind, that our experience is that we receive a higher selling price for foreign excess property than we do for domestic surplus property; and that there is $2 billion worth of domestic surplus property generated every single year, with the expectation that it is going to be greater in the future.

Whereas, in the foreign excess property field $745 million was declared as surplus during 1959, and the estimate is that it will drop almost 50 percent to approximately $450 million for fiscal year 1960.

Let me say in conclusion for our side of the aisle that the important thing in passing a law is not just the law itself but what is going to be done with this law; and let me read you what the administrator says he is going to do under this law. I refer to page 14 of the report:

If this proposal were adopted, we envisage implementing it by regulations. It might be possible to categorize foreign excess property under the provisions of our suggested modification to section 402. In so doing, it would, of course be necessary to comply with the provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act. Conceivably there could be developed the following categories of foreign excess property:

(a) A "decontrolled list" which would include foreign excess property which might be imported;

(b) A "prohibited list" which would include property which might not be imported; and

(c) An intermediate category which would continue to be subject to individual determinations in response to specific applications.

In other words, the muddle that is now occurring in the Commerce Department would be reduced to the extent that you could catalog that which is "decontrolled" and that which is "prohibited." Only the remainder in an "intermediate" category would then be subject to the problems that we have had in the past 11 years.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 512) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 402. Foreign excess property may be disposed of (a) by sale, exchange, lease, or transfer, for cash, credit, or other property with or without warranty, and upon such other terms and conditions as the head of the executive agency concerned deems proper; but it shall be unlawful to import such property into the United States after such sale or other disposition if the Secretary of Agriculture (in the case of any agricultural commodity, food, or cotton or woolen goods) or the Secretary of Commerce (in the case of any other property) determines that the importation of such property would be injurious to the economy of this country, or (b) for foreign currencies or credits, or substantial benefits or the discharge of claims resulting from the compromise or settlement of such claims by any executive agency in accordance with the law, whenever the head of the executive agency concerned determines that it is in the interest of the United States to do so. Such property may be disposed of without advertising when the head of the executive agency concerned finds so doing to be most practicable and to be advantageous to the Government. The head of each executive agency responsible for the disposal of foreign excess property may execute such documents for the transfer of title or other interest in property and take such other action as he deems necessary or proper to dispose of such property; and may authorize the abandonment, destruction, or donation of foreign excess property under his control which has no commercial value or the estimated cost of care and handling of which would exceed the estimated proceeds from its sale.

"The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce may make any determinations, rules, regulations, and orders deemed necessary or appropriate to carry out their respective functions hereunder.

"Property which is imported in violation of this section or any determination, rule, regulation, or order promulgated hereunder shall be subject to forfeiture to the United States. All provisions of law relating to seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation for violation of the customs laws; the disposition of the property forfeited or condemned or the proceeds from the sale thereof; the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures; and the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have incurred, under the provisions of this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof: Provided, That no sale of such seized or forfeited property shall be made except upon condition, supported by appropriate bond, that the property shall be exported to a destination other than the United States or reduced to scrap. Awards of compensation to informers under this section may be paid only out of funds specifically appropriated therefor.

"The importation into the United States of property disposed of as foreign excess property for the purpose of repair, reconditioning, or rehabilitation of such property and its reexportation thereafter, or for the purpose of transit through the United States, shall not be an importation to which this section applies, if the importer of such property shall, prior to such importation, furnish bond for the performance of such undertaking in such amount and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "if" and insert the word "unless".

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out "be injurious to the economy of this country," and insert in lieu thereof "not result in undue loss of production or employment in the United States,".

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FASCELL as an amendment to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 9, after the word "employment" insert "in any industry".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary injuiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEADER. What is the situation with regard to amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has just agreed to an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk again read the amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FASCELL to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 9, after the word "employment" insert "in any industry".

The CHAIRMAN. That has been agreed to.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 9, after the word "in" strike out the word "undue" and insert "any".

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, is that amendment out of order since we have already adopted the committee amendment as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee has not adopted the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I understand that we have adopted the committee amendment. I was under the impression that the Chair had put the question on the committee amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee has not adopted the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just what is the question before the House? Is it not the amendment to the amendment as offered by Mr. FASCELL?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment as amended has not been adopted. The Clerk will complete the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 9, after the word "in" strike out the word "undue" and insert the word "any".

Line 10, after "United States," insert "whatsoever."

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the issue here is very simple. The question is whether we are going to make it easier or harder for people to import surplus property into the United States. It is perfectly clear on page 6 of the committee report that this legislation is being offered in response to the demands of certain importers who want to make it easier to sell surplus property which they import into the United States.

The question before the House is whether we are going to stand by the criterion presently in existence or whether we are going to accept the new criterion offered in the committee amendment.

The present criterion puts the burden of proof on the importer. It says that you cannot import this stuff unless you demonstrate it is going positively to contribute to the welfare of the United States. And these importers have obviously found it is too difficult for them to offer that positive proof, so they come in here and ask us to change the rules and shift the burden of proof instead onto the United States to prove that there is going to be undue loss of employment as a result of this importation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], a distinguished member of the Rules Committee, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MEADER], have both made it quite clear that by "undue employment" they mean not just one job, but several jobs. In fact, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MEADER] acknowledged that unless we do throw somebody out of work, then you are going to put a complete moratorium on all imports. So if we adopt the committee amendment, and if we adopt this legislation itself, we are going to put somebody out of work. It is as simple as that. The question is how many American working men and women you and I are prepared to throw out of work.

It reminds me of the oft-mentioned difference between a recession and a depression. If it is your own job that is lost, then it is a depression; if it is somebody else's job, then it is just a recession.

I think we ought to make it perfectly clear here today that we are not going to adopt legislation that will put any American out of work. There are more than 18,000 people out of work in my district, there are 3 or 4 million people out of work throughout the United States.

I think we would be making a very serious mistake if we were to amend present law to make it possible for surplus property to be imported into this country with the full knowledge and in view of the admission of those supporting the legislation, that somebody—perhaps very many people—are going to be out of work as a result.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is very obvious what the amendment does. The gentleman who offered the amendment is against the bill; he stated so. If you are for the amendment vote against the bill. The amendment goes to the guts of the matter. If you want to be unreasonable, this is the way to do it. The committee approach, we believe, is a reasonable and equitable one, one which the Department of Commerce says is subject to proper administration and which lays down criteria which are measurable.

I would add this further, that we do not do any shifting of any kind of burden. The responsibility is still on the Department of Commerce to administer this law. The Department of Commerce, representing all of the people in this country, in my opinion, will try to do the best possible job—one that is equitable; that is reasonable, and that is fair. We do not want to be unreasonable. In my opinion the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is completely unreasonable, and therefore I would ask that it be voted down.

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this controversy reminds me of the Aesop fable about the old man and the boy and the donkey crossing the bridge. First, the man rode the donkey and the people criticized him and said, "Look at the old man riding on the donkey and the little boy walking." So the man got off and the boy got on. Then they said, "Look. This youngster has no respect for old age." So they both got on, and then the people said, "Look at that poor donkey carrying the man and the boy." So they both got off and carried the donkey, and he fell in the river.

First we have the manufacturer squawking, and then we have the consumers, contractors, and surplus dealers squawking; and when we try to please everybody, we are going to wind up with nothing.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is, in effect, more than defeating the bill. The gentleman's amendment would, in effect, prohibit the importation of any excess property, and it would be stronger than the law today, because now all that is required is that there be an agreement signed not to import. But in this bill you make it unlawful and provide for seizure of the property if the law is violated. That is how ridiculous that amendment is. I ask that it be defeated.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ with the proponents of this bill that this is a reasonable bill. I just want to know if the committee heard these different manufacturers when this bill was before them? May I ask the gentleman?

Mr. FASCELL. Yes. Everybody that wanted to be heard was heard.

Mr. STAGGERS. I did not ask that.

Mr. FASCELL. If the gentleman will let me answer, the answer is "Yes."

Mr. STAGGERS. Let me ask this question: Were they for it or against it?

Mr. FASCELL. Some were and some were not.

Mr. STAGGERS. Some were and some were not?

Mr. FASCELL. Yes.

Mr. STAGGERS. The ones I heard from are not for it. It seems to me that it is the consensus of opinion here that a lot of others also are against it.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAGGERS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. I think I can answer the question you put to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], by saying that originally the manufacturers were very much opposed to this, and after that time we did everything we could to meet that objection by changing the language in the bill, and then went further, after it went down to the Committee on Rules, to further safeguard.

No. 1, I do not think the manufacturers know about the amendment or about the amendment to the amendment. That was done to protect them. It is precisely what the gentleman is suggesting we should do.

Mr. STAGGERS. You mean to shift the burden of proof?

Mr. BARRY. No. The gentleman asked if the manufacturers approved this bill. Originally, when the bill was before us and we had hearings, they did not approve the bill. However, in order to meet some of the objections that were brought up, the language was changed not only to meet their objections but to meet suggested language offered by the Department of Commerce that would meet the objections of these manufacturers. And, furthermore, the other day when we were before the Committee on Rules it was amended again to tighten it up.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get this point across. Under the bill as now constituted, these surplus properties may not come in unless they are beneficial to this country. Then they amended it and said that they could not come in unless it was shown that they were not injurious. Then after further discussion they referred to undue hardship. First the burden of proof had to do with its being beneficial to the United States. Then the second burden of proof was that it was not injurious, that it did not hurt the country. I think what I have said is not in controversy. It is in the law.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAGGERS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Under the present law, it had to be proved, as the gentleman has said. But all of the goods have been coming in under the present law, not under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. STAGGERS. But the gentleman said awhile ago that the goods had stopped coming in after the gentleman's committee told the Department to stop it. I heard the gentleman say that.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I stated to the gentleman that the manufacturers had come in and complained that there were too many of these goods coming in and then it was prevailed upon the Department to tighten up.

Mr. STAGGERS. They changed the regulations, then, and after that they stopped coming in?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No; they did not change the regulations at all.

Mr. STAGGERS. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio this. The importations ceased after these representations were made to the Department?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. After the Department tightened up on the granting of these licenses to bring them in.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, this bill would let them come in again, instead of tightening things up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] has expired.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In answer to the gentleman I would like to say that at the present time importers are bringing goods in and they may continue to do so under present law. This legislation would make it a rule by law rather than a rule by man. It tightens up the discretion in the Department of Commerce. In other words, the Department of Commerce does not have a clear-cut law in front of them defining exactly what they should or should not do. This bill takes care of that. It takes a lot of the discretion out of the Department of Commerce. A new Secretary of Commerce could change the procedure under the present law and let the flood gates down, under the authority he now has. This bill does what we always talk about doing here in Congress, clearly defining the authority to decide under what circumstances surplus property shall or shall not be admitted to this country. It codifies a practice which under normal circumstances you approve of; that is, not giving the Administrator too much discretion, which would allow one Administrator to administer differently from another.

I think this bill will satisfy the gentleman's objections but apparently it is not clear in his mind.

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. I yield.

Mr. PIRNIE. The gentleman has stated that the testimony of the manufacturers before our committee was in opposition to the language of the original bill, is that correct?

Mr. BARRY. Of the original bill.

Mr. PIRNIE. Since that time there have been modifications of the language?

Mr. BARRY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. PIRNIE. Has there been any contact made with those people?

Mr. BARRY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. PIRNIE. Was there any change in their attitude?

Mr. BARRY. Where we have presented this to the manufacturers, they have been satisfied that it is protective of their interests, yes.

Mr. PIRNIE. You have been in touch with the principal objectors?

Mr. BARRY. The principal objectors came in by telegraph, by mail, and by representation from their industry.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I made the statement on the floor I had been in touch with a great many people who complained about the original bill, and they not only accepted but wrote me letters of appreciation for what the committee put in this bill, the committee amendment, saying it protected fully their rights and their interests.

Mr. PIRNIE. I thank the gentleman for making that point clear.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Here is the old law:

Unless the Secretary—

Of course, that is of Agriculture or Commerce.

determines that the importation of such property would relieve domestic shortages or otherwise be beneficial.

Then notice the change in the bill itself, on page 2. It says,

Unless the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of Commerce determines that the importation of such property would not result in undue loss of production or employment.

There is the language as it is and as it would be if the bill as reported is adopted.

That is all there is to it.

As I understand it from my wires, the same as have been received by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], if we adopt the Flynn amendment which is on the desk, to be offered later, we go back to the same law we had in the old law, they are satisfied and certain importations. How are you to vote? I do not know. I tried to find the sponsor of this bill and was not able to find him. I inquired first how the gentlemen who are leaders intended to vote, and they said they did not know. That is what troubled me, in a way. It all depends.

Years ago I had a lawsuit before a district judge. It involved just one question, the fair market price of junk. So they subpenaed an expert witness, and we all, lawyers and the judge, tried to get an answer out of him on the "What is the fair market price of junk?" Do you know what his answer was? He said, "Do you want to buy or do you want to sell?" None of us could get any other than two answers out of him.

How does that apply to this bill? Do you want to purchase some of this surplus or are you making it and selling it to the Government, our own or a government abroad? It is just that simple, do you buy or do you want to make it and sell it. That is the real issue.

Next is the thought, the Government having paid for this property, is it entitled to get something out of it when it turns out to be surplus or should we let some fellow who is shrewd buy it bring it here and sell it at a profit? To my mind, that is the situation. Unless somebody can give me some contrary advice, unless that Flynn amendment is adopted, I am inclined to go along with the manufacturers in my district—and I called their attention to the danger of unemployment. It is just that simple.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield so that I may supply some information, the pending amendment is not the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FLYNN], it is the amendment I have offered myself.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I know all about that. The gentleman just adds two little words "in industry" in there.

Mr. STRATTON. It had the effect of making it so that no unemployment would be caused by this importation. I think the gentleman feels as I do, he is opposed to unemployment, as I am. I hope he will support this amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am not opposed to that two-word amendment, what I am talking about is that one offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FLYNN] that restores the law to what it is now and retains the word "unlawfully."

A motion to strike the enacting clause would have the same effect, except for that one word.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FLYNT moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, since we have now spent some 20 or 25 minutes on a committee amendment to a committee amendment, it indicates to the Committee of the Whole some idea of the confusion which exists in the consideration of this legislation.

First let me say I am in complete accord with the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON]. I am in accord with an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk which will be offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FLYNN] at the proper time, in the event my motion does not prevail. But the situation that has developed already in the parliamentary tangle has clearly indicated that we are in for a long session in trying to rewrite on the floor a bill which would more properly be rewritten in the Committee on Governmental Operations. Actually there is no single manufacturer of this type of equipment located in the district which I have the honor to represent. There are very few such industries in the region of the country from which I come. Yet I take the position on the floor of this House on the question of importation of competitive products that I have sworn eternal vigilance against the sacrifice of a single American industry or the loss of a single job of American men and women to a competitive counterpart anywhere else in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in helping other nations, old ones and new ones, developed and underdeveloped nations and new nations which have just come onto the map of the world. But I do not believe in nor support any proposal which I feel will be harmful to American industry and American jobs. I shall never, in this or in any other proposition, take a position which I feel is detrimental to the jobs of the men and women of America, or to any American industry, large or small.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to ask the gentleman is this a pro forma amendment for an opportunity to get 5 minutes on this to speak, or are you saying it is time to kill the legislation?

Mr. FLYNT. I thank the gentleman for making that inquiry. The purpose of my motion is to kill the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will cooperate with you.

Mr. FLYNT. I say that in all sincerity. I feel that the situation which has developed today in the efforts to amend a committee amendment certainly justifies the position which I take. I ask that the preferential motion be adopted.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FLYNN. Although I have an amendment at the desk, nevertheless I shall support the gentleman's motion.

Mr. FLYNT. I will ask the gentleman if my motion would not accomplish the same thing that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Wisconsin would also seek to accomplish.

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, it will.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield.

Mr. STAGGERS. I would just like to ask if the importers are not the ones who benefit?

Mr. FLYNT. They are.

Mr. STAGGERS. They are the ones who make the profit and make the gains.

Mr. FLYNT. That is true. That is the thing we want to correct right now. This bill cannot help American industry nor can it be helpful to men and women employed in industry in the United States. It seems to be helpful only to a small group of importers who buy this surplus property at an average of 5 cents on the dollar and sell it at enormous profits at the expense of the jobs of American labor.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, I am indeed touched by the eloquent speech of the gentleman who just left the well of the House. I would like respectfully to remind my colleagues, however, that the policy laid down by Congress under this law has been in effect now for 11 years under several administrations and many Congresses. For all that time this property has been coming in.

So far I have not seen any legislation to repeal the law. I have never even heard any speeches on it before. I am glad, however, to find out today the gentleman's attitude and how he feels.

I would also add that we are talking about Americans, and I love them, too. All of the people who would be involved by this law, pro and con, are Americans. The importers to which reference has been made are also Americans. Our effort is to be fair and equitable to all.

We recognize that there is a problem. There is no confusion as far as the committee is concerned. I am sure the only confusion exists in the mind of my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia, who offered the motion which strikes at the roots of the bill and cuts it down.

If we vote down this motion I am sure we can resolve the differences.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, because of my great respect for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAWSON], I regret I cannot support his bill H.R. 9996.

I call my colleagues' attention to the paragraph on page 5 of the committee report which states that under the present regulations of the Department of Commerce—and I quote:

> A purchaser who desires to import foreign excess property may first apply to its foreign excess property officer for a determination that the property in question would qualify as relieving a domestic shortage or being otherwise beneficial to the economy of the country. If the determination is favorable, he may apply for an authorization to import the goods. If the authorization is granted, the goods may be entered duty free. In making the determination the Departments takes into consideration such facts as are at its disposal on the nature of the goods, the state of the economy, and the effect of the goods thereon. Importers are permitted to appeal from unfavorable rulings of the foreign excess property officer to the Appeals Board for the Department of Commerce.

If the committee statement is correct, and I am sure it is, the Department of Commerce now takes into consideration the effect of such importation of foreign excess property on the economy at any given time. Later on in the report—paragraph (c), page 7—the committee states that it "sought to somewhat liberalize existing law." Nowhere in the report can I find a justification for the liberalization, except that certain importers are not happy with the present determinations of the Secretary of Commerce. Considering the committee's whole report and its explanation of what is meant by "undue loss of production or employment"—regardless of whether this language is applied to the whole economy or to a particular industry—we still end up with the question of whether the importation of any given quantity of goods will adversely affect the economy of the country. Unless we have a domestic shortage, how can it be argued that any importation would not result in a loss of production and employment? To the extent that any product—not in short supply—is brought back into the United States, it is going to reduce an equivalent number of units that would have been produced had they not been brought back.

To argue that the foreign excess property will be sold to buyers who would not normally purchase new equipment from manufacturers is, in my opinion, fallacious. The market for surplus products, as my colleagues know, is the same market for secondhand or used products that must be disposed of by retailers who take secondhand and used products in trade. If we were to glut the secondhand market, this in turn would affect the market for new products and thereby depress production and employment at the manufacturers' level. The simple economics of the problem lead me to believe that the present law provides the sound criterion for determining whether foreign excess property should be returned to the United States. It is for this reason that I cannot support the bill.

Mr. LEVERING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the preferential motion offered by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLYNT], primarily for the reason that I deem H.R. 9996 a bad bill, the effect of which will make it easier for a favored few importers to profit at the expense of many fine business concerns in the Nation who are already desperately making a day-to-day struggle to survive against foreign competition.

Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact I feel this legislation ties in with the whole problem of our current trade policies. I trust the House will vote down H.R. 9996 overwhelmingly and that we will all consider seriously the House concurrent resolutions which I and several other of our colleagues have introduced expressing the sense of Congress that the United States should stop reducing tariffs and protect American industries against unfair competition.

In my congressional district we are now experiencing widespread unemployment and business difficulties as a direct result of what I believe to be unwise trade programs relative to a wide range of imports as well as an unsound application of the Buy-American Act.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to oppose H.R. 9996, relating to the reimportation into the United States of surplus property. My objection is based upon the language in the bill which would extend the importation into the United States of property sold or disposed of abroad as surplus property pursuant to the Surplus Property Act.

This language would, therefore, extend to surplus property acquired abroad by importers, at distress prices, based upon the problems of resale for use abroad. The adoption of this legislation would create an unwarranted windfall for importers who buy surplus abroad for resale in the United States.

This legislation is, therefore, fatally defective and should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FASCELL) there were—ayes 95, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9996) to amend section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to prescribe procedures to insure that foreign excess property which is disposed of overseas will not be imported into the United States to the injury of the economy of this country, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FASCELL) there were—ayes 124, noes 61.

So the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken out was agreed to.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the action just taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MORRIS] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Government Operations on May 23, 1960, approved the bill H.R. 9996 which, in my judgment, may well have most unfortunate consequences to the prosperity of a number of American enterprises, already hard pressed by excessive capacity and uncertain demand. H.R. 9996 is proposed as an amendment to section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, which is concerned with restricting the importation of American surplus property abroad into the United States. As now in effect, such imports are prohibited unless the Secretary of Commerce, or the Secretary of Agriculture for agricultural products, determine that such importations would relieve a domestic shortage or otherwise be beneficial to the economy of the country. H.R. 9996 completely reverses the nature of the determination which the Secretaries are called upon to make in the case of surplus property imports. Under this bill, imports of surplus property are prohibited unless the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of Agriculture determine that such imports will not result in undue loss of production or employment. The committee report itself states that "the principal effect of the bill would be to permit the importation of foreign excess property unless it would result in undue loss of production or employment in the United States," and the Administrator of the Business and Defense Services Administration of the Department of Commerce, William A. White, Sr., admitted in testimony before the committee that the new bill "represents to a marked degree a reversal of the point of view reflected in section 402 and appears to be a liberalization of policy in favor of importation of foreign excess property."

I submit that this is no time to take any step, no matter how well intentioned, in the direction of facilitating imports of Government surplus abroad. For certain industries, allowing any additional surplus property to come in from overseas would have serious consequences. We know, for example, that the domestic construction machinery manufacturers could suffer severely, if surplus construction machinery from abroad were dumped upon a market already glutted. The competition that these manufacturers have as a result of domestic surplus property is bad enough. Adding any foreign surplus would be intolerable. The producers of construction equipment have a great deal more assurance that harmful imports were to be excluded if the Secretary of Commerce has to certify that a particular import is necessary to relieve a domestic shortage or otherwise be beneficial to the economy, than if he merely has to certify that such imports will not result in "undue loss of production and employment." This added discretion should not be given the Secretary of Commerce. The protection under the law as it exists is greater and therefore preferable to what is offered by H.R. 9996. I therefore urge the defeat of this bill.

NATIONAL CAPITAL TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1960

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 11135) to aid in the development of a coordinated system of transportation for the National Capital region; to create a temporary National Capital Transportation Agency; to authorize negotiation to create an interstate agency; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2061)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11135) to aid in the development of a coordinated system of transportation for the National Capital region; to create a temporary National Capital Transportation Agency; to authorize negotiation to create an interstate agency; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I—SHORT TITLE, STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND POLICY, AND DEFINITIONS

"Short title

"SEC. 101. This Act may be cited as the 'National Capital Transportation Act of 1960'.

"Statement of findings and policy

"SEC. 102. The Congress finds that an improved transportation system for the National Capital region (1) is essential for the continued and effective performance of the functions of the Government of the United States, for the welfare of the District of Columbia, for the orderly growth and development of the National Capital region, and for the preservation of the beauty and dignity of the Nation's Capital; (2) requires the planning on a regional basis of a unified system of freeways, parkways, express transit service on exclusive rights-of-way, and other major transportation facilities; (3) requires cooperation among the Federal, State, and local governments of the region and public carriers in the development and administration of major transportation facilities; (4) requires financial participation by the Federal Government in the creation of certain major transportation facilities that are beyond the financial capacity or borrowing power of the public carriers, the District of Columbia, and the local governments of the region; and (5) requires coordination of transportation facilities with other public facilities and with the use of land, public and private. The Congress therefore declares that it is the continuing policy and responsibility of the Federal Government, in cooperation with the State and local governments of the National Capital region, and making full use of private enterprise whenever appropriate, to encourage and aid in the planning and development of a unified and coordinated transportation system for the National Capital region.

"Definitions

"SEC. 103. When used in this Act—

"(a) 'National Capital region' means the District of Columbia, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in the State of Maryland, Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun, and Prince William Counties and the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and all other cities now or hereafter existing in Maryland or Virginia within the geographic area bounded by the outer boundaries of the combined area of said counties and cities.

"(b) 'Government agency' and 'government agencies' mean the Government of the United States, District of Columbia, Commonwealth of Virginia, State of Maryland, or any political subdivision, agency, or instrumentality thereof which is located within, or whose jurisdiction includes all or part of, the National Capital region; the term includes, but is not limited to, public authorities, towns, villages, cities, other municipalities, and counties.

"TITLE II—CREATION OF A NATIONAL CAPITAL TRANSPORTATION AGENCY

"National Capital Transportation Agency

"SEC. 201. (a) There is hereby established the National Capital Transportation Agency (hereinafter referred to as the 'Agency'). The Agency shall be subject to the direction and supervision of the President, or the head of such department or agency as he may designate. The Agency shall be headed by an Administrator who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to the maximum rate for grade 18 of the General Schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, plus $500 per annum.

"(b) To assist the Administrator in the execution of the functions vested in the Agency there shall be a Deputy Administrator who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to the maximum rate for grade 18 of the General Schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. The Deputy Administrator shall perform such duties as the Administrator may from time to time designate and shall be Acting Administrator during the absence or disability of the Administrator.

"(c) No Administrator or Deputy Administrator shall, during his continuance in office, be engaged in any other business, but shall devote himself to the work of the Agency. No Administrator or Deputy Administrator or member of the Advisory Board (established in section 202) shall have financial interest in any corporation engaged in the business of providing public transportation nor in any corporation engaged in the manufacture or selling of passenger transportation equipment or facilities.

"Advisory board

"SEC. 202. There is established an Advisory Board of the National Capital Transportation Agency. The Advisory Board shall be composed of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at least three of whom shall be residents of the National Capital region. The President shall designate one member as chairman. The Advisory Board shall meet at least once every ninety days. The Advisory Board shall advise the Administrator in respect of such matters as the general policies of the Agency; Agency policies in connection with acquisition, design, and construction of facilities; fees for the use of Agency facilities and property; planning and administration generally; and such other matters as may be referred to it by the Administrator or which the Advisory Board, in its discretion, may consider. Each member of the Advisory Board, when actually engaged in the performance of his duties, shall receive for his services compensation at a rate not in excess of the per diem equivalent of the maximum rate for grade 18 of the General Schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, together with travel expenses as authorized by section 5 of the Act of August 2, 1946, as amended (5 U.S.C. 73b–2), for persons employed intermittently as consultants or experts and receiving compensation on a per diem when actually employed basis.

"Advisory and coordinating committees

"SEC. 203. (a) The Administrator is authorized to establish such advisory and coordinating committees composed of representatives of State and local governments, Federal agencies, other Government agencies, and such private organizations and persons as may be necessary or helpful to obtain the maximum amount of cooperation and correlation of effort in order that a coordinated system of transportation be developed for the National Capital region. These advisory and coordinating committees shall consider problems referred to them by the Administrator and shall make recommendations to the Administrator concerning the activities of the Agency as they affect transit, traffic, and highway conditions, and other matters of mutual interest to the Agency and to the Government agencies, organizations, and persons represented on the advisory and coordinating committees.

"(b) The advisory and coordinating committees shall serve the Agency solely in an advisory capacity. Members of such committees shall serve thereon without additional compensation. Members who are not representatives of an agency of the United States may receive travel expenses as authorized by section 5 of the Act of August 2, 1946, as amended (5 U.S.C. 73b–2), for persons serving without compensation.

"Preparation and approval of transit development program

"SEC. 204. The Agency—

"(a) Shall prepare, and may from time to time revise, a Transit Development Program. The Transit Development Program shall consist of a plan or plans indicating the general location of facilities in which the Agency will participate for the transportation of persons within the National Capital region, a timetable for the provision of such facilities and comprehensive financial reports including costs, revenues, and benefits. The Transit Development Program may indicate (1) the routes of surface, subsurface, and elevated carriers, including bus and other motor vehicle carriers, rail carriers, waterborne carriers, air carriers, and other carriers, and (2) the location and extent of terminals, stations, platforms, motor vehicle parking facilities for transit users, extra-wide median strips and other rights-of-way, docks, rails or tracks or other similar facilities, bridges, tunnels, buildings or structures, powerplants, repair shops, yards, garages, and other necessary facilities relating to the transportation of persons. The Transit Development Program shall, to the extent practicable, conform to the general plan for the development of the National Capital region and to the comprehensive plan for the National Capital within the meaning of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the National Capital Planning Act of 1952 (66 Stat. 781), except as may be determined by the President.

"(b) Shall, in the preparation of the Transit Development Program, give special consideration to:

"(1) Expanded use of existing facilities and services, including expanded use and development of existing railroad lines into the District of Columbia, and coordinated and efficient transit service across jurisdictional boundaries and between areas served by different companies: Provided, That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, before granting its approval to any further conversion by the D.C. Transit System, Inc., of street railway operations to bus operations as provided in section 7 of the Act of July 24, 1956 (70 Stat. 598), shall consult with the Agency on the possible use of street railway facilities and equipment in the Transit Development Program. The Commission may withhold its approval of such conversion and require the preservation of equipment and facilities already withdrawn from service if it finds that there is a substantial possibility that the Transit Development Program will provide for the continued use of street railway facilities and equipment.

"(2) Early development of a subway from Union Station capable of rapid dispersal of passengers from the railhead to the principal employment centers in the District of Columbia and its immediate environs, and capable of being extended to serve other parts of the region: Provided, That no freeway, or new parkway more than two lanes in width, shall be built within the District of Columbia west of Twelfth Street, Northwest, and north of either the north or the west legs of the proposed Inner Loop Freeway, the proposed Potomac River Expressway, or the proposed Palisades Parkway, before July 1, 1965; and the Agency shall not later than January 10, 1965, submit to the President, for transmittal to Congress, its recommendation as to whether any such freeway or parkway should thereafter be built.

"(3) Acquisition and development of rights-of-way and related facilities for providing express transit lines in conjunction with major highways and bridges.

"(c) Shall prepare proposals for implementing each part of the Transit Development Program, including preliminary engineering plans, descriptions of the character of services to be rendered, estimates of costs and revenues, arrangements for financing and organization, and other information setting forth the manner in which the program is to be carried out: Provided, That no part of the Transit Development Program shall be carried out by the Agency until a report containing a full and complete description of that part of the program has been transmitted to the Congress, and the execution of that part of the program has been expressly authorized by legislation thereafter enacted by the Congress.

"(d) In order to facilitate the transition from a Federal agency to an interstate proprietary agency and to further coordination within the National Capital region, shall submit the Transit Development Program and any revision thereof: (1) to the governing bodies of the District of Columbia, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in the State of Maryland, and Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun, and Prince William Counties and the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and the transit regulatory bodies having jurisdiction in the National Capital region for review and comment; (2) to such organizations of government agencies or officials concerned with the solution of the community development problems of the National Capital region on a unified metropolitan basis as are now in existence or as may be created by agreement, law, or compact for review and comment; (3) to the Commission of Fine Arts for review and comment; (4) to private companies transporting persons in the National Capital region and to unions representing the employees of such companies for review and comment; and (5) to the Governors of Maryland and Virginia or such government agencies as they may designate for approval of the location and extent of proposed Agency facilities and the timetable for the provision of such facilities within Maryland and Virginia, respectively; and except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, the Agency shall not acquire, construct, or operate property, rights-of-way, or facilities indicated in the Transit Development Program or a revision thereof within the State in which such property, rights-of-way, or facilities are located unless prior thereto the Governor of the State involved or such government agency as he may designate shall have approved the Transit Development Program or the pertinent revision thereof.

"(e) Until the Transit Development Program has been approved by the Governor of Maryland or Virginia as provided in subsection (d) of this section, shall, when it proposes to acquire, construct, or operate property, rights-of-way, or facilities located in Virginia or Maryland, first submit plans and other information showing in detail the purposes for which such property, rights-of-way, or facilities are to be used to the Governor of the State in which the property, rights-of-way, or facilities are to be located, or to such government agency as may be designated by the Governor. In implementing programs approved by the Congress in accordance with subsection (c) of this section, the Agency may acquire, construct, or operate such property, rights-of-way, or facilities, as the case may be, in the State upon approval of the Governor thereof, or of the designated government agency.

"(f) Shall conduct research, surveys, experimentation, evaluation, design, and development, in cooperation with other government agencies and private organizations when appropriate, on the needs of the region for transportation; on facilities, equipment, and services to meet those needs; on organization and financial arrangements for regional transportation; and on other matters relating to the movement of persons in the region. The Agency's studies shall include a continuation of the work begun in the mass transportation survey conducted by the National Capital Planning Commission and the National Capital Regional Planning Council, pursuant to the Second Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1955 (69 Stat. 33), and shall include further studies as may be necessitated by changed conditions, the availability of new techniques, and the response of government agencies and the public to the transportation plan adopted by the Commission and Council. The Agency's studies shall also include evaluations of the transportation system recommended in the transportation plan, and of alternative facilities and kinds of services.

"(g) Shall submit to the President for transmittal to Congress, not later than November 1, 1962, recommendations for organization and financial arrangements for transportation in the National Capital region. The Agency shall consider the following organizational alternatives, among others: a Federal corporation, an organization established by interstate compact, and continuation or modification of the organization established by this Act. In preparing its recommendations the Agency shall consult with the governments of the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia, the local governments of the National Capital region, and the Federal agencies having an interest in transportation in the National Capital region: Provided, That any recommendations submitted by the Agency shall provide as far as possible for the payment of all costs by persons using or benefiting from regional transportation facilities and services, and shall provide for the equitable sharing of any remaining costs among the Federal, State, and local governments.

"Functions, duties, and powers

"SEC. 205. (a) Subject to the provisions of this title, the Agency—

"(1) in order to implement those parts of the Transit Development Program approved by statute in accordance with section 204(c), and except as provided in the proviso of paragraph (2) of this subsection, may acquire (by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise) or construct transit facilities, property, and rights-of-way for the transportation of persons within the National Capital region. Such facilities, property, and rights-of-way may include those enumerated under section 204(a) or any other necessary transit facilities, property, or rights-of-way relating to transportation of persons. The Agency may contribute funds for the acquisition of rights-of-way for, and the construction of limited amounts of freeway, parkway, and other arterial highway facilities, including construction incidental to the use and protection of such rights-of-way for transit facilities, to the government agencies having jurisdiction thereof if, in the opinion of the Agency, such contributions are necessary to the fulfillment of the objectives of this Act;

"(2) may operate all facilities acquired or constructed by it, or may enter into agreements with government agencies, private transit companies, railroads, or other persons for the operation of its facilities, the use of its operating rights, or the provision of transit services making use of other facilities and operating rights: Provided, That the Agency shall not operate any transit facilities, or provide by agreement for the operation of transit facilities, until the Congress shall establish for the Agency a labor relations policy, defining labor's right to organize, to bargain collectively, to arbitrate disputes, and to safeguard job rights: Provided further, That the Agency shall not acquire the facilities, property, or rights-of-way of private motorbus companies and persons; or operate buses or similar motor vehicles or make agreements for the provision of motorbus services competitive with private transit companies; but may make agreements for the provision of service which is not competitive with services of private transit companies and persons;

"(3) shall encourage private transit companies to provide needed services in a manner consistent with the Transit Development Program;

"(4) may lease space or property owned or acquired by the Agency, or may contract with persons for the purpose of constructing and operating facilities, which, in the opinion of the Agency, will encourage or facilitate the use of transit facilities of the Agency. Rentals or other fiscal arrangements in connection with such leases or contracts shall be adjusted so that undue competitive advantage is not given over other persons in the National Capital region: Provided, That in the operation of such facilities, the lessee or franchise holder shall comply with all applicable Federal, State, and local building and zoning laws, ordinances, and regulations;

"(5) may enter into and perform contracts, leases, and agreements, and other transactions with any government agency, private transit company, railroad, or other persons;

"(6) may sell or lease advertising space or may contract with responsible persons for the sale or lease of such space: Provided, That the lessee or contractee shall comply with all applicable Federal, State, and local zoning and advertising laws, ordinances, and regulations;

"(7) shall cooperate with government agencies to facilitate coordination of location, design, and construction of freeways, parkways, and other arterial highway facilities with the Transit Development Program. The purpose of such coordination is to assure the comprehensive development of transportation facilities best suited to meet the objectives of this Act and to achieve maximum benefits from moneys available for such purposes. The responsibility and authority for location, design, construction, and operation of freeways, parkways, and other arterial highway facilities shall remain with the government agencies having jurisdiction thereof, but all Federal agencies' plans for location and design of highway facilities shall be forwarded to the Agency, and all State and local agencies' plans for location and design of highway facilities may be requested by the Agency for its review and comment. The Agency shall cooperate with all planning agencies of the National Capital region and the appropriate government transportation regulatory agencies including the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Commission in the development of transportation facilities and, wherever feasible and desirable, develop joint plans with such agencies;

"(8) may initiate proposals for regulating and coordinating the flow of traffic in the National Capital region so as to promote the optimum use of the highway network and other transportation facilities;

"(9) may make or participate in studies of all phases of transportation into, within, and out of the National Capital region, including transit vehicle research and development and fiscal research studies. The Agency may publicize and make available the results of such studies and other information relating to transportation;

"(10) may appoint and fix the compensation of officers, attorneys, agents, and employees; may define their powers and duties; may require bonds for the faithful performance of their duties; may employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof to the same extent as is authorized for the departments by section 15 of the Act of August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 810), but at rates not to exceed the usual rates for similar services;

"(11) may, subject to the standards and procedures of section 505 of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, place not to exceed five positions in grades 16, 17, or 18 of the General Schedule established by such Act. Such positions shall be in addition to the number of positions authorized to be placed in such grades by such section 505;

"(12) may make such expenditures at the seat of government and elsewhere as may be necessary for the exercise and performance of the powers and duties vested in the Agency and as from time to time may be appropriated for by the Congress, including expenditures for (1) rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere; (2) travel expenses; (3) office furniture, equipment and supplies, lawbooks, newspapers, periodicals, and books of reference (including the exchange thereof); and (4) printing and binding; and

"(13) may, by agreement with the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, designate such Board as the instrumentality through and by which facilities of the Agency in the District of Columbia are to be designed and constructed.

"(b) The Agency, its property, income, and transactions are expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form or from the imposition of any licenses or fees of any kind whatsoever by any State or political subdivision thereof and by the District of Columbia but such exemption shall not extend to contractors for, or lessees of, the Agency, or to any person, company or association which engages in any business activity pursuant to any franchise, grant or agreement of the Agency.

"(c) Every agency or instrumentality of the Government of the United States and of the government of the District of Columbia may enter into agreements with the Agency in respect of any matter for which such agreements are authorized pursuant to this Act.

"(d) The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (40 U.S.C. 255), shall be applicable to property acquired by the Agency. Proceedings in behalf of the Agency for the condemnation of property in the District of Columbia shall be instituted and maintained under the Act of March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415), as amended; and of property elsewhere, under the Act of August 1, 1888, as amended (40 U.S.C. 257), the Act of February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421 and the following, 40 U.S.C. 253), or any other applicable Act. This subsection shall apply to both real and personal property: Provided, That no action in condemnation of any property shall be commenced in behalf of the Agency until a reasonable effort has been made to negotiate with the owner of the property.

"(e) Subject to the provisions of section 204(c), such sums as shall be required to carry out the purposes of this title are authorized to be appropriated.

"TITLE III—AUTHORIZATION FOR NEGOTIATION OF INTERSTATE COMPACT

"SEC. 301. (a) It is the intent of Congress to promote and encourage the solution of problems of a regional character in the National Capital region by means of an interstate compact entered into by the State of Maryland, the Commonwealth of Virginia, and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, with the consent of Congress. To further this policy, the consent of Congress is hereby given to the State of Maryland and the Commonwealth of Virginia and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to negotiate a compact for the establishment of an organization to serve as a means of consultation and cooperation among the Federal, State, and local governments in the National Capital region, to formulate plans and policies for the development of the region, and to perform governmental functions of a regional character, including but not limited to the provision of regional transportation facilities. No such compact shall be binding upon the parties thereto unless and until it has been approved by the Congress.

"(b) As promptly as practicable after the State of Maryland and the Commonwealth of Virginia have approved a compact for the establishment of an organization empowered to provide regional transportation facilities, the President shall submit to the Congress such recommendations as may be necessary or desirable to transfer to such organization such real and personal property, personnel, records, other assets, and liabilities as are appropriate in order that such organization may assume the functions and duties of the Agency.

"(c) The President shall appoint a person to participate in the compact negotiations and to represent the United States generally. The Federal representative shall report to the President either directly or through such agency or official of the Government as the President may specify.

"(d) The Federal representative, if not otherwise employed by the United States, shall receive for his services, when actually engaged in the performance of his duties, compensation at a rate not in excess of the per diem equivalent of the maximum rate for grade 18 of the General Schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, together with travel expenses as authorized by section 5 of the Act of August 2, 1946, as amended (6 U.S.C. 73b–2), for persons employed intermittently as consultants or experts and receiving compensation on a per diem when actually employed basis: Provided, That if the Federal representative shall be an employee of the United States he shall serve without additional compensation.

"(e) The Federal representative shall be provided with office space, consulting, engineering, and stenographic service, and other necessary administrative services.

"(f) The compensation of the Federal representative shall be paid from the current appropriation for salaries in the White House Office. Travel and other expenses provided for in subsections (d) and (e) of this section shall be paid from any current appropriation or appropriations selected by the head of such agency or agencies as may be designated by the President to provide for such expenses.

"(g) The State and Federal representatives appointed to participate in the compact negotiations are authorized to request from the Agency any information they deem necessary to carry out their functions under this section; and the Agency is authorized to cooperate with the compact representatives and, to the extent permitted by law, to furnish such information upon request made by the compact representatives.

"Separability

"SEC. 302. If any part of this Act is declared unconstitutional, or the applicability thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the applicability of such part to other persons and circumstances and the constitutionality or validity of every other part of the Act shall not be effected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11135) to aid in the development of a coordinated system of transportation for the National Capital region; to create a temporary National Capital Transportation Agency; to authorize negotiation to create an interstate agency; and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The committee of conference has agreed to a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. Except for technical, clarifying, and conforming changes, the following statement explains the differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed to in conference.

EFFECT ON EXEMPTION UNDER 1956 ACT

The House bill (sec. 204(b)(1)) authorized the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to withhold approval of any further conversion by the D.C. Transit System, Inc., of street railway operations to bus operations if the Commission finds that there is a substantial possibility that the Transit Development Program contemplated under the bill will provide for the continued use of street railway facilities and equipment; and further provided that if such approval is withheld the transit company would not be entitled to the exemption from real estate taxes authorized by section 9(g) of the act of July 24, 1956.

The Senate amendment provided instead that if the Commission withholds its approval of such conversion, the exemption from real estate taxes under such section 9(g) shall immediately become available to the transit company.

The conference substitute eliminates both the language denying the exemption (where approval of further conversion is withheld) as contained in the House bill and the language making the exemption immediately available (where approval of further conversion is withheld) as contained in the Senate amendment, thus leaving to the determination of the Public Utilities Commission (as under existing law) the question of whether the conversion from street railway operations to bus operations is so substantially completed that the taking effect of the exemption would be appropriate in the public interest and should therefore be put into effect.

CERTAIN FREEWAY AND PARKWAY CONSTRUCTION

The House bill (sec. 204(b)(2)) provided that no freeway or new parkway more than two lanes in width shall be built within the District of Columbia west of 12th Street NW., and north of either the north or west legs of the proposed Inner Loop Freeway, the proposed Potomac River Expressway, or the proposed Palisades Parkway, until after the National Capital Transportation Agency has reported to the President that the use of rail transportation to carry passenger traffic to points northwest of downtown Washington has had a fair trial.

The Senate amendment provided instead that no such freeway or parkway shall be constructed before July 1, 1962, and further provided that the Agency shall submit to the President for transmittal to Congress, not later than January 10, 1962, its recommendation as to whether any such freeway or parkway should thereafter be built.

The conference substitute adopts the approach of the Senate amendment (limiting the period of the ban on freeway or parkway construction to a specific date rather than providing a period of indefinite length as in the House bill), except that it extends until 1965 the ban on such construction and the time within which the Agency must submit such recommendations.

APPROVAL OF TRANSIT DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

The House bill (sec. 204(c)), after directing the National Capital Transportation Agency to prepare proposals for implementing each part of the Transit Development Program contemplated by the bill, provided that no part of such program shall be carried out until the Congress has received a full report on that part of the program and has expressly authorized the execution thereof by legislation subsequently enacted.

The Senate amendment permitted any part of the Transit Development Program to be carried out (after the report thereon has been received by the Congress) upon the approval thereof in an appropriation act subsequently enacted.

The conference substitute adopts the language of the House bill, so that specific legislative authorization of (as well as appropriations for) each part of the program would be required before that part of the program can be undertaken.

LABOR RELATIONS

The Senate amendment added to the House bill a requirement (sec. 204(d)) that unions representing the employees of private transportation companies be advised of the Transit Development Program and any revision thereof, and a provision (sec. 205(a)(2)) prohibiting the new National Capital Transportation Agency from operating transit facilities until the Congress has established for the Agency a labor relations policy.

The conference substitute contains the language of the Senate amendment.

JOHN L. MCMILLAN,
HOWARD W. SMITH,
JOEL T. BROYHILL,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the chairman of the committee or some member of it for a brief explanation.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, in conference the Senate receded from practically all of its amendments and accepted the House version almost in toto. The main amendment that was adopted by the Senate was to eliminate the feature of the House bill that required further authorization on the part of Congress for any construction that took place; merely requiring an appropriation. They receded from that amendment and agreed to the original House version. That was the main difference between the two bodies. Another difference was, in the House version we restricted the construction of freeways and expressways in Northwest Washington until the subway system had received a fair trial. The Senate required a 2-year waiting period, and we compromised and made it a 5-year waiting period. The rest of the changes are minor.

Mr. GROSS. How about the appropriation in this bill? Did it remain the same for the commission or whatever it was, the advisory board, which was created under the House bill?

Mr. BROYHILL. There was no difference between the versions of the two bodies in that regard.

Mr. GROSS. So far as expenditures are concerned?

Mr. BROYHILL. Well, the main difference, as I tried to explain was that we required further authorization before any land acquisition or construction could be commenced. The Senate just struck that portion and just required an appropriation. The Senate receded from that and adopted the House version, which was far more restrictive.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REA COOPERATIVES

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, on April 4, 1960, I introduced H.R. 11529 to prohibit REA Cooperatives from investing their reserves in Government securities bearing an interest rate in excess of the 2 percent, the rate at which the Cooperatives get their loans from the Government in the first place. I am happy to note that a few moments ago the following story came over the wire as follows:

WASHINGTON.—The Government today offered rural power and telephone cooperative borrowers a way to meet congressional and other criticism that some of them are making profits on reserve funds at Government expense.

The Rural Electrification Administration, which makes such loans, announced the Federal treasury has offered to become a depository for such excess funds and pay interest at 2 percent a year.

This rate is the same as that charged by the Government on loans to the cooperatives for building and expanding their systems.

Some congressmen have complained that some REA co-ops, upon accumulating reserves in excess of operating expenses and periodic payments on their Government loans, invest the money at much higher rates of interest than they pay the Government.

The Government's 2 percent interest rate is fixed by law. The Eisenhower administration has asked without success that Congress raise this rate to permit charges at commercial levels. The administration says the Government has had to pay more than 2 percent for much of the money it borrows to lend, in turn, to the local cooperatives.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 574 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8665) to amend the Act entitled "An Act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital" to provide for the construction of such memorial by the Secretary of the Interior. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on House Administration, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, after which I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 574 provides for the consideration of H.R. 8665, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital" to provide for the construction of such memorial by the Secretary of the Interior. The resolution provides for an open rule with 1 hour of general debate.

The purpose of H.R. 8665 is the erection of a memorial on Theodore Roosevelt Island in accordance with plans approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association. Estimated cost of the memorial is $886,000.

The Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association purchased the 88-acre island, which now has an estimated value of $3 million, and presented it to the Federal Government as a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, and has further expended large sums of money in planning both the general development of the area and the memorial feature itself. It is equitable that the Federal Government pay the cost of the construction of the proposed memorial which has been approved by the Memorial Association, the Commission of Fine Arts, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Theodore Roosevelt Centennial Commission, and the National Park Service. The feature will be so located that it may be viewed in proper perspective by the millions of motorists using the low-level bridge presently under construction which will intersect the southern end of the island.

The estimated cost of the memorial includes the cost of accommodations for limited parking, utilities, landscaping, and a public comfort station.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 574.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 174]

Alexander	Edmondson	Mason
Alford	Evins	Minshall
Anfuso	Farbstein	Mitchell
Baker	Fogarty	Morris, Okla.
Barden	Glenn	Murphy
Barry	Gray	Pfost
Baumhart	Harris	Pilcher

Celler	Kluczynski	Vinson
Daddario	Lafore	Wainwright
Dawson	McSween	Withrow
Diggs	Macdonald	Younger
Dorn, S.C.	Mack	Zelenko
Durham	Madden

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 372 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

TEMPORARILY AUTHORIZING CERTAIN SUPPLEMENTAL AIR TRANSPORTATION

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 7593) to provide that the Civil Aeronautics Board may temporarily authorize certain air carriers to engage in supplemental air transportation, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill H.R. 10495.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

EXEMPTION FROM INCOME TAX FOR SUPPLEMENTAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT TRUSTS

Mr. MILLS submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts.

SUSPENSION OF DUTIES ON METAL SCRAP

Mr. MILLS submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 11748) to continue until the close of June 30, 1961, the suspension of duties on metal scrap, and for other purposes.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL

Mr. REES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I take this time now instead of on the bill because I have a conference engagement on another bill. I do this because I have a long tradition in my family of friendship, admiration, and great affection for Teddy Roosevelt.

As a child he, a great friend of my grandfather whose name I proudly bear, came to visit my home city of Hazleton, Pa., and later our home in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

That was because of the great Teddy Roosevelt's part in the settlement of the famous 1903 anthracite coal strike, one of the most frightful, one of the longest, one of the most disastrous contests between management and labor in American history. My grandfather, Daniel J. McCarthy, was the attorney for the Miners Union.

Thank God, it was a part of the great heart of this great American that the first agreement between the workers of the coal mines and the management of the anthracite industry came about.

One of the proudest possessions in my home is a large silver goblet presented to my grandfather by the great Teddy. I think in these times today, Mr. Speaker, when lack of leadership against the enemies of my country goes on day and night, I can think of what Teddy Roosevelt would do, he who sent the great white fleet to show the flag of America around the world, and defying the world, establishing our position as the leading nation in the world, done by this great leader with a great heart and courage who said, "Speak softly, but carry a big stick."

Can you imagine this bewildered and bewhiskered "Infidel" Castro, with the black mattress around his chin, thumbing his nose at my country if Teddy Roosevelt was President? He must turn over in his grave to see things as they are today.

So, Mr. Speaker, from my heart, with great affection through the years for the first great man that I became acquainted with in person, I come today, and I glory in the opportunity that I come to this great forum so many years later, and on the altar of his homeland place this oral wreath to one of the greatest human beings, certainly one of the greatest Americans, that ever lived, who was a young man and a young President and proved that youth and vigor and patriotism today, as always, is pure gold in the leadership of the world.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon I made some remarks and some questions were asked of me about how long Congress might run after our return. And, reference was made to the newspaper statement by the distinguished majority leader of the other body, figuring about 3 weeks, at which time I said any views expressed by him were worthy of profound consideration. But, in connection with the situation, a disturbing piece of information has come to me which, if it is correct, in my opinion, will prolong the session considerably after we come back in August, and that is, in the other body they are trying to change this sugar bill we passed yesterday unanimously by providing for a resolution extending the powers delegated to the President only to the first of the year. And, of course, the present Sugar Act expires December 31 of this year, and that means that a new sugar bill will have to be enacted into law after we come back. Anyone who has had experience with the consideration and passage of a sugar bill knows that this is going to take an awfully long while. I think that the Senate ought to accept the bill that passed the House. It extends the present law for 1 year, and I think it would be most unfortunate, expressing myself mildly, if the Senate were to pass such a resolution. They have the power to do so, but if the House was to concur in the same, I think that that would be most unfortunate, because I would then say that starting August 15, I would not undertake to express an opinion as to when Congress might adjourn with legislation having to be considered with reference to a new sugar act.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. First of all, I was not on the floor when the gentleman spoke earlier, but as I understand, he indicated that he was in agreement that whatever work was needed to be done when we came back could be accomplished before Labor Day.

Mr. McCORMACK. I said I hoped so.

Mr. HALLECK. Well, I would certainly like to express the hope, Mr. Speaker, that if we do have to come back—and it looks like that we must—I cannot see any reason in the world why we could not among ourselves reach some informal agreement that the work of the Congress be completed by September 3, which is the Saturday before Labor Day.

I do not know what the practice as between the other body and this body might indicate as proper, but in view of the fact that the sugar bill, which is of vital importance, came out of the Committee on Agriculture unanimously and was passed by the House of Representatives unanimously, I would join with the majority leader in what he has said, without undertaking to dictate to the other body what they ought to do. Certainly that is within their province. But in view of the circumstances existing not only with respect to our congressional situation, but the situation in the world, I should like to express the hope that they may find their way clear to take the bill as it came from the House, and deal with the matter later on, perhaps, at such time as conditions would indicate was necessary.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, based upon the gentleman's experience, does he agree with me that if this resolution to which we have referred were enacted, it would mean that new legislation would have to be drafted and enacted in August; and from our experience with sugar legislation, that would take a long period of time?

Mr. HALLECK. It certainly should. All the information I have is that the action contemplated is temporary; I am not too certain just what they had in mind, but from what I can understand, I should say the gentleman's conclusion is correct.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATION BILL, 1961

Mr. NORRELL submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2075)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 44 of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 44.

W. F. NORRELL,
MICHAEL J. KIRWAN,
CLARENCE CANNON,
WALT HORAN,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JOHN C. STENNIS,
DENNIS CHAVEZ,
CARL HAYDEN,
LYNDON B. JOHNSON, STYLES BRIDGES,
LEVERETT SALTONSTALL,
GORDON ALLOTT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 44 to the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to such amendment, namely:

RESTORATION OF OLD SENATE CHAMBER AND OLD SUPREME COURT CHAMBER IN THE CAPITOL

Strikes out the item of $400,000 inserted by the Senate.

W. F. NORRELL,
MICHAEL J. KIRWAN,
CLARENCE CANNON,
WALT HORAN,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H.R. 12232) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, the report resolves the one amendment not previously settled. The Senate has receded on the amendment and thereby we have dropped from the bill the $400,000 inserted by the Senate to restore the Old Senate Chamber and the Old Supreme Court Chamber here in the Capitol Building.

Mr. Speaker, with this action, the legislative bill is disposed of.

The pertinent totals are as follows:

Conference total, $129,470,410.

Below budget, $3,943,075.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8665) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital," to provide for the construction of such memorial by the Secretary of the Interior.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 8665, with Mr. ABERNETHY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association was created by law in 1920. In 1931 it acquired what is known as Theodore Roosevelt Island, lying in the Potomac River between Memorial Bridge and Key Bridge, a plot of ground consisting of 88 acres. In 1932 the United States accepted as a gift the island memorial to Theodore Roosevelt. The plan of the memorial, presented in 1937, created a forest which, by controlled growth, would eventually be restored to the natural primeval forest which once covered the island.

In 1955 the construction of a low-level bridge to connect the island with the mainland was authorized. As this would interfere with the forest primeval concept, a revised plan developed to build a structural memorial. At that time the Speaker of the House of Representatives appointed the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEROUNIAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN] as representatives of this Chamber to the Theodore Roosevelt Centennial Commission. A number of other able and respected individuals served on the Commission. According to present-day values the estimated worth of this ground is $3 million-plus.

As the Members know, there is now under construction a low-level bridge extending Constitution Avenue. The footing on the opposite side will be on the southern end of Theodore Roosevelt Island. If this association back in 1931 had not been rather farsighted and acquired this piece of property, I think if it were in the hands of private individuals the Federal Government would have been out a considerable sum of money to place this footing for the bridge on the end of this island, and the bridge would have cost considerably more. Property in that area is most valuable. It is a very conservative estimate to say that it is worth $3 million. It was given to the United States by the association.

This bill, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEROUNIAN], is for the purpose of constructing a structural memorial which is somewhat different in its aspect than the original primeval forest concept which was intended before it was decided that this bridge would be built. I will show you a sketch of the proposed memorial which is called an armillary. I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEROUNIAN] has devoted great effort to the Theodore Roosevelt Centennial Commission. The report of this Commission contains full detail of the memorial and he will be able to explain fully the aesthetics of this memorial to those of you who are interested.

Mr. Chairman, I think the fact that a very unsightly piece of property will be cleaned up is a good reason for this. At first it was intended that the island be landscaped in such a way as to restore its originality. That still is a part of this development. You will have a very beautiful spot that is now rather unattractive.

I will reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman, and the gentlemen who are well informed and interested will have a great deal more to say about this memorial.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEROUNIAN], the author of this bill and member of the Theodore Roosevelt Foundation.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. Mr. Chairman, my particular interest in this bill is obvious. President Theodore Roosevelt had his home in Oyster Bay, Long Island, which is in my congressional district.

The facts here are simple. The bill provides that the Department of the Interior will construct a monument on the island, which, as the gentleman from Texas has pointed out, was donated to the Federal Government by the Theodore Roosevelt Association. This land has been conservatively estimated to be worth between $3 and $5 million. The monument will cost approximately $886,000. It was designed by Architect Eric Gugler with the world renowned Paul Manship as sculptor, and the Landscape Architect Frederick Law Olmstead, now deceased.

The cost of the services of the abovenamed gentlemen were paid by the Theodore Roosevelt Association. As you know, the bridge that has been authorized by the Congress will cross the tip of Theodore Roosevelt Island in Washington. Permission was given by the association for one of the anchors of that bridge to be placed on the island.

I have just talked to Mr. Horn, of the National Park Service, and he advises me that under that authorization there will be a direct sidewalk approach from the bridge to the island. When the design has been approved, under the terms of previous legislation, there will be a passageway for vehicles from the Virginia side to the island. I urge the erection of this memorial to a great American and to a great President.

I am willing to answer any questions that Mr. GROSS may ask.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. Let me ask this question: Is the present bridge being built across the Potomac going to serve this island?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will be presently served by a direct foot pathway from the island to the bridge. However, for vehicular traffic there will be a separate entryway from the Virginia side. This was considered when the 83d Congress authorized the bridge construction.

Mr. GROSS. Then you say there will be another bridge from the Virginia side to the island?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will not be a major bridge. It will be a small bridge for vehicles. This was considered at the time we passed the authorization.

Mr. GROSS. There is a causeway now connecting the island with the Virginia side, is there not?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It is not appropriate for heavy general vehicular traffic.

Mr. GROSS. No; it is a walk, as I understand. Who is going to build the bridge to be constructed?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The National Park Service under a resolution of the 83d Congress.

Mr. GROSS. We have not appropriated any money for it, have we?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. That will come from the Appropriations Committee, pursuant to Public Law 704 of the 83d Congress. That contains the authority necessary for the bridge.

Mr. GROSS. That may be true, but there would be no reason for constructing the bridge, or no substantial reason for constructing the bridge if there were no monument. Is that correct?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The bridge is going to be constructed anyway.

Mr. GROSS. What bridge is going to be constructed.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The bridge for vehicular traffic from the Virginia side. The design for it must be approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association according to legislation passed in the 83d Congress.

Mr. GROSS. The bridge has been authorized after the monument is constructed. Is not the gentleman putting the cart before the horse?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The gentleman was here in the 83d Congress. It was a law passed in that Congress.

Mr. GROSS. I would not be surprised if I voted against it, too. Tell me this, if the gentleman will yield further.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. How is this memorial association supported?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. By private contributions.

Mr. GROSS. They get no funds from the Federal Government?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. No. The others do, however; the Commission of Fine Arts, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Mr. GROSS. They get money from the Federal Government.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. That is right, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, the Commission of Fine Arts, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Theodore Roosevelt Centennial Commission, and the National Park Service have approved the designs for this memorial.

Mr. GROSS. What is it going to cost?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. $886,000.

Mr. GROSS. Without the bridge?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The bridge is already being provided for by other funds and other authorizations, as I have pointed out.

Mr. GROSS. Are you not talking about this bridge that is presently being constructed across the Potomac?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. No; that is already authorized.

Mr. GROSS. But is there another bridge besides the one that is presently under construction across the Potomac?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. There will be a vehicular bridge from the Virginia side. On the site there will be parking space for vehicles of visitors.

Mr. GROSS. On the island or on the Virginia side?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. On the island.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman's time has expired, I will yield him 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield.

Mrs. CHURCH. I assure the gentleman that as one who also knew the late Theodore Roosevelt and walks humbly in his path, I would certainly like to see a fitting memorial to an American without peer. Knowing his virility, his love of life and people, I have been inclined to think that he would prefer a living memorial by which people could be served.

I wonder if the gentleman could tell us something of the symbolism of this memorial. Before we are asked to accept an abstract figure in memory of a very great man, we should know exactly what the symbolism is.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I can only say to the gentlewoman that this has been approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Association and the Theodore Roosevelt Centennial Commission. Herman Hagedorn, an intimate friend of Theodore Roosevelt, and also his famous biographer, has given us his approval of this memorial:

> In the center of this court, facing a wide reflecting pool, the dominating motive is to be what is known in astronomy as an armillary or celestial sphere, some 40 or 50 feet in diameter. This skeletal globe, consisting of three circular bronze bands, having neither beginning nor end, will symbolize infinity both in space and time. On the broadest of these are to be indicated the signs of the zodiac, the ancient symbols of the constellations, leading the mind to the immutable laws governing alike the celestial bodies and the soul of man. The sphere as a whole—open to the sun and moon, the stars, and all the winds of heaven, with bounds suggested but not defined—betokens the free spirit, universal in its nature, timeless in its being, and abiding within the orbit of eternal law.
> From the granite base of the sphere, the Commission explained, would rise, some 10 or 12 feet, "a flame of burnished bronze, representing Theodore Roosevelt's impassioned ardor in behalf of those essentials of popular self-government," of which he was declared to have been the supreme teacher. On the base itself a bas-relief of Theodore Roosevelt will speak to an assemblage stretching beyond any horizon, as he spoke to his countrymen in his own time, and will, we must believe, speak from that place today and in the centuries to come. And not to his own countrymen only—to free men everywhere.

I may say to the gentlewoman that this memorial has been approved by those who are supposed to be experts on fine art. I am not.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to compliment our distinguished colleague from New York on the fine contribution he has made and for his authorship and sponsoring of this legislation on the floor of the House today. It is something which is long overdue. I am familiar with the gentleman's district, I have visited Theodore Roosevelt's home many times which is located in his district. In my own district was the home of the Theodore Roosevelt family. Young Teddy was brought up as a boy in New York City.

Mr. Chairman, it is high time that we establish in the National Capital a lasting monument to this, one of the greatest Presidents the United States ever had; one who is a continuing inspiration to every man in public life, regardless of party.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to pay a tribute to the Theodore Roosevelt Association, of which I am honored to be a member. This is a fine organization and it has done a magnificent job over the years in keeping alive the spirit of Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. Mr. Chairman, may I point out that 21 Members of the House and 5 Senators of both parties have introduced resolutions like mine. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FULTON, had to go to another engagement and asked me to announce that as a member of the Theodore Roosevelt Association, he is wholeheartedly in favor of this bill.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I should like to compliment the work the gentleman has done on this memorial and to say there is no more fitting memorial that could be erected to a greater American. It was Teddy Roosevelt who sent the great white fleet on a peaceful mission around the world. It was Teddy Roosevelt who marched up San Juan Hill.

If we had a Teddy Roosevelt today, he would lead us out of this chaos of communistic encirclement, indecision, and inaction. If Teddy Roosevelt were alive you would see the Marines landing in Cuba, in Panama, and the situation would be well in hand. God knows, we need another one. This monument will be in honor of a great American, and I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HALEY. I concur in the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina as to the greatness of this fine man, and I think an appropriate monument should be erected in his memory.

The gentleman from New York mentioned a little while ago that one of the boards that passed on this was the National Parks Board. May I ask the gentleman if this is the same board that a few months ago, on a bill that we had before a committee of the Congress where we were trying to establish a national memorial at the place where two of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were buried, rendered a report to the committee that the burial place of two signers of the Declaration of Independence was not of sufficient historical significance to establish a memorial?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. I do not know anything about that subject matter.

Mr. HALEY. If it is the same board, I want to say to the gentleman I would have very little confidence in any recommendation that it might make on anything now or in the future.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN], a member of the Theodore Roosevelt Association.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has adequately explained the background of this memorial. My presence in the well at this moment is designed more to underscore the fact that this is a bipartisan endeavor. I have always felt that Teddy Roosevelt was too big a man to be encompassed by a single party. I think we all learned to honor this man as one of America's greatest individuals.

I might say in connection with the association which has dedicated itself to honoring Teddy Roosevelt that they have gone as far as they can with their own means.

Now, when we were observing the centennial of Teddy Roosevelt's birth a year or so ago, there was a bill before the Congress to appropriate a rather substantial sum of money to help celebrate, and that association asked us to stop pressing for that legislation; that they would handle this celebration with their own funds. I think that is a very refreshing change from the attitude of some groups.

Now, as to the design of the memorial, like the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEROUNIAN], I am not an expert in that field, but I have lived long enough to know that architecture and art forms that were one generation's meat are another generation's poison, and some of the things that were thought so wonderful a generation ago, some of our mid-Victorian structures, are now considered monstrosities. I think this is a matter that we have to leave to a great extent to the judgment of people who are experts in this field. I think it is a beautiful design. I think it will attract a great deal of attention. Above all, this is a program for all of us, regardless of party, to honor one of our greatest Presidents.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KYL].

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, Mark Twain once wrote a story in which he described the activities of a bluejay and the subsequent activities of birds which flew from miles around to see the results of the bluejay's efforts. And, I think that I could qualify as the bird in the last sentence of the short story, which was the owl, who did not particularly appreciate what he had finally found, but then he had not particularly admired Yosemite, either, according to Mark Twain. I think if this monument is built, the birds will fly for miles, as the previous speaker has said, to see and ask "What is it?"

But, I do recommend a reading of the report that accompanies this bill, because it is the most beautifully written report we have had this session. I would also recommend a reading of the entire booklet that comes from the association. And, I would add at this point that the people involved in this matter have been diligent; they have been dedicated to a noble cause, and we should do nothing to detract from their efforts.

I had planned to describe the bridge to be built across the river at this point in language similar to that which is used to describe this memorial as planned, but I thought some would interpret that as levity, and my heart was not in it for that reason, because levity would not be in keeping with the tremendous admiration and respect we all feel for Theodore Roosevelt.

I simply want to make this observation, that if this great man we are seeking to memorialize were here today, if Theodore Roosevelt were here to see the debt which hangs over future generations of American citizens, if he were to see the cost of Government, the problems of the United States and the problems of the world, would Theodore Roosevelt today say "The time is not now"?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to thank the gentleman from Iowa for saying some of the things that I probably would have said. I am not here, of course, objecting to a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt whom I, of course, recognize as one of our great Presidents. And, I would do nothing to detract from and I do not want to show any disregard for his memory.

I was impressed, as I am sure all of you were, with the fine oration delivered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FLOOD, and I am sure that he is not alone in his admiration, respect, and reverence for that great American, Theodore Roosevelt. As I contended in committee, I feel that there are a sufficient number of admirers of this great President who would welcome the opportunity to contribute to a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, so that I doubt if many of his friends would want to be associated with the monstrosity that has been projected here. I am opposed to the appropriating of any funds for any more monuments or memorials to anyone and expect to continue to vote that way. On the other hand, as I stated previously, I would be glad to contribute as a private citizen to this memorial or one to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, to Woodrow Wilson, or any other great American for whom such memorials are planned. While I doubt very much that we will be successful, I intend to offer an amendment to this bill providing that there be no Federal contributions or appropriations for it. They speak in terms of some $880,000 odd, but that is only for the memorial itself and does not provide for the bridge we have spoken of.

Next, I would like to say that we have not forgotten Theodore Roosevelt. We have Theodore Roosevelt Island, as has been pointed out, and we are now in the process of building a bridge which will cost I do not know how many million dollars. It is a necessary bridge. It is a utilitarian structure, and it will be called the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial.

I would also like to associate myself with the views of the gentlewoman from Illinois who has suggested that possibly a living memorial would be more appropriate than this monstrosity, which does not represent anything, in my opinion.

I think the money could be utilized in that way.

When the Commission was first created the act stated that there were three fields to which the Commission should give chief consideration. One was to prepare a program for signalizing the 100th anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt, and so forth. That celebration was held here, I believe, in 1958.

The next was to provide for the completion of the development of Theodore Roosevelt Island in the Potomac River. At that time it was understood, I think by most persons, that Theodore Roosevelt Island would be maintained as a sanctuary. At that time they had the cooperation of the National Wildlife Association and other organizations dedicated to preserving this island in its natural state, to preserve the birds and wildlife, and so forth. I think that would be fine, and in accepting this island that had been purchased by the Commission, while it did cost in the neighborhood of $450,000 and is now estimated to be worth some $3 million, the Federal Goverment assumed the obligation of maintaining that island. I think that it should be maintained in its natural state.

The third field to which the Commission was to give consideration was to provide for completion of the development of Theodore Roosevelt Memorial National Park in North Dakota. We have that memorial park as well as many other memorials, as you will find by reading this report. These memorials were constructed to the memory of a great President.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, may I say that I am not opposed to a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt. I am opposed to the appropriation of any funds for the construction of such a memorial. Particularly I would be opposed to making a contribution to the construction of such a monstrosity as we have had illustrated here.

I hope the bill will be recommitted, but first I hope the amendment will be adopted providing there be no money appropriated.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity to say a few words about an individual whom I consider one of the greatest of Americans. I happen to have lived all my life about 5 miles from where Teddy Roosevelt ranched when he spent several years in the early eighties out in the Badlands of western North Dakota.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. (After counting), 114 Members are present, a quorum. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SHORT] has the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, Teddy Roosevelt has always been one of my great heroes. I think he is one of the great Americans of all time.

To my mind, the erection of this memorial to his memory is something we should do. Like others who have spoken, I am not an expert on the sort of structure that should be designed and erected. But certainly if those people who are experts in that field have reached the conclusion that this design is proper, as far as I am concerned, it will suit me.

I sincerely hope this legislation is passed.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, the Teddy Roosevelt Elkhorn Ranch is now a part of the Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Park at Medora, N. Dak., comprising some 50,000 acres, which has been open to tourists for several years. Tourists by the tens of thousands stop there all the time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out the type of individual Teddy Roosevelt was. He came to this western country as a dude, as an easterner, and was looked upon with some degree of suspicion, perhaps, by the natives of the country.

Only a very short time elapsed until he was accepted by them, recognized as being able to outride, outshoot, and outwork almost any of the native people. Certainly his activity in the West and with the famous Rough Riders Cavalry Troop during the Spanish American War indicated the rugged type of individual he was.

In regard to this memorial, Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not profess to be an authority or even a competent critic of the proper kind of memorial that should be erected to any individual, but I just want to read some of the language that is in the committee report in referring to this memorial and have somebody explain to me how I should interpret that language to the people back in North Dakota who have a high regard for Teddy Roosevelt and would like to understand what this memorial depicts. It states:

> In the center of this court, facing a wide reflecting pool, the dominating motive is to be what is known in astronomy as an armillary or celestial sphere, some 40 or 50 feet in diameter. This skeletal globe, consisting of three circular bronze bands, having neither beginning nor end, will symbolize infinity both in space and time. On the broadest of these are to be indicated the signs of the zodiac, the ancient symbols of the constellations, leading the mind to the immutable laws governing alike the celestial bodies and the soul of man. The sphere, as a whole—open to the sun and moon, the stars, and all the winds of heaven, with bounds suggested but not defined—betokens the free spirit, universal in its nature, timeless in its being, and abiding within the orbit of eternal law.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to interpret those words in language that my people back home in North Dakota can understand when they ask me what this memorial that has been erected in Washington to our beloved Theodore Roosevelt means. I think the people of my country and a lot of people in the United States would much prefer a memorial erected to Teddy Roosevelt showing him on horseback, as so many of us visualize him, perhaps carrying over his shoulder a big stick, with which we all are very familiar as depicting the philosophy of Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will take but 2 minutes of the time of my colleagues to remind them that this is the anniversary of San Juan Hill. Sixty-two years ago today, on July 1, 1898, Teddy Roosevelt was at San Juan. I, then a boy just turned 16, was privileged to be there, too, in General Shafter's little line of American soldiers driving through the Spanish defenses to Santiago—62 years old today, 62 years ago almost to this very hour. My friendship with Teddy Roosevelt continued from those campaign days at the storming of Santiago in Cuba, 62 years ago, through the dynamic era of his career and until the termination of his administration as President of the United States. I was with him the last half hour that he was in the White House as President of the United States before his departure for the inauguration of President Taft. I was there because his affection for his comrades who had been with him in Cuba 62 years ago remained with him even when he had reached the high office of President of the United States.

I hope that on this anniversary this bill will not be defeated because there is some controversy as to what constitutes art. A concept of art today may not be that of tomorrow. Today's concept may not be that of yesterday. But somehow, as I looked, somewhat at a distance, at the picture of the proposed monument I did not see that which has caused some of my colleagues to criticize the artistry of the architect. All that my eyes saw was a scenic similarity, something that took me back in memory to 62 years ago today; and the design in the center, which in some eyes was a subject for derision, to me the picture held at a little distance looked for all the world as though it were the blockhouse at San Juan Hill, something that symbolized the virility, the dynamic greatness of Teddy Roosevelt. Words are inadequate vehicles for full expression of the language of the heart and art and architecture attempt to supplement, and our eyes will see in every painting and in every design, not what the painter has put on canvas or the architect in a design, but what experiences and sentiments have built in our own hearts.

I hope that on this 62d anniversary of that July 1 of 1898 when Teddy Roosevelt charged up San Juan Hill we will not be detoured by a controversy about what is art and what is not art. I hope that the bill authorizing a fitting monument to one of the greatest of our Presidents, one who came to the Presidency at the early age of 42 and refired the patriotic dedication of his countrymen in the spirit of the pioneers, will be adopted unanimously.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HALEY].

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the full minute. I, too, want to go ahead here in any project that would pay honor to a great American, I think one of the most lusty men we have had in the White House in the last 100 years. But looking at this memorial which we propose to create here, the best thing I could say about it, Mr. Chairman—and I am for building something to honor this great American—but I will tell you what we are building here; I do not care what you call it or what you think it is, we are merely building a bird roost.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. If you think that is cockeyed you should have seen our display at the World's Fair at Brussels.

Mr. HALEY. There is no use in making two mistakes. Let us stop this thing and build a fitting memorial here to a very great man, rather than something like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all very much in accord on this monstrosity that is presented here, but I think we are also very much in accord with the idea that we should build a fitting monument to one of the great Presidents of the United States, and I might say one of the greatest. I think he is entitled to a better fate, and I hope that what has been said here today will convince somebody who has something to do with this, that this is not the type of memorial that should be erected.

I think it would be very bad to have this resolution defeated. I wish, however, it could be amended or something else done to it to show the disapproval of the House of this design. I do not know how to describe this thing.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BURLESON. I just have to say something in defense of this memorial, the physical part of it.

I do not know anything about it except what the authorities say, and this is not to reflect on the gentleman from Virginia or any of his other colleagues who have expressed dissatisfaction with the design, but people with knowledge of art and sculpture have suggested this. It has been approved by many agencies which have to approve public monuments and buildings in the District of Columbia, including the Fine Arts Commission. It seems to me too much to expect that 437 men could agree here on what should be put up as a monument.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry the gentleman gave me 3 minutes and then used all of it up.

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do know something about some of these memorials that have been erected in Washington, because I happen to have been a member of the congressional Commission that supervised the erection of this very beautiful memorial to Thomas Jefferson down here on the river. We employed the architect, we supervised the design, and I recollect very distinctly that one design of the statue of Thomas Jefferson was such a monstrosity that we unanimously threw it out and had another one made. I wish there could be some congressional commission to look over this thing. When this matter came up to the Rules Committee for a rule my good friend, the gentleman from Texas, presented the picture. Everybody laughed. When the meeting was over and the press came in, some 15 or 20, they wanted to know what had happened. I showed them the picture. Everybody laughed. I do not want to see a memorial to this great man, Theodore Roosevelt, erected here at the Nation's Capital that everybody who comes to Washington and looks at is going to laugh. I do not think that is what we intend here.

May I say in conclusion, sir, that I think to do anything other than pass a resolution for this would be a very sad thing. Therefore I am going to vote for it even if it is going to be a nesting place for all of the starlings in the metropolitan area.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, a reading of the bill before us does not refer to any particular design. It just says that the Secretary of the Interior shall erect on the island there such monument or memorial to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt that may be approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Association, the Commission of Fine Arts, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. Maybe enough has been said here that those organizations that ought to know what they are doing will take a second look at it. It certainly would be a sad commentary if we were to refuse to adopt this bill today to honor the memory of a great American.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. This is the design that has already been approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Commission. It is the one they have approved, and it is the one we have to approve.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not read the bill that way. It would seem to me there cannot be any finality in that regard before the legislation is enacted into law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I have been through some of this with these architects as chairman of the Subcommittee on the State Department having to do with State Department buildings. I have questioned some of their extreme designs. But I find myself, on one of the rare occasions, completely in agreement with the gentleman from Indiana. I am not an expert, I do not know if this is the most suitable design for Theodore Roosevelt or not, but I think we ought to pass the bill. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana and others can have some influence on the people downtown, if they think this is the wrong design.

I would like to point out that you can get all sorts of opinions about a thing like this. The gentleman from Tennessee talked about the building we had at the World's Fair in Brussels. It so happens they took a poll of the people who visited the World's Fair at Brussels, and the American building was the overwhelming winner, as the most beautiful on the grounds, by 75 or 80 percent.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I did not mention the building. I said the displays inside the building.

Mr. HAYS. Of course, there were a lot of displays I did not approve of, either; on the other hand, there were displays that I did approve. If the gentleman from Tennessee had been picking them out, there would be some things I would not like and if I had been picking them out it would be the other way around.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI].

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I as a member of the committee concerned with this monument had not opposed it in the committee. The structure of the memorial got me a little bit, and I was concerned as to what to do about it. I feel like the gentleman from Indiana, in order to get the thing out of the committee and into the House, I supported it. Let us pass it and then go to the Commission and see what we can do to change the architecture.

I respectfully request that we consider this favorably as a monument to a great American that is so admired by not only those who knew him but especially by the youth of America.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Have we not overlooked today the fact that this must be approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Association, a group of people in this country who are dedicated to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt? If they think it is proper, I will go along with them.

Mr. LESINSKI. When an artist does not know how to draw, he starts making figures, and then imagines what it is. That is exactly what this is.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The living daughters of Theodore Roosevelt approve the design as is. I think it is about time that we quit ridiculing the creation by a world's great artist in memory of the great Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee who voted for this legislation, I intend to vote for it today on passage. I do not know of any Member of this body who has a legitimate claim on being an art critic. The figure is recognizable. It looks like a gyroscope, or perhaps it is a statue taken from Rockefeller Center with Prometheus removed from it. But, related to my eyes, since I am not a critic, it might be a yo-yo. But, the fact is that it was carefully considered by people whose business it is to know about these things. I think it is a good design and therefore I do not think it is unreasonable.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote against the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial bill, H.R. 8665.

I want the RECORD to show, however, that I am not opposed to the idea of honoring this great American; on the contrary I believe he should be honored greatly.

Theodore Roosevelt had a great influence on my life. His courage and spirit was the source of much study by this Member. His fight of the great monopolies of his time, his enthusiasm for conservation, his desire to protect our natural resources inspired my early days and encouraged me toward my desire for a life of service to my country. I wish we had another man so concerned with the welfare of the people of America as Teddy Roosevelt was, today.

I want to see him honored every day. In the last few weeks, however, we have been told that we didn't have money enough in the Federal Treasury to take care of our needy, when we have been told we could not give our public servants in the post office a decent wage, when we have been told we cannot properly prepare for our own defense because we cannot afford it, when we have been told that we cannot properly educate our youth because we cannot afford it.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that if these theses are true then surely our great President, Teddy Roosevelt would also feel we couldn't afford to build a stone monument in the middle of a river.

With or without this memorial Teddy Roosevelt will live on in the hearts of all Americans who want to see the tradition of independent action and protection of the underdog in government and in the Nation.

This is his memorial and a great one.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital", approved May 21, 1932 (40 U.S.C. 126), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall erect on Theodore Roosevelt Island such monument or memorial to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, and related structures, as may be approved by the Theodore Roosevelt Association, the Commission of Fine Arts, and the National Capital Planning Commission. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Missouri: On page 2, line 3, strike out all of line 3 after the period and all of lines 4 and 5 and insert the following "Provided, That no Federal funds shall be authorized or appropriated for the construction or erection of such monument or memorial."

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment speaks for itself. They can build anything they want to with private funds. This is just to keep Federal funds from being spent.

Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there has been no money spent by the Federal Government for any plans nor for Theodore Roosevelt Island, which the Government owns in fee simple. The real estate, some 80 acres, which is valued today conservatively at $3 million, was donated to the Federal Government by the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association. That association has spent in excess of $475,000 for the real estate and the small development that has already taken place. So, the Federal Government has property here which realtors would put a value on of about $5 million, which was donated by this memorial association. And, in connection with the construction of the bridge and the development of this area it is now proposed that a suitable memorial should be built.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not also true that the association will spend additional sums in landscaping the entire island and doing a great many things which the $886,000 does not touch, and this is applicable only to the development in the immediate vicinity of the armillary and its immediate environs; is that not true?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. That is correct. The failure to properly develop that island, located as it is, is a disgrace to the Federal Government and a disgrace to the memory of one of the great Presidents of the United States, whom we are undertaking to honor here this afternoon. Unfavorable action upon this amendment would be misconstrued throughout the world. If we ever had a President who was recognized throughout the world as representing the forward spirit and power of America, it was Theodore Roosevelt, and now, in this critical hour, to cast a shadow over the record of that great man would certainly, in my opinion, be unfortunate.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should still like to find out who is going to build the bridge that is necessary to be built to this island.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman have reference to the bridge that is now being built over the Potomac?

Mr. GROSS. No. I wonder how you are going to get from Virginia over to the island.

Mr. BURLESON. There is a temporary structure there at this time, and that was built with funds from this association; at least, I am not sure that anyone else had any funds in it or not. But the bridge, both the foot bridge and the vehicular bridge, will be included in perhaps a part of this $886,000, but that is another one of those items in which we contribute to funds now owned by the association.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman is saying perhaps this will be done and perhaps that will be done. I would just like to know who is going to build the bridge.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I think I can tell you that the cost of that bridge will be in addition to this cost.

You will find from the report that the $886,000 estimate does not include any estimate for the building of the bridge which will have to be done either by the National Park Service or some other agency of the Federal Government. That is another cost that will have to be added.

Mr. GROSS. That is what I thought.

Mr. DEROUNIAN. The bridge is provided for under the Theodore Roosevelt Bridge Act, as it is called.

Mr. GROSS. But the money will come out of the Treasury, no matter where it is authorized or whether it is authorized or unauthorized?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will come out of the Treasury.

Mr. GROSS. Of course it will. But that is not included in this figure before us, as I understand it.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. The authorization for the access to the island was made without regard to the construction of a monument. Whatever is planned will be executed without reference to the monument at all.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this. My sense of aesthetic values was never well developed. I guess I am short on cultural education, too; because, when I look at this thing here, whatever it is, I do not relate it to Teddy Roosevelt riding up San Juan Hill. If they ever put that thing up, I would be looking for a launching pad somewhere around it. I rather imagine that you ought to go down to Cape Canaveral to get someone to come up and mount this. I cannot see in this any monument to Theodore Roosevelt. Two and two do not make four when you talk in terms of Theodore Roosevelt and that crazy thing there.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I hope the remarks that I have made in colloquy with Members will be interpreted exactly as the gentleman has spoken. I do not oppose a monument to a great man like Teddy Roosevelt, but I certainly think that this design that has been shown here on the floor today is inappropriate to the record of this man whom we hope to memorialize in this way.

Mr. GROSS. I will say to the gentleman that this bill ought to go back to the committee. They ought to do their homework on it and bring it back and tell us that this is not the design, that we are going to have something that is truly representative of Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. I am in full agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Missouri) there were—ayes 12, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time now because I could not get anybody to yield to me during the earlier part of this debate.

I agree we should have a memorial, and I point out no matter what the memorial is there will always be somebody who will fight about the design. It is the kind of thing that starts fist fights at Quaker picnics. I do not particularly like it myself. It does not bring to mind the peace of Portsmouth or the Great White Fleet or the charge at San Juan Hill, or the other great happenings in the history and tradition of and love for this man that we have. Nevertheless, it will probably make about half the people happy, anyway.

What bothers me is this: I think the issue is not whether he was a great man or not. The issue is not whether this thing is going to be approved by more than half of the people. What I want to find out, and I ask this of the gentleman from New York, the sponsor of the bill, has to do with these 88 acres on this island where this memorial is going to be put. How are you going to keep the place from becoming a picnic ground, a garbage dump, a lovers lane, or a few other things? What is the provision regarding that particular phase of the memorial which is to be a constant expense and the duty of whoever is supposed to be in charge of it?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. Since the property is owned by the Federal Government in fee simple it will be handled by the National Park Service as are all the other national parks.

Mr. HOSMER. Will the gentleman tell me where on the 88 acres this particular memorial is to be erected?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will be on the right-hand side as you go from Washington to Virginia over the bridge.

Mr. HOSMER. Will it cover the entire 88 acres or a portion thereof, or what?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will not cover the entire area. It will cover the tip where the anchors to the bridge are now standing.

Mr. HOSMER. What will be done in connection with the rest of the island, which, in accordance with my understanding, is supposed to be utilized as a wildlife refuge and a place for people who want to get out in the open?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. That will remain in its wild state.

Mr. HOSMER. Will it be available to people for picnics, people who visit the monument and then want to go out over the rest of the island?

Mr. DEROUNIAN. It will be available on the same basis it is now.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOSMER. I yield.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. After some facetious remarks made about this sketch of the proposed memorial earlier I did a little research. I found that when the Washington Monument was in the process of construction similar disparaging remarks were made about it, that it would be a shaft that did not represent anything. Then I came up to the Lincoln Memorial, and they spoke about its being a pile of granite. Critical and facetious remarks were made about that. As other Members have said, we, at least I am not a competent authority or critic on art, but we have a Fine Arts Commission that is supposed to be competent on that.

Mr. HOSMER. I understand that, but I should like the gentleman to assure me that the space on the island that is not occupied by the bridge and not occupied by the memorial will continue as a wildlife refuge, be continued in its natural state, and be kept in a clean, natural condition.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. It will be, and that authority is vested in the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ABERNETHY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8665) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital" to provide for the construction of such memorial by the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to House Resolution 574, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES of Missouri moves to recommit the bill H.R. 8665 to the Committee on House Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Missouri) there were—ayes 28, noes 125.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 308, not voting 64, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 778. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1961, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1315. An act for the incorporation of the Blue Star Mothers of America, Inc.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11135) entitled "An act to aid in the development of a coordinated system of transportation for the National Capital region; to create a temporary National Capital Transportation Agency; to authorize negotiation to create an interstate agency; and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11389) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office of the President and sundry general government agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R.

11776) entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12231) entitled "An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12232) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961, and for other purposes."

VALIDATING CERTAIN OVERPAYMENTS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 900) to amend section 7 of the act of August 18, 1941, to provide that 75 percent of all moneys derived by the United States from certain recreational activities in connection with lands acquired for flood control and other purposes shall be paid to the State; to validate certain payment; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. POAGE. It is a bill that was on the Consent Calendar last week. At the instance of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] it was passed over, he thinking that it was a bill that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] wanted objected to. The gentleman from Iowa said it was the wrong bill, and he has no objection to passing it.

Mr. GROSS. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the bill?

Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is stating the facts as they exist. I have no objection.

Mr. POAGE. I will explain it.

This bill relates to certain funds, about $8,000, that the Army Engineers paid to three school districts in my district, thinking that it was proper under existing law for them to have a share of revenues collected from licenses on a lake. About 5 years later the Comptroller General held that the payments were erroneously made and has asked for a refund of the payments. The school districts cannot repay them without firing teachers.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The payments were made to individuals?

Mr. POAGE. The payments were made to school districts. The law presently provides that 75 percent of all of the revenues from taxes and fees collected on these lakes shall be paid to the local school districts.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 7 of the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1941, as amended (33 U.S.C., sec. 701c–3) is amended by adding immediately after "hydroelectric power," the following: "and on account of the sale, lease, or rental of boats or the operation of any other recreational activity in connection with such lands,".

SEC. 2. Payments made by the Secretary of the Treasury to a State under authority of section 7 of the Act of August 18, 1941, as amended (33 U.S.C., sec. 701c–3) before the effective date of the first section of this Act which would have been valid if the amendment made by the first section of this Act had been in effect and applicable to such payments, are hereby validated.

SEC. 3. The Comptroller General of the United States, or his designee, shall relieve all certifying and disbursing officers of the United States from accountability or responsibility, for any payment validated by section 2 of this Act, and shall allow credit in the settlement of the accounts of those officers or agents for payments which are found to be free from fraud and collusion.

SEC. 4. The first section of this Act shall take effect July 1, 1959.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That any payments heretofore made by the Secretary of the Treasury to a State in sharing revenues from recreational activities under the authority of section 7 of the Act of August 18, 1941, as amended (55 Stat. 638, 650; 68 Stat. 1248, 1266), except for any that may have been fraudulently obtained, are hereby validated without regard to the source of the funds from which the payments were made.

"SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States, or his designee, shall relieve all certifying and disbursing officers of the United States from accountability or responsibility for any payment validated by section 1 of this Act, and shall allow credit in the settlement of the accounts of those officers or agents for payments which are found to be free from fraud and collusion."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to validate certain overpayments inadvertently made by the United States to several of the States and to relieve certifying and disbursing officers from liability therefrom."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he can give us some information as to the program for tomorrow.

Mr. ALBERT. The majority leader has asked me to announce that tomorrow the first order of business will be the consideration of conference reports. This will be followed by the following bills:

H.R. 10876, land-grant colleges.

H.R. 2467, Chantilly Airport reimbursement.

Senate Joint Resolution 170, NATO, citizen participation.

H.R. 12595, airmail transportation.

H.R. 12622, jurisdiction of U.S. district courts.

H.R. 7201, "Up Stream"—"Down Stream" dams.

H.R. 12552, judgeship bill.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 112, which is the recess resolution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Is this all emergency legislation?

Mr. ALBERT. It is all important legislation, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. ARENDS. Are these items coming up in the order in which they are listed, or will they be changed around?

Mr. ALBERT. It is expected to bring them up more or less in the order in which they are listed.

May I advise the gentleman further that there is no other important business for today, other than unanimous-consent requests.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 589, 86th Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Special Committee To Investigate Campaign Expenditures the following Members of the House: Messrs. DAVIS of Tennessee, JONES of Alabama, O'BRIEN of New York, CRAMER, and DEVINE.

SISTER CAROLINA ET AL.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3524) for the relief of Sister Carolina (Antonietta Vallo), Sister Noemi (Francesca Carbone), Sister Marta (Sabina Guglielmi), Sister Rafaella (Angela Sicolo), Sister Maria Annunziata (Teresa Carbone), and Sister Marisa (Carolina Nutricati) with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "and".

cedes Jauregui-Zabala, Sister Maria Teresa Guijarro-Burro, Sister Begona Perez Caballero-Garay, Sister Maria Pilar Latasa-Loizaga, Sister Felisa Perez-Iturriaga, Sister Immaculada Ochoa de Retana-Guitturrez, Sister Maria Angeles Amunarriz-Aguirre, Sister Sabina Maria Mercedes Irala-Rodriguez, Sister Gregoria Hornes-Ortega, Sister Maria Dolores Mendoza-Negrillo, Sister Mariana Lecumberri-Ardanaz, Sister Libia Anuzita-Zubizarreta, Sister Maria Teresa Arias-Martinez, Sister Ana Maria Puyo-Ochandiano, Sister Ana Maria Basaldua-Giaminde, Sister Maria Teresa Gonzalez-Garcia, and Sister Isabel Prieto-Sanchez".

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act for the relief of certain aliens".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF JACK DARWIN

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 7033) for the relief of Jack Darwin, with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

After line 5, insert:

"SEC. 2. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Adolphe Herstein shall be deemed to have been born in France."

After line 5, insert:

"SEC. 3. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Nicholas Anthony Marcantonakis shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this section of this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Jack Darwin, Adolphe Herstein, and Nicholas Anthony Marcantonakis."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DAISY PONG HI TONG LI

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3076) for the relief of Daisy Pong Hi Tong Li.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what became of the bill I introduced to get those two little girls over here. We passed it here and it has gone over to the Senate.

Mr. WALTER. It is a very meritorious measure. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, and for that reason I am certain the other body will consider it before the recess.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes; that is all right, it is a good bill, but these little girls will be gray-headed before the other body acts to bring them over here.

Mr. WALTER. May I suggest that the gentleman discuss this with the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Every day we have called the clerk of the Judiciary Committee and always they say they are going to get it out, but nothing is ever done about it. I am going to object to these bills unless I can get action on mine. That is the only practical thing to do.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman does not want to object to bills of this sort at this time because it is exactly the type of bill in which he is interested.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes, but I would like to have my bill come along with the others. Everybody admits it is a good bill but they don't do anything about it.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection but I wish the gentleman would speak to somebody over there.

Mr. WALTER. I speak to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee every time I meet him, telling him that we have legislation that should be acted on. I spoke to him about seven or eight bills included in which is the gentleman's bill and was assured it would be included.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I appreciate what the gentleman has done. While I cannot criticize a Member of the other body, still I can think about them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in the administration of the Act of September 11, 1957 (8 U.S.C. 1153; 71 Stat. 642), to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act, and for other purposes, Daisy Pong Hi Tong Li shall be deemed to be within the purview of section 12 of that Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERVERSION OF THE TRUTH

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, the life-and-death struggle in which the forces of freedom are engaged with the world Communist conspiracy is, in large measure, an ideological battle in which the immediate objective is to capture the minds of men. If, as we believe, the cause of freedom embodies the truth, in contrast to the lie of tyranny, then it is of paramount importance that truth itself be an object of dedication by those media which inform the citizenry in our free society.

That the power of the press is great, particularly in the ideological battle with international communism is evidenced by the fact that the Communists devote tremendous sums and energy to the printed word which they spread across the globe.

Except for its liability under the criminal and civil libel laws, a newspaper, under our Constitution, has the right to twist or distort any item of news and to express any opinion or discoloration of fact in its editorials. In other words, in order to maintain freedom of the press, we quite properly accept the possibility and indeed the probability that that freedom will be abused.

As one who has been honored and entrusted for over a quarter of a century with a small fraction of governmental power, I will defend unto the death the right, under our constitutional form of government, and particularly under the Bill of Rights, for any newspaper to report the news and to editorialize in any manner which it sees fit, except for its responsibility under the libel laws.

At the same time I think it is the duty of public officeholders to challenge forthrightly the news accounts and editorials which they deem to be untruthful and which misinform the public, especially on issues of great moment. All too often officeholders cringe from engaging in controversy with a newspaper because of the very power of the press.

I conceive it to be my duty, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this body and as chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, to assert that the Washington Post has, in the recent past, been guilty, not of mere irresponsible or slipshod reporting, not of unintentional misconstruction of the facts—but of the greater sin against the public, that of deliberate perversion of the truth by news accounts, cartoon, and editorials. I further assert that the items which I shall shortly detail, are malicious and that they are inconsistent with any other conclusion than that they are deliberately designed to serve the interest of the international Communist conspiracy.

On May 25, 1960, in an editorial entitled "Dangerous Ideas," the Washington Post attacked the Post Office Department and the U.S. Customs Service because of what the editorial characterizes as the "obnoxious" practice of intercepting Communist propaganda which is being sent into this country in violation of the law in ever-increasing volume. The editorial critically states:

> The current procedure is to impound any material sent from overseas if the Customs Bureau or the Post Office Department supposes it to be Communist propaganda or if it comes from Communist-dominated countries.

The whole tenor of the editorial, which urges the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee to investigate the "practice" is that the Post Office and Bureau of the Customs were engaged in illegal acts so that names of innocent intended recipients could be placed "on some sort of blacklist to be used by future heresy hunters."

The truth of the matter, which is readily available by a phone call to the Post Office Department or the Customs Bureau, or by a quick reference to the law, is that the Foreign Agents Registration Act requires the labeling of any political propaganda which is sent into this country. The law has carefully prescribed criteria as to what is or is not political propaganda. The law is based on the same concepts upon which are founded our food and drug laws, namely, that the recipient or user has a right to know the nature of the article. Irrespective of the wisdom of the law, it is the law and in intercepting Communist propaganda which comes into this country in violation of the law, the officers of the Post Office Department and the Bureau of the Customs only perform their sworn duty.

Taken by itself, this editorial might be construed as only an expression of the judgment of the editorial writer who may have been misinformed or misguided as to the facts. When considered in connection with other items, however, appearing in the Washington Post which I shall discuss, it assumes its place as an integral part of a campaign designed to mislead the reader as to the facts regarding the threat which Communist propaganda poses to this Nation and the efforts which duly constituted governmental agencies, including the House Committee on Un-American Activities, are making to cope with it.

Mr. Speaker, on June 14 I directed the attention of the House to the scurrilous series of articles, which appeared under the byline of Don Oberdorfer and Walter Pincus in the Knight newspapers and which appeared locally in the Washington Post. At that time I pointed out the consistent misrepresentations of those articles which not only attempted to smear the Committee on Un-American Activities because of hotel bills of one or two members which are portrayed as excessive, but which likewise depicted the Committee on Un-American Activities as the sponsor of a "road show" which the committee was said to have conducted from city to city where, according to the articles, the same testimony and the same mail sacks of Communist propaganda were used in repeat performances.

Although the truth regarding both the expense accounts of the committee and the facts regarding the committee's investigation of Communist propaganda in its various facets were repeatedly explained to the press, the Washington Post unleashed one of the worst barrages of distortion and vilification that I have ever witnessed in the public press. In a cartoon by Herblock, the Committee on Un-American Activities, collectively as an entity, is portrayed at a nightclub with all the suggestions of immoral and illegal conduct which the pen could sketch. Liquor at taxpayers' expense is pictured as flowing freely, but charged on expense accounts as "food." The committee collectively is shown in company with a person of obvious immoral character who is being entertained again at taxpayers' expense under the pretense of an investigation. I have been advised, Mr. Speaker, by lawyers who are specialists in libel law that this cartoon constitutes a clear case of libel of every member of the Committee on Un-American Activities and that the cartoon is definitely actionable in the courts.

Even the Washington Post in an editorial, which I shall subsequently discuss, states with reference to my own expenses as chairman of the committee:

> The chairman, Representative FRANCIS E. WALTER, it should be acknowledged, has been pretty Spartan in his habits.

But then I, as chairman of the committee, am stigmatized in the cartoon along with the other members who are collectively represented by a dissipated law violator. May I say in passing, that the Easton Express of my home community, Easton, Pa., reproduced the Herblock cartoon, which went into the homes of lifelong friends of mine whose trust and confidence I have prized above any material thing of this world.

Why did the Washington Post attack collectively the Committee on Un-American Activities as an entity because of expense statements of one or two members which were the subject of adverse comment in the Oberdorfer-Pincus articles? If a committee is to be charged as an entity and the members indicted collectively because expense statements of one or two members are brought into question, why did not a similar pattern prevail with reference to other committees of the Congress on which serve members who likewise were the subject of unfavorable comment in the Oberdorfer-Pincus articles? Could it be that the Washington Post which could not see anything wrong in the traitorous conduct of an Alger Hiss and which has consistently apologized for Communist treachery on American soil, did see an opportunity to strike another blow against the forces of this Government which are coming to grips with the most deadly enemy our Nation has ever faced?

But, let us continue with a consideration of the items appearing in the Washington Post. Coupled with the attack against the Committee on Un-American Activities, on the spurious ground of misuse of public funds, there was featured in the Washington Post the Oberdorfer-Pincus article on the so-called "road show" which was stated to be sponsored by the Committee on Un-American Activities. Remember, the Oberdorfer-Pincus articles were billed as an exposé of high and extravagant living by Congressmen at taxpayers' expense. It was a neat trick of journalistic juggling to train the guns on the committee's investigations of the flood of Communist propaganda coming to this country. In order to keep the theme of excessive expenditures, the articles pursued the line that in its investigations of Communist propaganda the Committee on Un-American Activities heard essentially the same testimony at different areas in the Nation and thereby wasted committee expense money. This theme, of course, gave a pretense of consistency to the attack which ensued against the Committee on Un-American Activities for its investigations of Communist propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Un-American Activities has just reported to the House a bill containing important provisions which plug loopholes in our laws pursuant to which Communist propaganda has been coming to this country in flood proportions. The committee has taken extensive testimony on many aspects of this problem. As chairman of the committee and as the author of the legislation which was reported, I have spent hour after hour in conference with our staff and with experts from the executive departments attempting to evolve effective legislation, and yet to preserve basic civil rights. In its editorial of Friday, June 10, 1960, entitled "Wandering Minstrels," the Washington Post continues with the attack which it launched on May 25, 1960, which was before the Oberdorfer-Pincus articles appeared. In other words, the Washington Post uses the theme of the Oberdorfer-Pincus articles on expense accounts as a vehicle on which to continue its attack against the committee's efforts to protect this Nation against Communist poison.

The "Wandering Minstrels" editorial of June 10 dovetails perfectly with the "Dangerous Ideas" editorial of May 25. Listen to this quotation from the "Wandering Minstrels" editorial:

> Thousands of persons to whom mail happened to be addressed from Iron Curtain countries now have their names in those bulging catchall files of the HUAC.

Speaking again of the Committee on Un-American Activities as a collective entity, the editorial continues:

> It is more than time now to ring down a final curtain on this fraud—on its padded expense accounts, its phony posturings and its contempt for the elementary rights of American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Committee on Un-American Activities must accept as an occupational hazard the continuous abuse by the Communist press and by Communist sympathizers. It is my studied judgment that the press which is not controlled by identified members of the Communist Party, but which does the dirty work of the Communist Party, is more dangerous to the security of our Nation than the Communist press, because it masquerades behind a facade of independence and impartiality. The best example of this type of press is the Washington Post.

HON. RICHARD W. HOFFMAN

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, well-deserved tribute to one of our former colleagues in the Congress is forthcoming, and I take this brief time of the Members of the House to bring it to your attention. I do so because I know that many of you here knew this distinguished gentleman well during the four terms he served with you as my predecessor and Representative of the 10th Congressional District of Illinois until his voluntary retirement in 1956. The Honorable Richard W. Hoffman is the gentleman to whom I refer, and I am proud to have him as one of my esteemed constituents.

Time does not permit me to review the many achievements of his service to his community, State and Nation. Most of you are familiar, I am sure, with his work as a Member of this body. I would be remiss, however, if I did not review briefly his tremendous contribution to the system of secondary education in my home district in Illinois.

The Honorable Richard W. Hoffman served as president of the board of the J. Sterling Morton High School for many years. The records of few men who have served in similar capacities rival the achievement of those directed by Mr. Hoffman in his tenure of office prior to his election to the U.S. Congress. Under his guidance the J. Sterling Morton High School, one of the top 10 secondary educational institutions in the country, made tremendous progress in the academic field. Efficiencies in the general administration of this institution were effected and have today provided the people of this district, and particularly the youth, a better education per tax dollar expended.

Under unanimous consent, I insert at this point in the RECORD excerpts from an editorial which appeared in the Life newspapers, published in my district, which so aptly portrays the public service record of former Congressman Hoffman. Certainly this merits the forthcoming honor to be bestowed upon him by the board of education in naming the new J. Sterling Morton High School stadium and athletic field after this outstanding citizen and public servant.

Like a substitute who is sent into a game in the closing minutes to lead a last desperate rally, Hoffman literally and figuratively pulled up Morton by its own bootstraps in the depths of the depression in 1933 when he started his first term on the high school board.

From his wealth of experience as a successful businessman, Hoffman eliminated some 135 payrollers. With the school district's credit exhausted, Hoffman showed his resourcefulness by going empty-handed to the Western Electric Co. where he obtained a sizable and unsecured loan so that the high school could remain open and its teachers could be paid.

He won respect for himself and the school by his obvious sincerity and his responsibility, plunging into the complex problems and emerging with winning solutions at great personal financial sacrifice to himself and to his own expanding business.

At the end of his first term in 1936, Hoffman found it necessary to devote more time to his personal business affairs—but he never lost his interest in Morton High School.

When 1939 rolled around, Morton's affairs had degenerated into even worse shape than was the case in 1933. Our community was embarrassed by nationwide unfavorable publicity from school strikes, and low teacher and student morale.

Teachers and other employees were being paid in scrip, which was being discounted as much as 50 percent by insiders in the high school picture.

The sad state of affairs at Morton was documented in a bill of particulars drawn up and approved by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the accrediting agency responsible for approval of high school and college educational standards.

Only strong protestations prevented Morton from being ousted by the association. A year's probation, however, was voted with a provision for reinstatement if Morton cleaned up its mess within a year.

Urged by scores of true Morton friends, Hoffman agreed to be a candidate. The rest is history. During the next three terms, until he was elected to Congress as the 10th District's first Representative, Hoffman gave unsparingly of his time, his efforts, and his resourcefulness to make Morton the outstanding institution it is today—free of political domination, respected by educators everywhere, a leader in the educational field, and in sound financial condition.

What better tribute could there be for a man—and who would be more deserving—than for the Morton High School Board of Education to name the stadium for Richard W. Hoffman, whose ever-increasing majorities at the school election polls demonstrated the feelings of the people in the district for his efforts on their behalf.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my extension of remarks appearing in the RECORD of June 22, 1960, entitled "Declaration of Principles" may be expunged from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SUGAR QUOTAS

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker on rollcall No. 170 I was unavoidably absent as I had accepted an invitation to attend a dinner for the President of the United States.

This bill, H.R. 12311, gives the President discretionary power to regulate sugar quotas. I had already expressed myself publicly on this issue several times. I discussed the matter when it came up in the Foreign Affairs Committee and stated at that time that in view of the present Cuban situation I felt this legislation should be passed.

ADDRESS BY UNDER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY FRED C. SCRIBNER

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, each Member of Congress has received a memorandum dated June 14 from a Democratic Congressman purporting to show that the Eisenhower administration had collected more taxes than other administrations. I respectfully suggest that the statistics were presented out of context, and I would like to call the attention of the Congress to that missing context which puts these figures in a rather different light.

It is not the Republicans but the Democrats who have taxed the American citizen most heavily. In 1946, President Truman's first full year of office, taxes took 24 percent of the national income. In the last full year of his administration, 1952, he was taking just as much, 24 cents out of every dollar we earned.

In the last full year of President Eisenhower's administration, 1960, the Federal budget will take only 19 percent of the U.S. national income or a substantial one-fourth reduction in the Federal tax bite.

Furthermore when Mr. Eisenhower took office he immediately had the Treasury undertake the long overdue overhaul of Federal tax legislation which was embodied in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and resulted in a tax reduction of $7.4 billion, unparalleled in any other single year in the country's history.

President Eisenhower's administration has accomplished this feat in spite of reckless Democrat spending legislation, which every year seeks more and more money. The President's budget for fiscal 1961 called for a surplus of $4.2 billion. The Democratic controlled Congress has attempted by action or inaction to change this multibillion-dollar surplus into a deficit for the year and would add $17½ billion over the next 5 years. While increasing the spending the Democrat Congress has refused the President's request for much needed postal rate increases, air and highway fuel taxes which together would amount to an estimated $6¼ billion in the next 5 years.

The sound Eisenhower budget seems to be forgotten. It should not be. I believe the Democrats forget that they are shattering the hopes of millions of taxpayers for another tax reduction and further needed tax reform.

In a splendid address to the New York chapter of the Tax Executives Institute, Under Secretary of the Treasury Fred Scribner outlined the truly impressive record of the Republican administration in the tax field. He states clearly that the purpose of his administration's tax policy is overall tax reduction. He warns that we must maintain integrity in going about it by resisting special-interest tax loopholes. In speaking of a general tax reduction, he says:

There is no mystery as to how such a step can be achieved. In the first place, we must be operating under a balanced budget. In the second place, we will need a sufficient surplus to make a reduction on our outstanding debt and to project further debt reductions in future years. Finally, we will need a sufficient additional surplus to allow us to propose an overall tax cut. Such a proposal would require sufficient surpluses for several of the years as we look down the road. To bring ourselves into this situation, we need, of course, economy at the Federal level. We need support from all sections of our country, from all taxpayers for an incentive that rigid economy be practiced within the Federal Government. It can be done.

I believe the Congress should have the benefit of this address, and include a summary at this point in the RECORD:

EXCERPTS FROM REMARKS BY FRED C. SCRIBNER, JR., UNDER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, AT THE ANNUAL MAY DINNER OF THE NEW YORK CHAPTER OF THE TAX EXECUTIVES INSTITUTE, NEW YORK CITY, MAY 12, 1960

Since 1953 we have seen far-reaching changes in the Federal tax system. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 constituted the first complete overhaul of Federal tax legislation in many years. There were also other important tax changes in 1954. That year's tax reductions were of a size unparalleled in any other single year in the country's history. Annual reductions totaled $7.4 billion.

The structural changes made by the 1954 Code accounted for $1.4 billion, elimination of the excess profits tax $2 billion, reductions in excise taxes $1 billion, reduction in individual income tax rates $3 billion. In addition to the cut of $3 billion in individual taxes flowing from rate reductions, individuals shared in the savings from the excise tax reductions and in the benefits provided by the structural changes in the system. Of the total of $7.4 billion of annual tax savings, approximately $4.6 billion went to individuals and $2.8 billion to corporations.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

The significant tax relief which has been provided during the past 7½-year period tends to be obscured by the overall increase in Federal net budget receipts, which have increased from $64.8 billion in 1953 to more than $78 billion for the current fiscal year and to an estimated $84 billion for fiscal 1961. Revenue from growth in the economy has not only offset the large amount of tax reductions but provided nearly $20 billion increase in budget receipts as well. Individual income tax collections, for example, will have risen from $30 billion in 1953 to over $40 billion for the current year and to an estimated $44 billion in 1961 despite tax rate reductions and numerous other relief provisions.

We in the tax field and you in business are, of course, trying to gage today where the economy will go during the remainder of this calendar year and what the prospects are for 1961. The economic outlook for the 1960's is encouraging indeed. Our budget projection of the economy for this year reflected a favorable outlook. In January of this year the Secretary of the Treasury said that a gross national product of $510 billion could be reasonably projected for the year 1960 compared with a $480 billion total for the calendar year 1959. The projection, given at that time for personal income for the calendar year was $402 billion compared with $380 billion in 1959. Our projection of corporate profits of $51 billion for 1960 compared with a $48 billion figure for 1959.

When these income assumptions for budget purposes were established we were well aware that the projected levels were somewhat less than those being forecast by some business commentators. We believed, however, that some of these forecasts were overly exuberant and could not be realized unless inflated by rising prices. In recent weeks some people have been concerned about mixed economic indicators. To a considerable extent their concern seems to reflect a prudent tempering of their earlier views. Also recent figures on final consumer demand and employment suggest that some phases of economic activity were affected temporarily, and to an unusual degree, by severe weather in February and March.

If both Government and private citizens act responsibly, we are confident that final results will approximate the income assumptions underlying the budget and that substantial gains in economic activity, incomes and profits will be realized. Personal income has continued to rise each month to record levels and corporate profits have remained high. Total employment surged upward by 1.9 million between mid-March and mid-April, the biggest April increase by far in the postwar period. In April retail sales rose to record levels, 3 percent above March and 5 percent above last April.

Yesterday the President announced that in the first quarter of this year the gross national product reached $500.2 billion and thus passed the half-trillion-dollar mark for the first time in our history. This figure represents a dramatic increase of $20 billion over the previous quarter. The President noted: "The achievement of these high levels of employment and production at the same time that prices had been reasonably stable * * * is proof of the great strength of the free-enterprise system and the promise of the future."

The Government's fiscal outlook is also good. We are working vigorously for a balance for the current fiscal year and confidently expect a substantial surplus for fiscal 1961.

These developments in both the private and Government sectors evidence excellent prospects in the 1960's for a good and sustainable rate of economic growth without inflation.

TAX REVISION UNDER THE 1954 CODE

Returning to structural changes, let me remind you that the revision of the 1954 Code made tax burdens easier and fairer for millions of individual taxpayers and reduced tax barriers to long-term economic growth.

A few of the many relief provisions for individuals were the following:

(1) Larger deductions for medical expenses by allowing expenses in excess of 3 percent of adjusted gross income instead of 5 percent and by doubling the maximum dollar limits.

(2) A new deduction for child care expenses of working women and widowers.

(3) Taxpayers no longer lose the dependency exemption when a child's earnings exceed $600.

(4) Elimination of the requirement that a taxpayer's dependent parent live in the taxpayer's home.

(5) A retirement income credit which helped to equalize the tax treatment of retirement income.

(6) Partial relief from double taxation of dividends through the dividends-received credit and exclusion.

(7) Larger deductions for charitable contributions; the limit allowed was increased from 20 to 30 percent of income where the extra 10 percent is contributed to educational institutions, hospitals, or churches.

(8) More liberal tax treatment of employee benefits.

A number of provisions in the new code were designed to reduce tax deterrents to the expansion of investment. One of the most constructive steps was a new and more realistic treatment of depreciation to which I will refer later.

Other steps which contribute to the growth and increasing efficiency of American business include: allowing taxpayers the option to deduct research and experimental expenditures or to capitalize them and write them off over a period of not less than 5 years; extending the period of carryback of losses, thus providing, in combination with the 5-year carryforward, a total span of 8 years for absorbing a loss; and permitting certain partnerships and proprietorships to be taxed as corporations.

Substantial relief for small business was provided by the Small Business Tax Revision Act of 1958 (which was incorporated in the Technical Amendments Act of 1958), including: more liberal loss deductions in certain cases involving small business corporations, further extension of the net operating loss carryback, more liberal depreciation allowances, more time to pay estate taxes attributable to investment in closely held business enterprises, and an increase in the amount of earnings that a small business may accumulate without being subject to the tax on improper accumulation of surplus. In addition a new subschapter S of the code was enacted as part of the Technical Amendments Act of 1958. It permits certain small business corporations with not more than 10 shareholders to forego payment of the corporate income tax where shareholders elect to be taxed directly on the corporation's earnings. This provision was designed to aid small businesses by permitting them to select the form of legal organization which best suited their needs without the necessity of taking into account major differences in tax consequences. It benefits a small corporate business in various ways, including the removal of the double tax on corporate earnings going to shareholders.

CURRENT TAX PROBLEMS

You may be interested in a brief report concerning certain current tax problems now before the Congress.

As you know, the President has urged an amendment to the Internal Revenue Code which would treat the gain on the sale of depreciable personal property as ordinary income, to the extent of the depreciation deduction previously taken on the property. The present rules permit net gain from the sale of depreciable personal property to be considered as a capital gain, while net losses are deductible as ordinary losses.

This proposed amendment was submitted because of the many difficulties which business and the Internal Revenue Service have encountered in determining the proper amount of salvage value which should be given to various items of depreciable property and the even more difficult question of determining the useful life of a particular item of machinery or equipment.

At this point I believe a general review of recent developments in the field of depreciation might be helpful. As I mentioned earlier, substantial progress was made in the depreciation reform introduced under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The double-declining balance and the sum-of-the-years digits methods provided by the 1954 legislation concentrated deductions in the early years of service life and resulted in a timing of allowances more in accord with the actual pattern of loss of economic usefulness. As compared with the older, more rigid straight-line approach, the new liberalized methods permit a tax-free recovery of about one-half the cost of an asset during one-third of the service life and about two-thirds of the cost over the first half of the life. These more liberal depreciation methods have made a significant contribution in encouraging modernization and expansion of the productive capacity, with resulting increases in efficiency and the strength of the economy.

In the field of administrative policies, the Treasury has continued its efforts toward a realistic application of the statute. Since the issuance of Revenue Rulings 90 and 91 in 1953, it has been the policy of the Internal Revenue Service not to disturb depreciation deductions unless there is a clear and convincing basis for change. In Revenue Ruling 91, revenue agents were instructed in determining depreciation rates to consider carefully evidence presented by taxpayers with respect to obsolescence.

As you know, in its attempt to recognize fully industry experience and to minimize areas of conflict, the Service has determined that a reissuance of a revised Bulletin "F" without the securing of further material from the field would not be advantageous. A pretest survey was conducted last year. This survey showed that the great bulk of all new property installations installed by taxpayers since 1954 are being depreciated under new liberalized methods. Comparison of the service life and depreciation rates used by the large companies with Bulletin "F" disclosed some service lives longer and a number of others substantially shorter than Bulletin "F" standards. It was then determined to undertake a survey to obtain additional general statistical information on current practices and present opinions on depreciation. This survey is being conducted in cooperation with Small Business Administration to insure coverage of both large and small firms. A number of business and professional organizations were consulted on the planning and developing of the survey. The great majority of these organizations indicated their support for such a study.

We will not be in a position in the Treasury to make recommendations concerning basic changes in depreciation allowances until this survey is completed and the results carefully analyzed. This is many months away.

During the interim, it was our belief that we should attempt to make it possible for our agents to accept more readily business judgments as to the usable life of depreciable property. The big stumbling block has been, as I have pointed out, that it is now possible to depreciate an item of equipment or machinery taking the amount of depreciation as ordinary loss, thereafter disposition of the property for more than its depreciated value and to take the resulting gain as a capital gain. This effectively shifts income from a 52 percent bracket to a 25 percent bracket.

The recommended legislation would be an important step in the direction of both fairness and simplification. It would eliminate friction between the Service and taxpayers in areas where reasonable men may differ and where the resolution of differences would be possible except for the extraneous factor of capital gain treatment.

We have not received support of business and industry on this recommendation. The matter is now on the table at the Ways and Means Committee and there is no evidence that action is to be taken this year. This, I believe, is unfortunate, as the steps here proposed would have been helpful to business. As a result of nonaction we have lost a chance to do something which would have been constructive in the depreciation field.

H.R. 5 AND RELATED MATTERS

With respect to the taxation of income from foreign investments, the Boggs bill (H.R. 5) is still making its way through the Congress. The most recent development has been the announcement by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that the committee has amended the bill to accord with the position of the administration that any preferential treatment to promote investment abroad should be confined to investment in underdeveloped countries. As it now stands the bill provides that a U.S. corporation may qualify as a foreign business corporation if, in addition to meeting other requirements, it derives 90 percent or more of its gross income from sources within less-developed countries. The determination of what is a less-developed country is not a simple matter and under the bill it is left to the President to decide. However, the bill does enumerate a number of countries, in addition to the Sino-Soviet bloc, which cannot fall within such a designation.

The committee made two other amendments to the bill. One was to eliminate the so-called gross-up provision in connection with the foreign tax credit of a foreign business corporation. Since the modification of the existing tax credit provisions to require a gross-up for other corporations is the subject of separate bills pending before the committee, it decided to consider the gross-up requirement for foreign business corporations in connection with such other bills. Under H.R. 5 as it now stands, therefore, a foreign business corporation would obtain a foreign tax credit under the same conditions that apply to other types of corporations. The other change in H.R. 5 adopted by the committee would disqualify a corporation from its foreign business corporation status for any year in which it, or one of its subsidiaries, operated in a less-developed country with labor conditions below those prevailing in that country. The determination of whether a company has so operated would be made by the Department of Labor, subject to review by the courts.

The introduction of labor standards into a tax bill is a departure from past practice, and seems to pose potentially serious administrative problems. Similar problems may be expected of the requirement in the bill that a foreign business corporation may not derive more than 10 percent of its income from the sale of goods which are for ultimate use, consumption or disposition in the United States. The tracing of goods sold abroad to their ultimate destination is hardly a simple matter and the language in the bill may be expected to produce considerable litigation. Despite these difficulties, the Treasury has announced its support of the Boggs bill as amended.

To add to this roundup I would mention that the Senate Finance Committee has agreed to report out, with some amendments, the House-passed bill that would add the overall limitation to the foreign tax credit as an alternative to the present per-country limitation.

The interest that has been manifested in H.R. 5 and in other tax matters relating to international transactions has had its repercussions on the structure of the Internal Revenue Service. As many of you know, an International Operations Division was created in the National Office of the Service several years ago. This Division was assigned tax collection and enforcement responsibilities affecting domestic taxpayers with foreign investments and foreign taxpayers with income from domestic sources. The Division has recently stepped up its activities and, as its experience in this field increases and develops, it is bound to make an important contribution to the maintenance of an effective tax collection agency.

PROSPECTS FOR TAX REDUCTION

I am sure I will find no disagreement in this audience with the proposition that overall tax reduction should be the purpose of present tax policy within the Federal Government. We do need a broad base tax cut which would benefit all taxpayers. We must recognize, however, that broad tax cuts will involve substantial amounts of revenue.

There is no mystery as to how such a step can be achieved. In the first place, we must be operating under a balanced budget. In the second place, we will need a sufficient surplus to make a reduction on our outstanding debt and to project further debt reductions in future years. Finally, we will need a sufficient additional surplus to allow us to propose an overall tax cut. Such a proposal would require sufficient surpluses for several of the years as we look down the road. To bring ourselves into this situation we need, of course, economy at the Federal level. We need support from all sections of our country, from all taxpayers for an incentive that rigid economy be practiced within the Federal Government. It can be done.

I take pride in reporting that on January 1 of this year we had 13,000 fewer civilian employees in the Treasury Department than on January 1, 1953. This reduction has been accomplished in spite of substantial increases in most of the workloads which our Treasury bureaus carry.

We must have adequate finances on the Federal level to provide for our defenses and to carry out all programs which can best be undertaken by a central government. Beyond this, economy should be the watchword.

We will need something else however if we are to reach the point soon where a broad base tax cut is practical. We must resist the many small tax cuts proposed for some special segment of the American economy or for some particular group of taxpayers—individual or corporate.

Piecemeal reduction of excises which has occurred since 1954, for example, has resulted in the loss of more than three-quarters of a billion dollars.

The admissions tax which yielded $313 million in 1953 and $106 million in 1955 (after the 1954 rate and exemption changes) is now yielding only $35 million as a result of subsequent changes. The repeal of the tax on transportation of property and oil by pipeline in 1958 reduced revenues about $500 million annually. The reduction in the cabaret tax, effective this month, will cut its yield by about $20 million a year. Important relief for farmers resulted from the provision in 1956 for refund of tax on gasoline used on the farm. In 1959 these refunds totaled almost $80 million. These reductions mean that we are more than three-quarters of a billion dollars further away from the time when a general tax cut may be proposed.

If the scheduled reductions in the excise tax rates on transportation of persons and the scheduled repeal of the tax on local telephone service which were enacted by the last session of the Congress were allowed to stand, annual revenues would be reduced by approximately $600 million. We hope and expect, however, that the Congress will postpone these reductions, in accordance with the President's recommendation.

In the income tax area, as well, there are pressures for chipping away at the tax base by providing a little relief here and a little relief there to particular groups, individual or corporate, rather than providing overall tax reduction. Hundreds of bills now pending in the Congress propose exclusions, deductions, and exemptions for the benefit of restricted groups.

We in the Treasury believe that except in the most unusual cases involving gross inequities, we can best work for a comprehensive tax reduction by vigorously opposing special legislation which will give tax relief to only a few or only in limited situations. This is not an easy posture to be in. It can only be effective if we do have support of the taxpayers of the Nation. We do need an understanding that we can best improve our tax system by resisting for a time relatively small piecemeal cuts and bringing our fiscal picture into such shape that a tax cut program which will give relief to individuals and provide tax incentives to business can be supported and brought into existence.

Neither in the Congress nor at the Treasury should we for a moment take our eyes from this ultimate goal. I do believe that some of our taxpayers, particularly in the corporate field, have concluded that general tax reduction is probably too far away and that emphasis should now be placed on special limited legislation. I, personally, think this approach is wrong. I am convinced that we can and will have a general tax cut if we can secure an understanding by the majority of our taxpayers and voters that such a tax cut will come only after we have determined to practice sound economy in operation and to resist special legislation which, by reducing the tax take, can only postpone the day of final accomplishment when a general tax cut becomes effective.

Fiscal responsibility may not be glamorous, but it is the keystone to prosperity and a sound economy. Reckless Democratic innuendo such as that mentioned at the opening of my remarks, implying excessive Republican taxation, is in the same category as the "big lie" technique—if you make a lie big enough and repeat it often enough it may be believed. Whereas the tax burden in the last 7 years has actually been lightened, by quoting statistics out of proper context, some Democrats would try to delude the public into believing just the opposite. Where the President cries for fiscal responsibility, they would buy the people's votes with the people's own money and then charge waste.

The story of this administration's struggle and, yes, considerable success, should be told and told again.

In spite of continuous harassment, the President with the support of the Republicans and a few thinking Democrats in Congress, has brought about fiscal integrity, a balanced budget and substantial tax cuts. It is a great achievement. And when the facts are known through the length and breadth of this land, those who spread falsehood about the President's achievement will be treated with the contempt they deserve.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. OSMERS] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 9996 has as its purpose a change in the procedures which permit foreign excess properties which are disposed of overseas to enter the United States for sale. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to H.R. 9996 primarily for the reason that no Member here today has been able to prove that there exists any real need for this legislation. Several statements have been made with respect to the viewpoints of affected industries. In order to clarify the position of two industries, I would like to place in the RECORD at this point a paragraph from a letter dated June 22, 1960, received by me from Joseph T. King, Esq., Washington counsel for the Associated Equipment Distributors. Mr. King's letter states:

> Industries, including ours, object to the bill because the language "undue loss of production or employment" is so vague that the Secretary of Commerce could not make a determination of the impact of any given quantity of goods brought back into the United States until after the damage was done. For an industry to prove or for the Secretary of Commerce to determine that the importation of 10, 100, or 1,000 units would result in an "undue loss of production or employment" in the particular industry is an impossibility. Assuming all other economic factors to be constant, such a fact could only be determined after production or employment has been affected.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to place in the RECORD a paragraph from another letter, dated June 17, 1960, received by me from Henry Lavin, chairman of the legislative committee of the Electronic Representatives Association. Mr. Lavin says:

> We cannot help but feel that H.R. 9996, in any form, will needlessly compound the difficulties already caused by domestically generated surplus, to say nothing of the impact of goods made by Japanese and other foreign manufacturers. Beyond this, we are compelled to doubt the ability of the Department of Commerce to determine in advance, whether or not a given shipment of surplus merchandise will cause undue loss of production and/or employment, even in a specific industry. Certainly economic damage can be measured once it occurs, but an advance determination of such harm seems to us to be a difficult task at best.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply not in the best interest of American industry and labor and should not be adopted.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the Teddy Roosevelt Memorial bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE ROAD PROGRAM ENDANGERED—OPPONENTS WAGE PROPAGANDA WAR TO DISCREDIT IT

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, the highway program has been under attack from many quarters in the past few months.

Since writers, newspapers, and magazines generally feel that stories of waste, inefficiency, and corruption make better copy than do success and accomplishments, we have had from all over the country a series of intemperate articles dealing with mistakes and shortcomings of the highway program. Little if anything has been said about its fine and tremendous accomplishments in the face of many almost insurmountable roadblocks.

As a result, many people, including Members of Congress, are getting the impression that this entire, vitally needed road program is riddled with inefficiency and fraud.

As I have said many times, when you have a program of this magnitude, the biggest public works project in the history of the world, one that is 35 times as big as the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Panama Canal, and the Grand Coulee Dam combined—a program involving the expenditure of billions of dollars and millions of people both in and out of government at all levels—you are bound to attract the chiselers and the grafters.

If this highway program is to survive and public confidence in it be maintained, we must keep its shortcomings in proper perspective with the magnitude of the undertaking and its thousands of fine accomplishments.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the Cincinnati Enquirer and its outstanding publisher, Mr. Roger Ferger, and Mr. Phillip Swatek, its capable, informed, and discerning Washington correspondent, have rendered a great public service by devoting a full page of the July 3 edition to the fairest and most objective analysis of the current highway problems and controversies.

Every Member of the Congress and all those interested in the continuance and successful completion of this vitally needed program should read and study this article and have the benefit of Mr. Swatek's presentation of the various issues:

INTERSTATE ROAD PROGRAM ENDANGERED—OPPONENTS WAGE PROPAGANDA WAR TO DISCREDIT IT

(By Philip M. Swatek)

WASHINGTON, July 2.—A swelling propaganda barrage of distortions, half-truths, and plainly dishonest generalizations is threatening to sink the biggest and most important public works project ever attempted in this or any other country—the Interstate Highway System.
